1981 Amendment: Inserted "or mobile home, and all appurtenances" after "dwelling house"; inserted "if any" after "and the land".

Case Notes

Property Selected as Homestead:

Where the owner of two contiguous tracts of agricultural land, upon each of which there was a dwelling house, worked the land as a unit through a tenant, the owner sometimes residing in the one house and sometimes in the other according to whether the one or the other was occupied by the tenant, the fact of such tenancy did not bar the owner of the right to select the lands as a homestead. Oregon Mtg. Co., Ltd. v. Dunbar, 87 M 603, 289 P 559 (1930).

A homestead may be claimed upon an undivided interest in land. Wall v. Duggan, 76 M 239, 245 P 953 (1926).

Case Notes

Increased Homestead Exemption Held Retroactive: Where the plaintiff filed a homestead declaration after a deficiency judgment had been obtained against her and then brought a declaratory judgment action to determine the retroactive application of an amendment to the homestead exemption statutes allowing the filing of a declaration after judgment, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in ruling that the amendment did not apply retroactively to the plaintiff. The Supreme Court held that the amendment would have a retroactive effect under the rationale of Harlem v. St. Highway Comm'n, 149 M 281, 425 P2d 718 (1967), because it impaired a right (the right of execution acquired under existing law). While there was no express declaration that the amendment apply retroactively to judgments obtained prior to the effective date of the amendment (October 1, 1981), the Supreme Court was guided by the maxim of law requiring a liberal application of the homestead exemption in favor of the homestead claimant and held that the amendment was intended to apply retroactively. Neel v. First Fed. S&L Ass'n, 207 M 376, 675 P2d 96, 41 St. Rep. 18 (1984).

Land Used for Agricultural Purposes: Lands used by a homestead claimant for grazing horses fall within the provision of this section, that homesteads may comprise land "used for agricultural purposes", the fact that the animals were not used for tilling the soil being immaterial. De Fontenay v. Childs, 93 M 480, 19 P2d 650 (1933).

Excessive Area:

The validity of a homestead declaration was not affected by the fact that declarant included 10 acres of farmland in the total of 160 acres selected, which 10 acres he did not own; not having exceeded the limitation prescribed by statute, the declaration was good as to the remaining 150 acres. Oregon Mtg. Co., Ltd. v. Dunbar, 87 M 603, 289 P 559 (1930).

Held, under the above rule, that a declaration of homestead covering "an undivided one-half interest and equity" in a 240-acre agricultural tract was void as an attempt to claim as exempt an area greater in quantity than 160 acres allowed by this section (prior to the 1931 amendment increasing the exemption to 320 acres). McCarthy v. Kelley, 63 M 233, 206 P 782 (1922).

While failure to accurately set forth in a homestead declaration the value of the premises does not invalidate it, failure to strictly comply with the requirement that the area claimed must not exceed the statutory limit renders the declaration void. McCarthy v. Kelley, 63 M 233, 206 P 782 (1922).

Where a declaration of homestead inadvertently included one-sixth more land than allowed, the whole claim was invalid. Yerrick v. Higgins, 22 M 502, 57 P 95 (1899).

Location of Parcels of Land in Homestead: Conceding, without deciding, that where an agricultural homestead consists of more than one parcel of land, the parcels selected must be contiguous (this section being silent on the subject), where two tracts cornered with each other and were used as one farm, they were contiguous, and a declaration of homestead was not open to the objection of noncontiguity. Oregon Mtg. Co., Ltd. v. Dunbar, 87 M 603, 289 P 559 (1930).

Conflicts: There is no conflict between the provisions of this section and 70-32-106. Mitchell v. McCormick, 22 M 249, 56 P 216 (1899).

Necessity for Actual Occupation: Actual occupancy of the land claimed as a homestead is necessary in order to exempt it from sale on execution. Power v. Burd, 18 M 22, 43 P 1094 (1896).

Homestead in Partnership Property:

A partner is entitled, as against the creditors of the firm, to claim and hold a homestead in the partnership estate. Ferguson v. Speith, 13 M 487, 34 P 1020 (1893).

When a creditor of a partnership has attached real estate belonging to such partnership, the members of the firm cannot, by mutual releases, destroy the nature of the property or of the tenancy so that either one of them can annul the lien of attachment by claiming a part of the land as a homestead. Lindley v. Davis, 6 M 453, 13 P 118 (1887), overruled in Lindley v. Davis, 7 M 206, 14 P 717 (1887). See Ferguson v. Speith, 13 M 487, 34 P 1020 (1893).

Homestead in Land Held in Cotenancy: A cotenant is entitled to a homestead in real estate held in cotenancy. Lindley v. Davis, 7 M 206, 14 P 717 (1887), overruling Lindley v. Davis, 6 M 453, 13 P 118 (1887); Ferguson v. Speith, 13 M 487, 34 P 1020 (1893).

Case Notes

Debtor Allowed to Trace Proceeds From Sale of Debtor's Home Even if Homestead Declaration Not Filed Prior to Sale: A homestead declaration is not invalidated simply because the declaration does not reflect the possibility that the debtor may no longer reside on a premises that may be claimed as a homestead. If the homestead is otherwise eligible for exemption under 70-32-216, a debtor may trace proceeds from the sale of the homestead even though a declaration was not filed prior to the sale. In re Snyder, 2006 MT 308, 335 M 11, 149 P3d 26 (2006).

Defect in Property Description — No Invalidation of Homestead Exemption: Where a Writ of Execution was obtained against the plaintiff's home after she and her husband filed a homestead exemption for the property, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred, in a declaratory judgment action brought by the plaintiff, in holding that a misdescription of homestead made the exemption invalid. The Supreme Court examined the purpose of including a real property description in a homestead declaration and followed the rationale of prior Montana Supreme Court opinions concerning the use and construction of the homestead declaration and held that a misdescription of "town or townsite" as "first addition" did not void the declaration, especially since the defendant knew where the homestead was located and knew it was the subject of a homestead declaration. Neel v. First Fed. S&L Ass'n, 207 M 376, 675 P2d 96, 41 St. Rep. 18 (1984).

Sufficiency of Declaration:

A declaration of homestead stating that the declarant "is the head of a family" was sufficient as against the contention that under this section (prior to 1981 amendment) it was incumbent upon declarant to state the facts showing that she was such head as defined by 70-32-102 (repealed in 1981). Esterly v. Broadway Garage Co., 87 M 64, 285 P 172 (1930).

A declaration of homestead is valid and effective, though the estimated cash value (required by this section prior to the 1981 amendment) is far in excess of the limit fixed in the statute, provided it contains the other statements required; but, as to area, the premises described must fall within the statutory limit, otherwise the declaration is ineffective to exempt the property claimed. Yerrick v. Higgins, 22 M 502, 57 P 95 (1899), modifying Mitchell v. McCormick, 22 M 249, 56 P 216 (1899).

The requirements of the statute by which a homestead exemption right becomes fixed are mandatory and must be complied with. Yerrick v. Higgins, 22 M 502, 57 P 95 (1899).

The declaration of homestead must (prior to the 1981 amendment of this section) have contained the estimated value, not the statutory value. Mitchell v. McCormick, 22 M 249, 56 P 216 (1899).

Under an admission that property in controversy is a homestead and has been set apart as provided by law, it cannot be objected that the homesteader did not allege its statutory value in the declaration of homestead. Mitchell v. McCormick, 22 M 249, 56 P 216 (1899).

Value:

The homestead consists of the real property described in the declaration, although its value exceeds $2,500 (increased by later amendments). Vincent v. Vineyard, 24 M 207, 61 P 131 (1900).

Where a declaration of homestead was filed, the homestead attribute was impressed on all the property described in the declaration, although its value exceeded the sum of $2,500 (increased by later amendments). Vincent v. Vineyard, 24 M 207, 61 P 131 (1900).

Conflicts: There was no conflict between the provisions of this section and 70-32-104. Mitchell v. McCormick, 22 M 249, 56 P 216 (1899).

Part 2
Homestead Exemption — Execution

Part Case Notes

"Repealed" Homestead Exemption Acknowledgment of Notice Requirement Incorporated Into Trust Indenture Governs Present Action: Plaintiff borrowed money to refinance a loan and delivered to the mortgage company a trust indenture encumbering the property. The mortgage company failed prior to closing to secure the statutorily required acknowledgment of notice from the plaintiff that the property that was otherwise qualified for the homestead exemption was not exempt from execution or forced sale. After the mortgage company assigned the deed of trust, defendant Chase Bank attempted to foreclose through a trustee sale when the plaintiff defaulted on the note, claiming that repeal of the acknowledgment of notice statute resulted in the law no longer being part of the original contract entered into with the mortgage company. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court decision, ruling that the acknowledgment of notice provision was incorporated into the trust indenture and continued to govern the action despite its subsequent repeal. Statutory provisions in existence at the time that a contract is entered into become a part of the contract. Section 70-32-221 (now repealed) was not limited to those transactions between a lender and a borrower in which the homestead declarations were preexisting, but extended to transactions in which the borrower's property qualified for the exemption even if the borrower had not filed the declaration. Because the mortgage company failed to comply with the statute, the deed became void ab initio and unenforceable by Chase Bank, its subsequent holder. Earls v. Chase Bank of Tex., 2002 MT 249, 312 M 147, 59 P3d 364 (2002).

Judgment Lien Against Husband's Property Not Supportive of Execution Against Interests of Second Wife and Children — Property Subject to Prior Judgments Only: Following dissolution of his marriage, Ken Jones purchased real property in 1986. In May 1987, he executed a homestead declaration on the property pursuant to 70-32-105. In July 1987, he conveyed the property by quitclaim deed, with one-half interest to himself and one-half to his second wife and their two daughters in equal shares. In January 1988, his second wife also filed a declaration of homestead. Also in 1988, Ken declared bankruptcy. As a result of that filing, a dissolution decree property settlement provision that he pay certain sums to his first wife Rita was redesignated as a maintenance obligation. Ken appealed that order, and while the appeal was pending, Ken and his second wife conveyed the real property to Poindexter. Rita executed upon one-half of the sale proceeds, which Poindexter had withheld to satisfy Ken's past-due maintenance and support, but $2,113.53 remained due on the underlying judgment. Rita moved for an order of sale of the property so that she could recover the remaining maintenance plus her attorney fees. The District Court determined that Ken's homestead exemption was abandoned when he sold the property to Poindexter and that because Rita's judgment liens had never been removed or extinguished, the liens attached and encumbered the property at the time the homestead exemption was abandoned and thus the property was conveyed to Poindexter subject to the liens and the execution order. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed because: (1) Rita had already executed on Ken's half of the sale proceeds and further execution would be against the interests of the second wife and daughters and was therefore unsupported; and (2) the maintenance payments became due and judgments were entered after Ken sold the property. Under 70-21-306, a purchaser takes property subject only to prior judgments; therefore, execution was inappropriate on the property for judgments entered after Poindexter's purchase. In re Marriage of Jones v. Poindexter, 253 M 408, 833 P2d 1044, 49 St. Rep. 501 (1992).

Judgment as Judicial Lien Against Homestead Property — Lien Not Discharged in Bankruptcy: In September 1980, respondent obtained and docketed a judgment against appellants. In May 1981, appellants filed a joint declaration of homestead covering their residence. In August 1981, appellants filed a joint Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition. In December 1981, appellants obtained a personal discharge in bankruptcy. In January 1982, respondent obtained a Writ of Execution and notice of sale and levy upon appellants' residence. Appellants then filed suit against respondent, alleging that respondent's judgment had been voided by the discharge in bankruptcy. The Supreme Court ruled that docketing of the judgment under 25-9-301 had created a judicial lien, that because the appellants had not sought avoidance of respondent's lien in the bankruptcy proceedings, the lien survived the discharge in bankruptcy, and that the lien can be enforced under 70-32-203. Reichert v. Koch, 202 M 167, 655 P2d 993, 40 St. Rep. 8 (1983).

Nonjoinder by Wife: Where a wife does not join in a homestead declaration on property owned by them as tenants in common, the exemption from attachment or execution does not attach to her interest. Isom v. Larson, 78 M 395, 255 P 1049 (1927).

Declaration After Attachment: The filing of a homestead declaration after a Writ of Attachment had been levied upon the land exempts the land from sale on execution obtained after the declaration was filed. Wall v. Duggan, 76 M 239, 245 P 953 (1926).

Case Notes

Waiving Right to Homestead Exemption: The defendant used his home as security for an appeal in a civil case in lieu of a supersedeas bond. In the court documents relating to the security for the appeal, the defendant specifically agreed to not file for a homestead exemption on the property. Subsequently, the defendant filed for a homestead exemption. The Supreme Court ruled that although no specific provision of the homestead laws would allow the plaintiff to have the homestead exemption invalidated, the defendant had specifically waived any right he had to the homestead exemption. Amundson v. Wortman, 244 M 103, 796 P2d 205, 47 St. Rep. 1427 (1990).

Homestead Subject to Execution — Debt Secured by Vendor's Lien: Plaintiff's property on which a homestead was filed was subject to execution based on a judgment for attorney fees as it was on a debt secured by a vendor's lien. The terms of the contract for deed that was in issue gave the defendants a vendor's lien. The contract provided for attorney fees to the prevailing party in any suit on the contract. The contract was considered as a unit, and therefore the vendor's lien applied to the attorney fees as well as the contract purchase price. Krone v. McCann, 219 M 353, 711 P2d 1367, 43 St. Rep. 5 (1986).

Foreclosure on Mortgage on Residence: In an action by a bank to foreclose a trust indenture secured by the mortgagor's residence and separate commercial property, the sale of the residence before the commercial property was upheld when the debtor did not exercise her right to determine the order of the sale. In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court ruled that it is a proper election for a debtor at the time of sale to demand a specific order in which separate parcels are to be sold. When the debtor acquiesced in the order of the sale, deferring to the discretionary authority of the trustee and allowing her residence to be sold first, the order of the sale will be upheld. First Nat'l Bank v. Powell, 212 M 468, 689 P2d 255, 41 St. Rep. 1870 (1984).

Homestead Declaration Filed After Judgment — Bankruptcy Proceedings: A homestead declaration, even though filed 5 months after judgment, avoids the state District Court judgment lien against real property in a bankruptcy action. AMFAC Mechanical Supply Co. v. Kelly, 39 St. Rep. 135 (U.S. Bankruptcy Ct., D.C. Mont. 1982) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Mortgage of Homestead:

Where a mortgage was "executed and recorded before the declaration of homestead was filed for record", as required by this section, but had lost its validity by lapse of time as a security and ceased to be a mortgage or lien under 71-1-210, held, that although the note which the mortgage was given to secure was still alive and a money judgment obtained on the note, the homestead was not subject to execution or forced sale to satisfy such judgment because the mortgage was outlawed and the debt therefore not "secured" by it when the judgment on the note was entered. Siuru v. Sell, 108 M 438, 91 P2d 411 (1939).

A homestead can be had in lands belonging to the United States. All the improvements upon the land, including fences, belong to the homestead and cannot be taken by a creditor. Where a mortgage was given upon the homestead property by the husband, who afterward abandoned his wife, and the latter had not joined in the execution of the instrument, she was entitled to be protected in the enjoyment of the mortgaged premises as against the mortgagee seeking to foreclose the mortgage. Watterson v. E. L. Bonner Co., 19 M 554, 48 P 1108 (1897).

A mortgage of a homestead was void and not subject to foreclosure, unless executed by the husband and wife, and the acknowledgment by the wife was an essential part of the execution. The abandonment of the homestead did not make valid a past mortgage which was void ab initio. Am. S&L v. Burghardt, 19 M 323, 48 P 391 (1897).

Loans for Purchase of Homestead: In an action to quiet title to land claimed by plaintiff as a homestead, defendant judgment creditor asserted that he had advanced the money for the purchase of the property and that under the doctrine of subrogation he had a vendor's lien upon the premises which entitled him to subject the land to sale on execution. However, in the absence of evidence that the money was loaned for the purpose of purchasing the homestead, the claim of vendor's lien may not be upheld, even though the money was actually used for that purpose. De Fontenay v. Childs, 93 M 480, 19 P2d 650 (1933).

Waiver of Exemptions: While advance general waivers of the exemption laws are void as contravening public policy, where a homestead claimant mortgages it with full knowledge of his rights and of the consequences of a relinquishment of his rights to withhold the specific property from forced sale, he waives his exemption if the statutory restrictions in this section and 70-32-301 are complied with. U.S. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Stevens, 93 M 11, 17 P2d 62 (1932).

Filing of Declaration After Levy of Attachment:

The exemption statute which, by failing to include a homestead subject to attachment within the exceptions to the general rule that a homestead is exempt from execution, in effect declares that the lien of an attachment does not operate to defeat a homestead declaration, enters into and constitutes a part of a contract of sale of goods; therefore, to uphold a homestead declaration filed after the seller had caused an attachment to be levied on the land sought to be homesteaded by the buyer would not destroy a vested right secured to him by the lien. Wall v. Duggan, 76 M 239, 245 P 953 (1926).

The filing of a homestead declaration after a Writ of Attachment had been levied upon the land exempts the land from sale on execution obtained after the declaration was filed. Wall v. Duggan, 76 M 239, 245 P 953 (1926).

Liens Against Homesteads:

A judgment docketed in 1892 was not a lien on the homestead subject to execution under this section, and a mortgage of the homestead given in 1895 took precedence over such judgment. Vincent v. Vineyard, 24 M 207, 61 P 131 (1900).

A homestead is not exempt from foreclosure and sale to satisfy a lien for materials used by the owner in the improvement thereof, such lien being a "mechanics' lien" within the meaning of a statute providing that the exemption of homesteads from forced sale shall not affect any laborers' or mechanics' lien. (Mechanics' lien provisions repealed, 1987—see construction liens, Title 71, ch. 3, part 5.) Bonner v. Minnier, 13 M 269, 34 P 30 (1893).

A homestead is subject to the lien of a mechanic for material, as well as labor, where the material is the object of the labor for which he claims his lien. (Mechanics' lien provisions repealed, 1987—see construction liens, Title 71, ch. 3, part 5.) Merrigan v. English, 9 M 113, 22 P 454 (1889). See Bonner v. Minnier, 13 M 269, 34 P 30 (1893).

Execution Against Excess Value: Judgments not constituting liens cannot be enforced under this section, but after notice to the claimant and a report of the appraisers that the value of the homestead exceeds $2,000 and that the property can be divided without material injury, execution can be enforced against such excess; if, however, the property cannot be divided, a sale will be ordered and the execution paid from the excess above that amount. Homestead Property Not Asset Subject to Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act: Gribble took out at least four loans with the credit union and defaulted on most if not all of them. The loans were secured with large equipment, not real property. The credit union filed a complaint seeking repayment and the right to foreclose on the collateral. Gribble transferred his residential real property to another party by quitclaim deed 11 days later. The credit union asked the District Court to set aside the transfer under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act (UFTA), but instead the court granted summary judgment to defendant, and the credit union appealed. The Supreme Court held that because the real property was Gribble's residence, it qualified as a homestead that would generally be exempt under nonbankruptcy law and thus was not an asset for purposes of the UFTA. The District Court was affirmed. McCone County Fed. Credit Union v. Gribble, 2009 MT 290, 352 M 254, 216 P3d 206 (2009).

Debtor Allowed to Trace Proceeds From Sale of Debtor's Home Even if Homestead Declaration Not Filed Prior to Sale: A homestead declaration is not invalidated simply because the declaration does not reflect the possibility that the debtor may no longer reside on a premises that may be claimed as a homestead. If the homestead is otherwise eligible for exemption under this section, a debtor may trace proceeds from the sale of the homestead even though a declaration was not filed prior to the sale. In re Snyder, 2006 MT 308, 335 M 11, 149 P3d 26 (2006).

Part 3
Conveyance, Encumbrance, and Abandonment of Homestead

70-32-301. How conveyed or encumbered — instrument.

Case Notes

Mortgage of Homestead: While courts have held that advance general waivers in executory contracts of the exemption laws are void as contravening public policy, where a homestead claimant, with full knowledge of his rights in the premises and of the consequences of a relinquishment of his rights to withhold the specific property from forced sale, mortgages it, he waives his exemption if the statutory restrictions found in 70-32-202 and this section are complied with. U.S. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Stevens, 93 M 11, 17 P2d 62 (1932).

70-32-302. How abandoned — declaration.

Case Notes

Alienation of Homestead: In the absence of legislation to that effect, alienation of a homestead granted to a surviving wife does not constitute an abandonment of it. Kerlee v. Smith, 46 M 19, 124 P 777 (1912).

CHAPTER 33
MONTANA RESIDENTIAL MOBILE HOME LOT RENTAL ACT

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Effective Date: This chapter is effective October 1, 2007.

Chapter Case Notes

Fire Protection Services Not Required of Mobile Home Court Owners: Appellant claimed that the owners of a mobile home court violated The Montana Residential Landlord and Tenant Act of 1977 (similar to The Montana Residential Mobile Home Lot Rental Act) by failing to provide fire protection services. While 70-24-303 requires all common areas to be kept in a clean and safe condition and 70-24-105 extends the principles of law and equity relating to safety and fire prevention to the Act, absent the existence between the parties of any contractual obligation to provide fire protection services and absent proof of a statutory or common-law duty to provide those services, the complaint was properly dismissed. Rookhuizen v. Blain's Mobile Home Court, Inc., 236 M 7, 767 P2d 1331, 46 St. Rep. 139 (1989).

Part 3
Rights and Duties of Parties

70-33-314. Resident associations — meetings.

TITLE 71
MORTGAGES, PLEDGES, AND LIENS

CHAPTER 1
MORTGAGES

Chapter Case Notes

Fruitless Usurious Demand — Mortgage Agreement Not Usurious: A fruitless demand for unlawful usurious interest, made after default on a mortgage, does not make the mortgage agreement usurious when the mortgage agreement properly interpreted does not require a usurious result. Hanson v. Bonner, 202 M 505, 661 P2d 421, 40 St. Rep. 245 (1983).

Mortgage as Lien, Not Conveyance: Montana is a "lien" state, and a mortgage of itself does not convey any title in mortgaged property to the mortgagee. Hanson v. Bonner, 202 M 505, 661 P2d 421, 40 St. Rep. 245 (1983).

71-1-101. Definition.

Case Notes

Contract for Deed Not Same Legal Concept as Mortgage: Although certain similarities exist between the two, a contract for deed is not the same legal concept as a mortgage under Montana law. Therefore, a contract for deed need not be treated as a mortgage for purposes of foreclosure. Aveco Properties, Inc. v. Nicholson, 229 M 417, 747 P2d 1358, 44 St. Rep. 2098 (1987). See also Burgess v. Shiplet, 230 M 387, 750 P2d 460, 45 St. Rep. 293 (1988).

Time of Mortgage Payments — Where Contract Silent as to Time of Day: According to the terms of the mortgage, monthly payments were to be made no later than 30 days after due date or mortgagor could be declared in default. Mortgagor deposited payment in escrow account after 3 p.m. on the 30th day, a Friday. Because of the time of the deposit, the escrow account was not credited until the 33rd day, the following Monday. The District Court ruled that the mortgage contract had not been breached since contract provided simply for deposit by 30th day and did not require that deposit be made by a particular time of day. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that for the District Court to have found in mortgagee's favor, it would have had to rewrite the contract, and this would have been improper. First Bank-Southside Missoula v. Sadler, 199 M 323, 649 P2d 454, 39 St. Rep. 1428 (1982).

Insufficient Description of Property Hypothecated: The description of personal property covered by a chattel mortgage, to be good as against subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers, must be sufficiently definite that a third person may, from the language of the mortgage and the information gained from the inquiry suggested by it, determine with certainty what property was intended to be included. A description by number of species or class, such as "873 head of sheep" in a certain county, owned by the mortgagor but not stating in whose possession the unmarked animals were, was insufficient, and title on foreclosure sale was a nullity as against a subsequent encumbrancer. Walker v. Johnson, 108 M 398, 91 P2d 406 (1939).

Lien Character of Mortgages:

In this state a mortgage does not pass title but creates a lien upon the property as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of an act. Thus, whenever a statute refers to a "lien" upon either real or personal property, that reference must be construed to include a mortgage, unless the contrary intention is expressed. Barth v. Ely, 85 M 310, 278 P 1002 (1929). See also Jones v. Hall, 90 M 69, 300 P 232 (1931).

Under the statutes of the territory and state, a mortgage has never possessed any of the characteristics of a sale; it has been considered a mere lien, fixed on property by contract of the parties, to secure the payment of a particular obligation or the performance of a particular act. Davidson v. Wampler, 29 M 61, 74 P 82 (1903).

Farm Lease Clause: A contract for the cultivation of farm land on shares by the terms of which the landowner reserves title in himself to the lessee's share as security for advances made by him to the lessee is in legal effect a chattel mortgage. As such, it is subject to the provisions of the chattel mortgage statute with reference to execution and filing. Crone v. Occident Elev. Co., 70 M 211, 224 P 659 (1924).

Retention of Title by Seller — No Lien for Attachment: Where property is sold under a contract providing that title shall remain in the seller until the purchase price is paid, the seller does not have a mortgage or lien upon the property within the attachment statute. State ex rel. Malin-Yates Co. v. Justice of Peace Court, 51 M 133, 149 P 709 (1915).

Assignment of Mortgage With Debt: A mortgage is a conveyance within the meaning of the recording laws of this state, though it is a conveyance of a chattel interest only. Title to it passes to an assignee by assignment of the debt or obligation secured by it, because the mortgage is but an incident, a security, and has no assignable quality independent of the debt. Further, assignment of a mortgage without the underlying obligation is a nullity. Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4 (1905).

Mortgage Not to Create Estate in Real Property: A mortgage itself does not create or alienate an estate in real property, but is a mere security for the payment of a debt or the discharge of an obligation. A mortgage is a conveyance of only a chattel interest. Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4 (1905); Mueller v. Renkes, 31 M 100, 77 P 512 (1904); Swain v. McMillan, 30 M 433, 76 P 943 (1904); Wilson v. Pickering, 28 M 435, 72 P 821 (1903); Hull v. Diehl, 21 M 71, 52 P 782 (1898); State ex rel. Cruse Sav. Bank v. Gilliam, 18 M 94, 44 P 394, 45 P 661 (1896); Holland v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 15 M 460, 39 P 575 (1895); Gallatin County v. Beattie, 3 M 173 (1878).

71-1-103. Mortgage a special lien — on what a lien.

Case Notes

Mortgagor Contracts That Property May Be Sold to Satisfy Debt: A mortgagor contracts, either expressly or by implication, that the mortgaged property may be sold to satisfy his debt. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

Applies to Both Real and Chattel Mortgages: This section applies to both real estate and chattel mortgages. Demers v. Graham, 36 M 402, 93 P 268 (1907). See also State ex rel. Cont. Supply Co. v. Tullock, 68 M 268, 217 P 348 (1923).

Increase: A chattel mortgage upon cows in which no mention was made of their increase did not cover their calves that were in gestation at the time of the execution of the mortgage but that were born prior to foreclosure. Demers v. Graham, 36 M 402, 93 P 268 (1907).

71-1-104. Mortgage not a personal obligation.

Case Notes

Deficiency Judgment: In this case the note was made a part of the mortgage, so the mortgagors expressly agreed to pay the mortgage debt. But in any event, this section must be read in connection with 71-1-222, which expressly authorizes a deficiency judgment in the event the proceeds from the sale of the mortgaged property are insufficient to pay the debts and costs. In other words, although the mortgagor does not assume a primary personal liability, he is held to a contingent liability, the contingency being the failure of the mortgaged property to sell for a sum sufficient to discharge the debt and costs. Kinyon Inv. Co. v. Belmont St. Bank, 69 M 282, 221 P 286 (1923).

71-1-105. Mortgagee not entitled to possession.

Case Notes

Action for Possession: A chattel mortgagee, who is entitled to the immediate possession of personal property under the terms of the mortgage when he considers it essential to the security of the payment of the debt secured, has a sufficient interest or right to maintain an action in conversion or for claim and delivery and will not be considered a trespasser, wrongdoer, or stranger as against the one in possession of the property. Walker v. Johnson, 108 M 398, 91 P2d 406 (1939).

Possession by Third Person: Under a clause in a chattel mortgage entitling the mortgagee to take immediate possession of the chattels mortgaged if such action is essential to the security of the payment of the debt secured, the fact that the mortgagee finds the property in the possession of a third person under a personal claim of right is alone sufficient to warrant taking immediate possession. Walker v. Johnson, 108 M 398, 91 P2d 406 (1939).

Contract for Possession Upon Condition:

A mortgagor of real property, by the terms of the mortgage, may grant to the mortgagee the right to possession upon the happening of a contingency, and after possession has been so obtained it may be held until the debt is paid. U.S. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Stevens, 93 M 11, 17 P2d 62 (1932).

Under this section, the parties to a real estate mortgage may incorporate therein a stipulation for immediate possession by the mortgagee in case of default by the mortgagor, notwithstanding that 71-1-229 provides that the purchaser at a foreclosure sale is not entitled to possession during the period of redemption if the mortgagor personally occupies the premises as a home for himself and family. Kelly v. Roberts, 93 M 106, 17 P2d 65 (1932).

Under the rules for the interpretation of contracts, when the parties to a real estate mortgage had contracted that upon the mortgagor's default the mortgagee could at his option declare the entire indebtedness due and payable without notice, foreclose by judicial proceedings, or sell the premises according to law, and should be entitled to immediate possession and the receipt of the rents, issues, and profits thereof, the mortgagee was entitled to possession upon condition broken without foreclosure and sale. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Jensen, 74 M 70, 237 P 518 (1925).

Possession in Absence of Agreement:

In the absence of an express stipulation in a farm mortgage entitling the mortgagee to the possession of the mortgaged property, either before or after the mortgagor's default, the mortgagee was not entitled to possession until sale to him on foreclosure proceedings. Neither was the mortgagee entitled to rents prior to the foreclosure since a notice to the mortgagor's tenant that the mortgagee claimed the rent was ineffectual as a means of acquiring an interest in the crop. Long v. W. P. Devereux Co., 87 M 198, 286 P 402 (1930).

In the absence of an express agreement between the parties to a mortgage that upon default on the part of the mortgagor the mortgagee shall have the right to enter and take possession, such right does not exist. Sharp Bros., Inc. v. Bartlett, 76 M 415, 248 P 199 (1926).

Intervention in Ejectment: In an action for ejectment, the mortgagee may intervene if he can show either an interest in the subject matter of the action or an interest in the success of either of the parties. Stack v. Coyle, 59 M 444, 197 P 747 (1921).

71-1-106. Waste prohibited.

Case Notes

Mortgagee's Right to Assert, on Mortgagee's Behalf, Mortgagor's Contract and Tort Claims for Damage to Property: The mortgagee alleged that the engineering firm hired by the mortgagor knowingly laid improper pipe in the land, resulting in the state's disapproval of the pipe. The mortgagee could not sue the engineering firm for breach of contract and for breach of professional duty owed to the mortgagor under the theory that the mortgagee was a direct creditor of the mortgagor and was entitled to execute on any asset of the mortgagor and that the contract and breach of professional duty claims were assets. The mortgagee would have to be a judgment creditor of the mortgagor with a claim against the mortgagor that had been reduced to judgment before the mortgagee could sue the engineering firm for breach of the firm's contract with and professional duty to the mortgagor. Turner v. Kerin & Associates, 283 M 117, 938 P2d 1368, 54 St. Rep. 522 (1997).

Mortgagee's Right to Sue Mortgagor and Third Party for Impairment of Security Interest — Suit by Mortgagee Acquiring Security Interest After Damage by Third Party: A mortgagee can sue a mortgagor for actions or inactions that impair the mortgagee's security interest. The mortgagee can also sue a third party for damage to the property that impairs the security interest. In this case, a mortgagee who acquired mortgages from a prior mortgagee could sue a third party in tort for impairment of the security interest caused by damage to the property that occurred while the prior mortgagee held the mortgages. Allowable damages are the extent of the outstanding debt. The third party was an engineering firm alleged to have knowingly laid improper pipe in a subdivision. The state refused to approve the pipe. Turner v. Kerin & Associates, 283 M 117, 938 P2d 1368, 54 St. Rep. 522 (1997).

Lien Follows Removed Property: When a real estate mortgage is given, it constitutes a pledge of all that then is part of the realty. Thus, while the mortgagor has the right to use the premises, he has no right to remove a building therefrom or do any other act which impairs the mortgagee's security. If the mortgagor removes a building from the property without the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee, the mortgage lien on that building is not extinguished. Mills v. Pope, 90 M 569, 4 P2d 485 (1931).

71-1-107. Transfers of interest.

Case Notes

Transaction Neither Sale nor Mortgage — No Security Interest Created: Plaintiff purchased a ranch on behalf of defendant with defendant's money but put title to the ranch in plaintiff's name and operated the ranch for defendant. The parties subsequently executed documents to settle the dispute between them concerning the ranch property, including plaintiff's quitclaim deed of the property to defendant. Since the transaction did not involve either a sale or mortgage of the property, plaintiff did not hold a security interest in the ranch. O'Connor v. Lewis, 238 M 270, 776 P2d 1228, 46 St. Rep. 1260 (1989).

Mortgage Terminated by Quitclaim Deed — Foreclosure Procedure Not Required: Plaintiff, d/b/a Starhaven Ranch, Ltd., purchased a ranch on a contract for deed from Crofts. Crofts had purchased the land on a contract basis from Clarnos. Crofts assigned their purchasers' interest in the contract to defendant. Crofts defaulted on a contract provision requiring them to obtain grazing permits and on their contract with Clarnos. Starhaven fell in default on its final downpayment. Crofts fell in default on the loan with defendant. The bank recorded the quitclaim deed from Crofts. The bank asserted it succeeded to the rights of the Croft-Starhaven contract and took action against Starhaven. Crofts disappeared. Starhaven made payment on the Clarno-Croft contract to prevent Clarnos from declaring a forfeiture. The bank asserted absolute ownership rights against Starhaven. The bank obtained the quitclaim deed Starhaven had executed to Crofts and recorded it. The bank then sent Starhaven a notice to vacate, triggering the proceedings. The trial court held the bank had succeeded to all Crofts' interest in the property when it obtained and recorded the assignment. The court then concluded the bank could assert the default provisions of the Croft-Starhaven contract and was entitled to forfeiture. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the assignment as collateral for a loan created a security interest only—in this case a mortgage—and mortgage foreclosure proceedings were the proper method for the bank to pursue its remedies. On rehearing, the court upheld the trial court, finding that the mortgagors waived their right to foreclosure proceedings by filing a quitclaim deed to defendant bank. Waiver of the right to foreclosure includes consent to the possession of the mortgagee and the waiver of the equity of redemption. The bank was entitled under the Croft-Starhaven contract to require Starhaven's forfeiture upon defaulting on the contract payments, and Starhaven was not entitled to foreclosure proceedings. Erickson v. First Nat'l Bank, 215 M 350, 697 P2d 1332, 42 St. Rep. 423 (1985).

Mortgage Created by Promissory Note, Assignment of Contract for Deed, and Quitclaim Deed: When a debt is shown to exist between the parties, a deed absolute on its face, delivered in connection with the indebtedness, will be construed as a mortgage when it is shown that the instrument was intended to secure the indebtedness. A mortgage was created when borrowers executed and delivered to lenders a promissory note, an assignment of a contract for deed as collateral, and a quitclaim deed to the real property that was the subject of the contract for deed. Hanson v. Bonner, 202 M 505, 661 P2d 421, 40 St. Rep. 245 (1983).

Resulting Trust as Equitable Mortgage: When a conveyance is executed from the vendor direct to the lender to secure a loan of the purchase money made by him to the purchaser, the legal title is held not only for the lender as security but also in trust for the borrower for the purpose of finally having title go to him. Therefore, the transaction between the parties constitutes a resulting trust in the form of an equitable mortgage. Bermes v. Sylling, 179 M 448, 587 P2d 377 (1978), followed in O'Connor v. Lewis, 238 M 270, 776 P2d 1228, 46 St. Rep. 1260 (1989).

Deed Given as Security: A deed, absolute on its face but given as security for a debt, is in fact a mortgage. Isom v. Larson, 78 M 395, 255 P 1049 (1927).

71-1-108. Subsequently acquired title.

Case Notes

Estoppel Basis of Rule: The rule declared by this section that title acquired by the mortgagor after execution of the mortgage inures to the benefit of the mortgagee is based on the doctrine of estoppel. Midland Realty Co. v. Halverson, 101 M 49, 52 P2d 159 (1935); Grasswick v. Miller, 82 M 364, 267 P 299 (1928).

Estoppel to Assert Adverse Claim: A grantor who transfers his interest in land by deed absolute or in trust to secure a debt and thereafter agrees to the execution of a mortgage thereon by the grantee is estopped from later claiming an interest in the property adverse to the mortgagee. Further, any title the grantor may thereafter acquire inures to the benefit of the mortgagee. First St. Bank v. Mussigbrod, 83 M 68, 271 P 695 (1928).

Enlarged Homestead Entry: An entryman of desert land conveyed it, before patent, to grantee, who mortgaged it. After the mortgage, the entry was canceled for fraud. Later, the entryman filed upon the same land under the Enlarged Homestead Act (43 U.S.C. 218) and was issued a patent to the land. Subsequently, the mortgagee claimed that the entryman's Homestead Act title inured to him under the provisions of 70-20-302, 70-20-303, and this section.

The Supreme Court ruled these statutes inapplicable and denied mortgagee's claim, reasoning that to hold otherwise would nullify the federal law prohibiting alienation of public land prior to patent. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Brainard, 82 M 39, 265 P 10 (1928).

Homestead Entry:

The defendant in a foreclosure action had executed a promissory note secured by a mortgage upon a desert land entry which, after final certificate had been issued to him, was canceled. Later, he entered the land as a homestead and was issued a patent. The Supreme Court held that the lien of the mortgage on the desert entry attached to the homestead entry and defendant was estopped under this section from claiming the benefit of 43 U.S.C. § 175, which provided that lands acquired under the homestead laws may not become liable to the satisfaction of debts contracted prior to issuance of patent. Stockmen's Nat'l Bank v. Sutherland, 71 M 457, 230 P 369 (1924).

The rule declared by this section, that title acquired by the mortgagor subsequent to the execution of the mortgage inures to the mortgagee as security for the debt, applies to land, title to which at the time the mortgage was given was in the federal government and was subsequently acquired therefrom under the homestead laws. Lohman St. Bank v. Grim, 69 M 444, 222 P 1052 (1924).

Desert Land Entry: A mortgage upon a desert land entry given by the entryman as security for an antecedent debt before final proof is made or a patent is issued is enforceable against the mortgagor after patent issues to him. The title thus subsequently acquired by the mortgagor inures to the benefit of the mortgagee under this section, and the mortgagor is estopped from denying the validity of the mortgage. Selway v. Daut, 67 M 262, 215 P 646 (1923).

71-1-110. Passage of mortgage by assignment of debt.

Case Notes

Assignee's Right to Assert Tolling of Statute of Limitations: The assignee of the mortgagee brought suit to foreclose the mortgage. The mortgagor, who had acknowledged the debt, pleaded the Statute of Limitations. The assignee has the same right to assert that the acknowledgment took the case out of the Statute of Limitations as the original mortgagee would have if the suit had been brought by him. Breese v. O'Brien, 102 M 547, 59 P2d 65 (1936).

Endorsement of Note as Assignment: The assignment of a debt secured by mortgage carries with it the security; hence, acquisition of a note by endorsement has the effect of transferring the mortgage securing it. Ingebrightsen v. Hatcher, 87 M 482, 288 P 1023 (1930).

Assignment of Mortgage Alone: Assignment of a note secured by mortgage carries the mortgage with it. A mortgage is only a security and independent of the debt has no assignable quality. Therefore, an assignment of the mortgage alone is a nullity and confers no right whatever upon the assignee. First Nat'l Bank of Saco v. Vagg, 65 M 34, 212 P 509 (1922).

Mortgage as Incident to Debt: A mortgage given to secure the payment of a note is but an incident and passes to the assignee of the note. NW. Improvement Co. v. Rhoades, 52 M 428, 158 P 832 (1916); Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4 (1905).

Mortgage as Evidence of Debt: When there is no written evidence of the debt or obligation, the mortgage is evidence both of the debt and the security for its payment. Further, the debt is the principal thing, and the title to the mortgage follows an assignment of it. Cornish v. Woolverton, 32 M 456, 81 P 4 (1905).

71-1-111. Power of sale.

Case Notes

Execution of Power of Sale: A mortgagee may execute a power of sale contained in a chattel mortgage, and it is not necessary for him to call upon the Sheriff to make the sale, or to proceed by an action to foreclose. Kinsman v. Stanhope, 50 M 41, 144 P 1083 (1914).

Implied Power of Sale: A mortgagor contracts, either expressly or by implication, that the mortgaged property may be sold to satisfy his debt. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

Trust Deed Under Power of Attorney: An attorney in fact, under a general power of attorney to sell, convey, and mortgage the grantor's property, may secure the payment of his grantor's debt by executing a trust deed conveying the grantor's property and authorizing the trustee or his successor in trust to sell the same in case of nonpayment of the indebtedness. Muth v. Goddard, 28 M 237, 72 P 621 (1903).

71-1-112. Applicable laws.

Case Notes

Failure to File Affidavit of Good Faith: A mortgage given by a corporation covering both real and personal property, under this section before amendment by Ch. 11, L. 1931, which required a corporate mortgage to be accompanied by an affidavit of good faith made by the mortgagor, was good as to the real estate but invalid as to the personal property under the rule that a mortgage may be valid in part and invalid in part. Standard Oil Co. v. Idaho Community Oil Co., 95 M 412, 27 P2d 173 (1933).

Real and Personal Property: The former provisions of this section, requiring that mortgages "of both real and personal property" executed by a corporation be accompanied by an affidavit of good faith, applied only to mortgages covering both real and personal property, and therefore had no application to one covering real estate only. Godfrey L. Cabot, Inc. v. Gas Prod. Co., 93 M 497, 19 P2d 878 (1933).

71-1-113. Limit on the amount of funds on reserve.

Compiler's Comments

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

Case Notes

Funds Deposited in General Ledger Account Rather Than Applied Toward Note — Foreclosure Proper: American Federal Savings and Loan (American) held trust indentures securing July and August notes on Buckland's rental property. Buckland requested that rents be "applied to the loans", and American responded that it would first apply rents toward the August note until paid off and then to the July note, adding that as long as rents continued to come in on a regular basis, foreclosure would be held off. Because of rent collection problems, American accepted management of the property, eventually paying off the August note. From then on, rents were placed in a noninterest-bearing general ledger account rather than applied to the July note. American could have applied the funds toward the costs of managing the property, but did not. American commenced foreclosure proceedings when rents received did not satisfy the July note. Although the Supreme Court disagreed with the handling of the funds, foreclosure was still proper because the funds, if applied to the July note, would still have been insufficient to bring the note current. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n v. Buckland, 238 M 364, 777 P2d 1289, 46 St. Rep. 1339 (1989).

Mechanics' Lien Improperly Carried Forward — Amount of Note Reduced Upon Foreclosure: Electricians filed a mechanics' lien on Buckland's property for wiring an apartment. Buckland later sought to exchange the property for some land, but the lien had to be settled first. Because American Federal Savings and Loan (American) held a security interest in the property, American's approval was necessary to settle the lien and complete the exchange. American paid the settlement and took assignment of the lien. As part of the exchange, Buckland gave American a note for the amount of the lien, secured by a trust indenture on the land. Buckland subsequently traded the land for a duplex, and as part of the exchange, American carried forward the mechanics' lien. American later commenced foreclosure proceedings on the trust indenture. Buckland successfully argued that it was improper to carry forward the lien, which, according to the closing statement on sale of the first property, was paid from the proceeds of that sale. Thus, it was necessary to reduce the note by the amount of the lien, lest American recover twice. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n v. Buckland, 238 M 364, 777 P2d 1289, 46 St. Rep. 1339 (1989).

Section Not Codified — Satisfaction of Drought Relief Mortgage: Section 52-213, R.C.M. 1947 (sec. 1, Ch. 221, L. 1921), was not codified in the MCA. The section has not been repealed and is still valid law. The section provided: "Execution of satisfaction of mortgage under special act. Whenever under the provisions of sections 4680 to 4711 of these codes any mortgage or other security has been executed to a county or to any officers thereof, the county treasurer of such county is hereby authorized upon the payment of the debt for which the security was given, to execute an acknowledgment of satisfaction of said mortgage or other security. In case of the creation of a new county embracing the lands covered by any such mortgage, subsequent to the execution thereof, the county treasurer of such new county may execute said satisfaction in like manner and with the same effect as though executed by the treasurer of the county to which such security was originally given." Sections 4680 to 4711, referred to above, were included in the 1921 codification and relate to county drought relief. The sections were repealed by Ch. 22, L. 1935.

Assignment of Mortgage — No Effect on Lien Priority Position — Subordination Agreement Effective: The plaintiff sold real property to a couple who received a loan from a mortgage company and from the plaintiff himself to purchase the property. Both the plaintiff and the couple who purchased the property signed subordination agreements in favor of the mortgage company. The couple later defaulted on the loan, the mortgage company assigned its rights to the defendant, and two trustee sales were held for the property. The plaintiff filed a quiet title action to the property and the District Court issued summary judgment in the plaintiff's favor. The defendant appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court erred in determining that the couple's debt to the mortgage company was no longer in the first priority position because the debt had been assigned to the defendant. The assignment of the mortgage did not affect its priority, and either party could freely assign their rights since assignment was not prohibited in the mortgage documents. Watts v. HSBC Bank US Trustee, 2013 MT 233, 371 Mont. 295, 308 P.3d 57.

Bankruptcy — Power to Sell Right of Redemption Prior to Foreclosure Sale Affirmed — Abandonment and Lifting of Stay Distinguished: After Smith filed his bankruptcy petition, the bankruptcy trustee allowed the foreclosure of the property by Morelands. The trustee then allowed the sale of Smith's redemption right, which was purchased at a Sheriff's sale by Eastep. Montana Ranch Properties, Inc., then purchased the real estate at the foreclosure sale. Eastep then tendered the necessary amount to exercise his redemption rights, which was allowed by the District Court. Citing Segal v. Rochelle, 382 US 375 (1966), and 11 U.S.C. 363(b), the Supreme Court held that a trustee has the power to sell contingent interests in property as part of the bankruptcy estate and that the District Court did not err in concluding that Eastep held the redemptive rights to the property. The Supreme Court also held that the trustee did not abandon the property by lifting the automatic stay and allow Moreland's foreclosure. Mont. Ranch Properties, Inc. v. Eastep, 257 M 43, 847 P2d 304, 50 St. Rep. 152 (1993).

Contract for Deed — Forfeiture — Notice to Persons With Interest: A contract for deed was executed between Morin, the seller, and Roberts, the buyer. Later, Roberts entered into a second contract selling the property to Iverson. The second contract provided that Iverson would assume Roberts' obligation to Morin, and upon completion of Iverson's obligation to Roberts, Roberts would assign his interest in the Morin contract to Iverson. Iverson defaulted on the Morin contract, and Morin sent a notice of default to Iverson but not to Roberts. When Roberts learned of the default, he offered to cure. Morin refused the offer, seeking instead to enforce the forfeiture provision of the contract, thereby regaining the property, which had greatly increased in value. The court found that this situation is similar to the purchaser in an executory real estate contract who mortgages his interest. In that case the mortgagee is entitled to notice of forfeiture if the seller knows of the mortgage and the mortgagee has the right to tender payment to the seller necessary to protect his security. Roberts v. Morin, 198 M 233, 645 P2d 423, 39 St. Rep. 892 (1982).

Contract for Deed Not Same Legal Concept as Mortgage: Although certain similarities exist between the two, a contract for deed is not the same legal concept as a mortgage under Montana law. Therefore, a contract for deed need not be treated as a mortgage for purposes of foreclosure. Aveco Properties, Inc. v. Nicholson, 229 M 417, 747 P2d 1358, 44 St. Rep. 2098 (1987). See also Burgess v. Shiplet, 230 M 387, 750 P2d 460, 45 St. Rep. 293 (1988).

Desert Land Entry Capable of Transfer: A desert land entry is a distinct interest in real estate, a property right capable of transfer, and there is no prohibition against transfer. Selway v. Daut, 67 M 262, 215 P 646 (1923).

71-1-202. Mortgage not considered conveyance — recovery of possession.

Case Notes

Foreclosure Sale Order Not Violative of Conveyance Restriction or Redemption Right: Defendant contended the wording of an order of sale in a foreclosure proceeding, stating that defendants "have no lien, right, title, estate, claim, or interest on or to the mortgaged property, whether real, personal, or mixed hereinafter described", incorrectly severed his interest in the land prior to foreclosure sale and severely hindered his attempts to sell the land and satisfy the promissory note. However, the language did not violate this section because it did not enable the mortgage owner to recover possession without a foreclosure and sale. Further, the statement did not affect the defendant's 1-year statutory right of redemption. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Slack, 232 M 250, 756 P2d 1140, 45 St. Rep. 1028 (1988).

Mortgage Terminated by Quitclaim Deed — Foreclosure Procedure Not Required: Plaintiff, d/b/a Starhaven Ranch, Ltd., purchased a ranch on a contract for deed from Crofts. Crofts had purchased the land on a contract basis from Clarnos. Crofts assigned their purchasers' interest in the contract to defendant. Crofts defaulted on a contract provision requiring them to obtain grazing permits and on their contract with Clarnos. Starhaven fell in default on its final downpayment. Crofts fell in default on the loan with defendant. The bank recorded the quitclaim deed from Crofts. The bank asserted it succeeded to the rights of the Croft-Starhaven contract and took action against Starhaven. Crofts disappeared. Starhaven made payment on the Clarno-Croft contract to prevent Clarnos from declaring a forfeiture. The bank asserted absolute ownership rights against Starhaven. The bank obtained the quitclaim deed Starhaven had executed to Crofts and recorded it. The bank then sent Starhaven a notice to vacate, triggering the proceedings. The trial court held the bank had succeeded to all Crofts' interest in the property when it obtained and recorded the assignment. The court then concluded the bank could assert the default provisions of the Croft-Starhaven contract and was entitled to forfeiture. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the assignment as collateral for a loan created a security interest only—in this case a mortgage—and mortgage foreclosure proceedings were the proper method for the bank to pursue its remedies. On rehearing, the court upheld the trial court, finding that the mortgagors waived their right to foreclosure proceedings by filing a quitclaim deed to defendant bank. Waiver of the right to foreclosure includes consent to the possession of the mortgagee and the waiver of the equity of redemption. The bank was entitled under the Croft-Starhaven contract to require Starhaven's forfeiture upon defaulting on the contract payments, and Starhaven was not entitled to foreclosure proceedings. Erickson v. First Nat'l Bank, 215 M 350, 697 P2d 1332, 42 St. Rep. 423 (1985).

Mortgage as Lien, Not Conveyance: Montana is a "lien" state, and a mortgage of itself does not convey any title in mortgaged property to the mortgagee. Hanson v. Bonner, 202 M 505, 661 P2d 421, 40 St. Rep. 245 (1983).

Mortgagor's Right to Dispose of Property: A mortgagor, whenever he chooses, may dispose of his estate in the mortgaged property regardless of the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee whose rights are secured and may be enforced by foreclosure. Bermes v. Sylling, 179 M 448, 587 P2d 377 (1978).

Possessory Right on Condition Broken:

This section does not apply to mortgages in which the parties have contracted that the mortgagee has the right of possession upon condition broken. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Jensen, 74 M 70, 237 P 518 (1925), distinguished in Sharp Bros., Inc. v. Bartlett, 76 M 415, 248 P 199 (1926), and First Nat'l Corp. v. Perrine, 99 M 454, 43 P2d 1073 (1935).

A deed with a defeasance clause, given to secure a debt, was a mortgage and was subject to this section. However, upon default, the mortgagee, with the consent of the mortgagor, took possession of the property. Therefore, since mortgagor's consent was given subsequent to the mortgage, it was not a part of the mortgage and this section was not applicable. Fee v. Swingly, 6 M 596, 13 P 375 (1887), distinguished in First Nat'l Bank of Butte v. Bell Silver & Copper Min. Co., 8 M 32, 19 P 403 (1888).

Taxation: In view of this section, a mortgage is security for a debt and accompanies the debt, but is not taxable in a county when owned by nonresidents, even though the land is within the county. Holland v. Bd. of Comm'rs, 15 M 460, 39 P 575 (1895).

Power of Sale in Mortgage: This section does not prevent the inclusion of a power of sale in a mortgage or trust deed, and the purchaser at a sale made pursuant to such a power may take possession without foreclosure. First Nat'l Bank of Butte v. Bell Silver & Copper Min. Co., 8 M 32, 19 P 403 (1888), affirmed in 156 US 470, 39 L Ed 497, 15 S Ct 440 (1895).

Transaction Neither Sale nor Mortgage — No Security Interest Created: Plaintiff purchased a ranch on behalf of defendant with defendant's money but put title to the ranch in plaintiff's name and operated the ranch for defendant. The parties subsequently executed documents to settle the dispute between them concerning the ranch property, including plaintiff's quitclaim deed of the property to defendant. Since the transaction did not involve either a sale or mortgage of the property, plaintiff did not hold a security interest in the ranch. O'Connor v. Lewis, 238 M 270, 776 P2d 1228, 46 St. Rep. 1260 (1989).

Quitclaim Purchaser as Bona Fide Purchaser: Smith purchased mortgaged property by quitclaim deed with actual knowledge of the mortgage. Smith did not have knowledge of two extension agreements which were not recorded. In a foreclosure suit, Smith was found to be a bona fide purchaser without notice and entitled to priority over both the unrecorded extension agreements and extension agreements recorded after Smith recorded his deed. Aitken v. Lane, 108 M 368, 92 P2d 628 (1939).

Unrecorded Extension Valid Between Parties: An agreement extending the life of a mortgage made either under this section or 71-1-210 is binding between the parties though not recorded. Aitken v. Lane, 108 M 368, 92 P2d 628 (1939).

Foreclosure for Breach of Condition to Pay Taxes and Insurance: The parties to a mortgage made an agreement giving mortgagors additional time for payment and providing for a reduction in the principal and the interest rate in the event that mortgagors could refinance the mortgage. It was left optional with the mortgagees whether a new note and mortgage would be executed or the old one incorporating the new terms extended. The agreement did not prevent mortgagee from foreclosing for breach of the mortgage condition requiring payment of taxes and insurance. Further, the court ruled that the agreement was enforceable even though it had not been executed because the mortgagees had chosen to extend the old mortgage but the mortgagors had refused to sign the extension. McIntosh v. Weaver, 108 M 328, 90 P2d 169 (1939).

Failure of Administrator to Plead Limitation as Constructive Fraud: The administrator of the insolvent estate of a mortgagor was duty bound to plead the Statute of Limitations in a suit to foreclose a mortgage when the mortgagee failed to file a renewal affidavit under 71-1-210 and no extension agreement had been made under this section. If the administration permits a default to be entered without defending, his conduct is constructively fraudulent as against a general creditor. Further, failure of the creditor to demand that the administrator plead the Statute is immaterial when demand would have been useless. Missoula Trust & Sav. Bank v. Boos, 106 M 294, 77 P2d 385 (1938).

Affidavit of Good Faith Not Required: This section does not require an affidavit by the mortgagee that the extension was not made with the intent to hinder or defraud creditors, and therefore its absence did not render the agreement invalid. Register Life Ins. Co. v. Kenniston, 99 M 191, 43 P2d 251 (1935).

Period for Which Extended: The mortgagor and mortgagee made an agreement for the extension of a real estate mortgage under this section. The effect of the agreement was to extend its life for more than 16 years after its original maturity date. This did not render the agreement invalid as against a creditor of the mortgagor holding a judgment lien acquired before the date of the agreement. The court rejected the claim that because this section and 71-1-210 are in pari materia, the provision of 71-1-210 that the life of a mortgage cannot be extended for more than 16 years should be applied to this section. The court stated that even though the provision of 71-1-210 limiting the time period during which a mortgage may be extended by renewal affidavit has in effect been incorporated within this section by construction, the time to which extension may run is unlimited in the absence of legislative declaration on the subject. Register Life Ins. Co. v. Kenniston, 99 M 191, 43 P2d 251 (1935).

Agreement to Extend to Be Recorded — Effect of Recording on Priorities:

A real estate mortgage extension agreement executed under this section before maturity of the last of a series of mortgage notes was not recorded until after the period of extension had expired. Two years prior thereto the property had been conveyed to another, subject to the mortgage. The deed, however, was not recorded until some 6 weeks after recordation of the agreement. Because the extension agreement, was recorded first, under 70-21-304 it took priority over the deed, even though the vendee was a subsequent purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration. Hastings v. Wise, 91 M 430, 8 P2d 636 (1932).

When the parties to a real estate mortgage, before maturity of the debt which it secured and before rights of the third parties had intervened, extended for several years the payment of the debt and the mortgage and when they recorded the extension agreement, a mortgage given on the property after filing of the extension agreement was inferior to it. O. M. Corwin Co. v. Brainard, 80 M 318, 260 P 706 (1927). See also dissenting opinion in Reed v. Richardson, 94 M 34, 20 P2d 1054 (1933).

This section, providing for the extension of a mortgage, contemplates the making of a contract assented to by both parties. In order that notice of the extension may be given to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees, the extension agreement must be filed with the County Clerk for record. O. M. Corwin Co. v. Brainard, 80 M 318, 260 P 706 (1927).

Mortgage Extension as Conveyance: A real estate mortgage extension agreement executed as provided by this section is a "conveyance" within the meaning of 70-21-301. Hastings v. Wise, 91 M 430, 8 P2d 636 (1932).

Renewal of Mortgage Where There Is No Injury to Third Persons:

Where third persons are not affected thereby, a mortgagor of lands may, under this section, in effect procure a renewal of the mortgage by an extension of the time of payment of the debt secured by it, irrespective of the provisions of 71-1-210 concerning filing of a renewal affidavit. Hastings v. Wise, 89 M 325, 297 P 482 (1931).

The parties to a real estate mortgage may, under this section, renew or extend it within the 8-year period following the maturity of the debt secured, even though the rights of subsequent mortgagees have attached in the meantime, if by such renewal or extension the latter are not injured. Vitt v. Rogers, 81 M 120, 262 P 164 (1927).

Status of Purchaser of Mortgaged Lands Prior to Expiration of 8-Year Period After Maturity of Debt: One who by deed becomes the owner of all the right, title, and interest in lands of the mortgagor, at any time before the expiration of the 8-year period following the maturity of the entire mortgage indebtedness, does not become the owner of the property free and clear of the mortgage lien upon expiration of that period, where no extension agreement under this section or affidavit of renewal under 71-1-210 has been filed or recorded. Turner v. Powell, 85 M 241, 278 P 512 (1929), followed in Hillsdale College v. Thompson, 99 M 400, 44 P2d 753 (1935).

Payment on Debt Insufficient Extension: Since the renewal or extension of a mortgage requires a writing as formal as one granting real property, no extension of the lien is effected by a mere payment on account of the debt secured, after the barring of the latter by the Statute of Limitations. Berkin v. Healy, 52 M 398, 158 P 1020 (1916).

Retrospective Application: This section has no application to a mortgage on real estate renewed by extension of the note which it secured in 1890. Wilson v. Pickering, 28 M 435, 72 P 821 (1903).

Case Notes

Failure to Notify Second Mortgagor of Sales and Future Advances Not Breach of Fiduciary Duty: Absent findings of clear error, a District Court decision that a first mortgagor breached no fiduciary duty to second mortgagor by failing to notify of property sales and future advances was affirmed. The court properly found it was the second mortgagor's obligation to discover the existence and extent of the future advance clause by requesting a copy of the deed of trust and to investigate more closely the actual terms of the instrument prior to entering the second mortgage. Serv. Funding, Inc. v. Craft, 234 M 431, 763 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 2030 (1988).

Priority of Deed of Trust — Advances Diminishing Value of Second Mortgage: Second mortgagor argued that advances made by first mortgagor after the maturity dates on the original notes significantly diminished the value of the second mortgage without second mortgagor's knowledge. The argument failed because the first mortgagor had priority of the deed of trust not only as to the previous sale proceeds but to remaining collateral as well. Serv. Funding, Inc. v. Craft, 234 M 431, 763 P2d 1131, 45 St. Rep. 2030 (1988).

Mortgage Good Between Parties Until Debt Barred: As between the original parties, the mortgage remains valid without filing an affidavit of renewal so long as the debt secured by the mortgage is not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Clarke v. Chamberlain, 124 M 405, 225 P2d 477 (1950).

Application of 1933 Amendment Not Retroactive: The 1933 amendment to this section cannot constitutionally be held to apply to a mortgage executed during the effective period of the prior statute. Hogevoll v. Hogevoll, 117 M 528, 162 P2d 218 (1945).

Recital in Deed as Tolling Statute of Limitations: A recital in a deed that the premises are subject to a prior mortgage constitutes an acknowledgment of the mortgage by both parties and a recognition of the debt, does not impair the rights of the owner of the mortgage, and constitutes an admission which tolls the statute and removes its bar. W. Holding Co. v. NW. Land & Loan Co., 113 M 24, 120 P2d 557 (1942).

Quitclaim Purchaser as Bona Fide Purchaser: Smith purchased mortgaged property by quitclaim deed with actual knowledge of the mortgage. Unrecorded Extension Binding on Parties: An agreement extending the life of a mortgage made either under this section or 71-1-203 is binding between the parties whether or not it has been recorded. Aitken v. Lane, 108 M 368, 92 P2d 628 (1939).

Homestead Protected After Mortgage Outlawed: A mortgage was executed and recorded "before the declaration of homestead was filed for record" as provided in 70-32-202, but had lost its validity by lapse of time as a security and ceased to be a mortgage or lien under this section. The note which the mortgage was given to secure was still alive and a money judgment was obtained on the note. The Supreme Court ruled that the homestead was not subject to execution or forced sale to satisfy the judgment because the mortgage was no longer valid and the debt therefore not "secured" by it when the judgment on the note was entered as required by 70-32-202. Siuru v. Sell, 108 M 438, 91 P2d 411 (1939).

Failure of Administrator to Plead Limitation as Constructive Fraud: The administrator of the insolvent estate of a mortgagor is duty bound to plead the Statute of Limitations in a suit to foreclose a mortgage when the mortgagee failed to file a renewal affidavit under this section, and no extension agreement had been made under 71-1-203. Further, failure of the creditor to demand that the administrator plead the Statute is immaterial when demand would have been useless. Missoula Trust & Sav. Bank v. Mortgage Not to Exist Beyond Life of Debt: A mortgage cannot exist beyond the life of the debt or obligation it was given to secure. Rieckhoff v. Woodhull, 106 M 22, 75 P2d 56 (1938).

Statute of Limitations Not a Bar When Debt Kept Alive: A real estate mortgage governed by this section prior to amendment was not barred by the Statute of Limitations so long as the debt secured thereby was kept alive. Sommer v. Wigen, 103 M 327, 62 P2d 333 (1936).

Effect Between Parties of Keeping Debt Alive: As between the mortgagor of real property and the mortgagee, if the debt for which the mortgage is given is kept alive, the mortgage is good even after the expiration of 8 years from the maturity of the note or obligation. Breese v. O'Brien, 102 M 547, 59 P2d 65 (1936); Leffek v. Luedeman, 95 M 457, 27 P2d 511 (1933).

Purchaser Before Expiration of Mortgage:

One acquiring mortgaged realty within the 8-year period following the maturity of the mortgage indebtedness may not assert the invalidity of the mortgage under this section if the mortgage debt is not barred under 27-2-202, the general Statute of Limitations; he is not a "subsequent purchaser" within the meaning of this section. Humbird v. Arnet, 99 M 499, 44 P2d 756 (1935).

One who by deed becomes the owner of all the right, title, and interest in lands of the mortgagor at any time before the expiration of the 8-year period following the maturity of the entire mortgage indebtedness does not become the owner of the property free and clear of the mortgage lien upon expiration of that period, even though no extension agreement under 71-1-203 or affidavit of renewal under this section has been filed or recorded. Turner v. Powell, 85 M 241, 278 P 512 (1929), followed in Hillsdale College v. Thompson, 99 M 400, 44 P2d 753 (1935).

Extension by Agreement:

The method prescribed by this section for extending the life of a real estate mortgage by the filing of an affidavit by the mortgagee is not exclusive. Under 71-1-203 an extension may be effected by written agreement between the parties to the mortgage. Register Life Ins. Co. v. Kenniston, 99 M 191, 43 P2d 251 (1935); O. M. Corwin Co. v. Brainard, 80 M 318, 260 P 706 (1927).

A written agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee for the extension of a real estate mortgage under 71-1-203, the effect of which was to extend its life for more than 16 years after its original maturity date, did not render it invalid as against a creditor of the mortgagor holding a judgment lien acquired before the date of the agreement. Register Life Ins. Co. v. Kenniston, 99 M 191, 43 P2d 251 (1935). See also Frisbee v. Coburn, 101 M 58, 52 P2d 882 (1935).

Where third persons are not affected thereby, a mortgagor of lands may, under 71-1-203, by agreement with the mortgagee executed as provided therein, in effect renew the mortgage by extending the time of payment of the debt secured by it, irrespective of the provisions of this section concerning the filing of a renewal affidavit. Hastings v. Wise, 89 M 325, 297 P 482 (1931).

During the life of a properly recorded real estate mortgage, mortgagors executed second and third mortgages on the same property. Later, before the expiration of the first mortgage its life was extended for 2 years by a written agreement between the parties to the mortgage. The extension agreement was recorded. After the extension, the second and third mortgagees were in no worse position than they had been when they took their mortgage. Therefore they were not injured by the extension and their claim that plaintiff's lien had become inferior to theirs by his failure to file a renewal affidavit was without merit. Vitt v. Rogers, 81 M 120, 262 P 164 (1927).

Action for Debt After Mortgage Invalid: A mortgagee whose mortgage was rendered invalid for failure to file a renewal affidavit but whose debt has not become barred by the general Statute of Limitations may proceed against the mortgagor's administrator on the debt. The mortgagee is entitled to a judgment adjudicating the debt as a valid claim against the estate payable in due course of administration. Leffek v. Luedeman, 95 M 457, 27 P2d 511 (1933).

Insolvent Administrator Attacking Mortgage: An administrator of an insolvent estate may, on behalf of creditors who cannot under the law secure a specific lien upon the estate property after the debtor's death, attack the validity of a real estate mortgage on the ground of the holder's failure to file the renewal affidavit required by this section. Leffek v. Luedeman, 95 M 457, 27 P2d 511 (1933).

Failure to Plead Statute of Limitations: Defendant, in an action to foreclose a first mortgage on real property held by him under a quitclaim deed from the purchaser on foreclosure of the second mortgage, in his answer relied on the failure of plaintiff to file an affidavit of renewal of the mortgage as a bar to the action. He did not plead the general Statute of Limitations. Judgment for plaintiff was proper in the absence of a pleading that the debt was barred. Reed v. Richardson, 94 M 34, 20 P2d 1054 (1933).

Debt Not Extended: This section, limiting the validity of a mortgage, unless renewed, to 8 years after maturity of the debt which it was given to secure, affects merely the lien of the mortgage and does not extend the life of the debt. Enactment of 71-3-122 did not change the rule of law that a mortgage cannot exist beyond the life of the debt or obligation it is given to secure. Jones v. Hall, 90 M 69, 300 P 232 (1931).

Actual Notice Where Affidavit Not Recorded:

Two months before the maturity date of a debt secured by a mortgage, an agreement was entered into extending the debt for 10 years. The agreement was not recorded until after the 10-year extension had elapsed. In an action to foreclose the mortgage, the owner of the land asserted that the mortgage was barred by 71-1-210 because an affidavit of renewal had not been filed within 60 days of the original maturity date. The Supreme Court held that since a mortgage can be renewed by written agreement and because the owner had actual knowledge of the extension agreement, the filing of an affidavit was not necessary. Hastings v. Wise, 89 M 325, 297 P 482 (1931).

This section, when read in connection with the prior law concerning recording mortgages and harmonized therewith, merely limits the duration of record notice of the lien of recorded mortgages. Even though "subsequent purchasers" is not qualified by "in good faith", the failure of a mortgagee to file the required affidavit did not affect the lien as against a subsequent purchaser, who purchased with actual notice of the mortgage and during the time that the record of the mortgage was constructive notice. Cullen v. Reed, 220 F 356 (D.C. Mont. 1915).

Failure to File Affidavit: When a mortgagee fails to file a renewal affidavit within 60 days after the expiration of 8 years from the date of maturity of the obligation secured thereby, the land is no longer subject to the mortgage. Pereira v. Wulf, 83 M 343, 272 P 532 (1928).

Provision for Benefit of Mortgagee: The protection afforded by this section is intended for the benefit of the mortgagee, not the mortgagor, and the latter may not be heard to object to the sufficiency of the renewal affidavit provided for therein when it appears affirmatively that the debt for which the mortgage was given was not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Skillen v. Harris, 85 M 73, 277 P 803 (1929).

Time of Foreclosure After Renewal:

The purpose of the Legislature in enacting this section was definitely to limit the life of a mortgage, unless extended, to 8 years from the maturity of the debt (except as between the parties themselves). The remedy therein provided may be invoked by the mortgagee or his successors only and, if invoked, the mortgagee may foreclose at any time during the second 8-year period, and any implication to the contrary in Morrison v. Farmers & Traders' St. Bank, 70 M 146, 225 P 123 (1924), must be overruled. Vitt v. Rogers, 81 M 120, 262 P 164 (1927).

This section contemplates action by the mortgagee alone. The mortgagor cannot prevent the filing of the affidavit of renewal, nor can he bring it about. As between the mortgagee and the mortgagor, if the debt is kept alive, the mortgage is good even after the expiration of 8 years from the maturity of the debt. O.M. Corwin Co. v. Brainard, 80 M 318, 260 P 706 (1927).

Presumption That Decree Is Supported by Evidence: The record on appeal in a foreclosure suit was silent as to when the indebtedness secured by the mortgage became due, or whether a debt secured by the mortgage and a subsequent instrument of which the mortgage had been made a part by reference had been paid. Therefore, the trial court's finding that plaintiff mortgagee was entitled to a decree will be presumed supported by the evidence, rendering untenable the contentions of appellant that the mortgage had expired under this section and that the amount due on the latter instrument had been paid. The Supreme Court noted that the litigation concerned rights of the original parties to the transaction only and that no rights of third parties were involved. First Nat'l Bank of Missoula v. Marlowe, 71 M 461, 230 P 374 (1924).

Constitutionality:

This section, construed as a Statute of Limitations, is not open to attack on constitutional grounds. Morrison v. Farmers & Traders' St. Bank, 70 M 146, 225 P 123 (1924).

This section is valid when applied prospectively from the date of enactment. However, to the extent that retroactive application of the section would enable a mortgagee whose mortgage had been extinguished by lapse of time to revitalize the security and impose a lien upon property without the owner's consent, it would deprive the owner of his property without due process of law and would be invalid. Berkin v. Healy, 52 M 398, 158 P 1020 (1916).

Section as Statute of Limitations and Not Recording Statute: This section is not a recording statute, affecting notice, but is a Statute of Limitations, affecting the remedy. Thus a mortgage, in the absence of the filing of a renewal affidavit, ceases to be of binding force as against third parties and becomes unenforceable 8 years from the maturity of the debt or obligation secured. Morrison v. Farmers & Traders' St. Bank, 70 M 146, 225 P 123 (1924), overruled in part, Vitt v. Rogers, 81 M 120, 262 P 164 (1927).

Case Notes

Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Not Breached When Mortgage Allowed Partial Release: Because the bank did not owe a duty to the mortgagors to maintain the mortgage contract until full payment of the debt, the mortgagors were not deprived of a contractual benefit when the bank partially released the mortgage. Therefore, the mortgagors could not successfully claim breach by the bank of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The claim did not relate to the contract but rather to peripheral aspects of the mortgagors' relationship with the bank. Weldon v. Mont. Bank, 268 M 88, 885 P2d 511, 51 St. Rep. 1178 (1994).

Meaning of Mortgage Provision Requiring Release on Full Payment of Debt: A mortgage stated that "A release of this mortgage is to be made at the expense of the Mortgagors, on full payment of indebtedness secured thereby." Neither this provision nor 71-1-212 and this section, numerating the statutory duties of a bank regarding the release of a mortgage, required the bank to maintain the mortgage in full effect until final payment or to notify mortgagors of the bank's partial release prior to full payment. The bank could cancel or release the mortgage at any time with or without consideration from or the consent of the mortgagors, and the quoted provision only obligated the bank to release the mortgage at the mortgagors' expense upon full payment. Weldon v. Mont. Bank, 268 M 88, 885 P2d 511, 51 St. Rep. 1178 (1994).

"Deed of Release": The phrase "deed of release", as used in former (1) of this section (deleted, sec. 1, Ch. 127, L. 1981), means a writing, duly subscribed and acknowledged by the mortgagee, whereby he absolves the mortgaged property from the lien of the mortgage. Swain v. McMillan, 30 M 433, 76 P 943 (1904).

Attorney General's Opinions

Blanket Document Listing Multiple Reconveyances of Trust Indentures Allowed: Generally, a County Clerk and Recorder must record reconveyances of trust indentures, which operate the same as a release or satisfaction of a mortgage. In order to effectuate release of a mortgage, the mortgagee or its agent must acknowledge and certify that a release has taken place by presenting a certificate to the County Clerk and Recorder. There is no requirement that each certificate be on a separate piece of paper. As long as each reconveyance meets the statutory requirements for release of a mortgage, the County Clerk and Recorder is obligated to accept for filing a multiple page or "blanket" document listing more than one reconveyance on each page. 48 A.G. Op. 23 (2000).

GENERAL

Failure to Consider "One-Action Rule" — Grounds for Reversal and Remand: A private school had two loans with the plaintiff bank, one secured by real property and another unsecured. After both loans became delinquent, the bank filed a complaint against the school for default on the loans and for a judicial foreclosure. The District Court granted the bank summary judgment without ordering the sale of the real property. On appeal, the school argued that the court failed to consider the "one-action rule" in foreclosure proceedings that requires the real property securing a defaulted loan to be sold before a judgment is entered for the difference between the amount owed and the sale proceeds. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed and remanded the matter to the District Court for it to consider application of the one-action rule. Mountain West Bank, N.A. v. Helena Christian School, Inc., 2012 MT 194, 366 Mont. 165, 285 P.3d 588.

No Error in Ordering Foreclosure of Personal Real Property for Failure to Repay Business Loans — Deficiency Judgment Proper: Defendants, husband and wife, failed to make scheduled payments on two bank loans, and the bank filed for foreclosure of two deeds of trust. Defendants were in the process of obtaining a divorce. The husband failed to respond to the complaint, and a default judgment was entered against him. The District Court then granted summary judgment against the wife, ordered foreclosure and sale of the collateral real property, and entered a deficiency judgment holding the wife responsible for any deficiency following sale of the real property. The wife appealed on grounds that the District Court erroneously granted summary judgment by: (1) determining that any oral representations made by bank agents were merged into written documents; (2) holding that the bank was entitled to a deficiency judgment; and (3) finding that the bank had no fiduciary duty to the wife. The Supreme Court considered each argument in turn and affirmed. First, the written loan agreements expressed the entire agreement between the parties, and any alleged oral understandings that were not reduced to writing were invalid. Second, although a deficiency judgment may not issue if the secured property is a single-family residence, in this case, the security agreements provided that the collateral property be used for business purposes, so even though the property was defendants' primary residence, the trust indenture was not strictly residential, and the District Court did not err in ordering a deficiency judgment. Third, as stated in Coles Dept. Store v. First Bank, 240 M 226, 783 P2d 932 (1989), to establish a fiduciary relationship, in addition to a long history of bank dealings, a bank must act in some capacity other than that common in the usual arm's-length debtor-creditor relationship. Here, no prior banking relationship existed between the parties, and given the wife's extensive legal and marketing background, she would not have needed to rely on the bank to interpret the loan documents for her or to act as her adviser, so no fiduciary relationship or duty existed. First Sec. Bank v. Abel, 2008 MT 161, 343 M 313, 184 P3d 318 (2008), following First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203 (1987), and Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608 (1989).

Elements of Prima Facie Case for Foreclosure: To make a prima facie case for foreclosure, proof of these three elements by the complaining party is required: (1) debt of the obligor; (2) nonpayment of the debt; and (3) present ownership of the debt by the complaining party. When no genuine issues of material fact regarding the right to foreclose are demonstrated, summary judgment is proper. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Right to Apply Member Stock to Indebtedness: As a condition for a loan from the Federal Land Bank of Spokane (FLB), the Hills were required to purchase $9,800 worth of stock in the Federal Land Bank Association (FLBA). The FLBA purchased a like amount of stock in FLB, and the Hills pledged their stock to FLB in the event of default. When the Hills defaulted, the Farm Credit Bank of Spokane (FCB), which had become the successor by merger to FLB, retired the Hills' stock and applied the par value of the stock to the Hills' indebtedness. The Hills contended error in the stock seizure absent any allegation by FCB that it was entitled to the stock and without a showing that the bank should receive it. The Supreme Court cited provisions of the federal Farm Credit Act of 1971 that provide statutory authority for farm credit banks to retire and apply stock when a loan is in default and relied on case law from other jurisdictions that have recognized this right. Failure by the Hills to show that retirement of the stock was improper led the court to conclude that forfeiture and application of the stock were not in error. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Prima Facie Case for Foreclosure — Default Judgment Proper: In order to make a prima facie case for foreclosure, a lender is required to show three elements: (1) the debt of the borrowers; (2) nonpayment of the debt; and (3) present ownership of the debt by the lender. Evidence of the presence of these elements, coupled with a sufficient showing of attorney fees, was adequate for a default judgment to be entered against debtors. NW. Farm Credit Serv., ACA v. Lund, 255 M 114, 841 P2d 490, 49 St. Rep. 910 (1992). See also First Nat'l Bank of Albuquerque v. Quinta Land & Cattle Co., 238 M 335, 779 P2d 48 (1989).

Award of Attorney Fees for Work Performed After Purchase at Foreclosure Sale: Defendant contended that 71-1-234 precluded an award of attorney fees for postforeclosure legal work because the award would require a second determination of fees in violation of the "one-action" rule of this section. However, 71-1-234 merely requires the District Court to act upon the mortgagee's petition for attorney fees before the notice of sale issues and neither expressly prohibits postjudgment attorney fees nor expressly provides that an award of fees earned prior to the foreclosure decree is final and conclusive. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Newton, 252 M 336, 829 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 267 (1992).

One-Action Rule Not Violated by Separate Foreclosure Suits:

The District Court order granting summary judgment in Flathead County on a promissory note after the bank had already obtained judgment in Gallatin County on the same promissory note was not an additional judgment but an integrated proceeding allowing foreclosure of the Flathead property. Jones v. First Sec. Bank of Bozeman, 249 M 221, 814 P2d 988, 48 St. Rep. 653 (1991).

The bank brought two separate actions in two different counties to foreclose on separate parcels of property, both of which secured the defendant's promissory note which was in default. The Supreme Court ruled that the bank was not violating the one-action rule because the two actions were filed simultaneously, incorporating each other by reference, and therefore were not an attempt to circumvent the one-action rule. (See 1999 amendment itemizing exceptions to one-action rule.) First Sec. Bank v. Jones, 243 M 301, 794 P2d 679, 47 St. Rep. 1238 (1990).

Sales Price Not Properly Challenged and Not Inequitable: The defendants argued that the sales price obtained during foreclosure on their property was not for fair market value and therefore was inadequate and that no deficiency judgment should have been entered against them. The Supreme Court held that the defendants had not raised the issue of the adequacy of the sales price during trial and could not raise the issue on appeal. The court also held that no evidence was presented that showed the sales price to be inequitable and said the facts before it were distinguishable from those before the court in Trustees of Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608, 46 St. Rep. 1661 (1989). Fed. S&L Ins. Corp. v. Hamilton, 241 M 367, 786 P2d 1190, 47 St. Rep. 357 (1990), followed in First W. Fed. Sav. Bank v. Lence, 255 M 7, 839 P2d 1277, 49 St. Rep. 857 (1992).

Determination of "Fair Market" Value in Mortgage Foreclosure: The Supreme Court, exercising its equity jurisdiction, examined the size of a deficiency judgment in relation to the original note to determine whether after foreclosure a judgment debtor was also liable for the deficiency judgment. The case was remanded to the District Court to determine the fair market value of the property at the time of the Sheriff's sale. "Fair market" is the intrinsic value of the real property with its improvements at the time of sale under judicial foreclosure, without consideration of the impact of foreclosure proceedings on the fair market value. Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608, 46 St. Rep. 1661 (1989). The District Court judgment valuing the foreclosed property at $1.1 million and awarding no interest on the loan was affirmed in Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 250 M 175, 819 P2d 158, 48 St. Rep. 724 (1991), followed in Bank of Baker v. Mikelson Land Co., 1999 MT 76, 294 M 64, 979 P2d 180, 56 St. Rep. 315 (1999).

Foreign Judgment — Summary Judgment Proper: A New Mexico bank successfully sued New Mexico defendants in New Mexico on defaulted loans secured by mortgages on Montana property. The bank then sought foreclosure in Montana. The law of the state where a judgment is rendered controls the interpretation of the effect of the foreign judgment in any subsequent actions between the parties or those with whom there is privity. Under a collateral estoppel analysis, the bank was entitled to summary judgment in Montana. The bank is entitled to attorney fees and costs, including attorney fees on appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Albuquerque v. Quinta Land & Cattle Co., 238 M 335, 779 P2d 48, 46 St. Rep. 1313 (1989).

Judgment on Note as Extinguishing Right to Foreclose: When a note is secured by mortgage, an action on the note alone waives the mortgage security if plaintiff obtains a judgment which becomes final, and he may not thereafter go into a court of equity and secure relief by way of foreclosure. Coburn v. Coburn, 89 M 386, 298 P 349 (1931).

Jury Trial: An action to foreclose a mortgage is one in equity, which is not changed into one at law by pleadings that raise issues of law on questions incidental to the principal relief sought by plaintiff. Therefore defendant is not entitled to a jury trial. Rochester v. Bennett, 74 M 293, 240 P 384 (1925).

Manner of Sale Directed — Separate or in One Body: In an action to foreclose a mortgage on land, the District Court may in its discretion direct whether the land is to be sold in separate parcels or en masse. Elston v. Hix, 67 M 294, 215 P 657 (1923), followed in Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Slack, 232 M 250, 756 P2d 1140, 45 St. Rep. 1028 (1988).

Collateral Security:

Plaintiff by commencing an action to foreclose his mortgage upon land did not waive his claim upon wheat grown thereon, possession of which had been turned over to him by the mortgagors, but which was not covered by mortgage. The restriction found in this section does not include personal or collateral security not falling fairly within the meaning of the term "mortgage". Craig v. Burns, 65 M 550, 212 P 856 (1923).

This section is a limitation upon the rights which usually pertain to property, but its restriction will not be construed to include personal or collateral security, or any other form of security not falling within the meaning of the term "mortgage". St. Sav. Bank v. Albertson, 39 M 414, 102 P 692 (1909), distinguished in Vande Veegaete v. Vande Veegaete, 75 M 52, 243 P 1082 (1925).

Consent Decree: If a consent decree is entered in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, authorizing the receiver appointed therein to make a sale of the mortgaged property, a fully executed contract under such authority would constitute a "judicial sale", not requiring confirmation to pass title. Interior Sec. Co. v. Campbell, 55 M 459, 178 P 582 (1919).

Judicial Sale: A sale made pursuant to a decree of court in an action to foreclose a mortgage, instituted under this section, is a "judicial sale". Interior Sec. Co. v. Campbell, 55 M 459, 178 P 582 (1919).

Assignment of Mortgage: Where a note and a mortgage securing it were transferred by assignment, the payee endorsing the note without recourse, the transferee took it with full knowledge that it was a mortgage note, collectible under this section—a nonnegotiable instrument subject to all the equities existing in favor of the maker. Buhler v. Loftus, 53 M 546, 165 P 601 (1917).

Order of Sale Not Required:

A decree of foreclosure operates directly upon the mortgaged property, and is itself sufficient authority for the officer to proceed; it is unnecessary that any order aside from the decree should issue. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

An officer's authority to sell land on foreclosure arises from the decree of sale, and not from any so-called "order of sale". If an "order of sale", containing a copy of the decree, is issued to the Sheriff, any errors in such order, either as to the style of process or otherwise, are immaterial, and should be disregarded. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

Writ of Execution Not Required: A court of equity has inherent power to order a sale of mortgaged property without issuing a formal Writ of Execution. Thomas v. Thomas, 44 M 102, 119 P 283 (1911).

REMEDIES

Fair Market Value of Property Subject to Sheriff's Sale Determinable Notwithstanding Pendency of Litigation: First Western Federal Savings Bank foreclosed on a deed of trust securing Lence's condominium for nonpayment of mortgage and obtained a judgment from the District Court declaring that a deficiency judgment was available to First Western. Lence claimed that the District Court erred in refusing to delay the Sheriff's sale until the completion of certain federal court litigation over owners' access to resort facilities. The Supreme Court held that there was no reason to delay the sale, inasmuch as determination of the value of the property was the job of the appraiser. The Supreme Court also said that there was no reason in law or equity to further delay the mortgagee's right of foreclosure and sale, inasmuch as Lence had been in default since 1989. First W. Fed. Sav. Bank v. Lence, 255 M 7, 839 P2d 1277, 49 St. Rep. 857 (1992).

Exhaustion of Collateral Prior to Setoff — "One-Action Rule" Inapplicable to Contracts for Deed: In deciding whether a bank must first exhaust its collateral before it can exercise its right to setoff to recover a matured debt secured by the collateral, the Supreme Court cited Glacier Campground v. Wild Rivers, Inc., 182 M 389, 597 P2d 689 (1978), in holding that the "one-action rule" applying to notes secured by mortgages on real property does not apply to contracts for deed. Once payment was overdue, nothing in the law required the bank to wait until the contract for deed was canceled before it had a right of setoff. Rather, the bank could pursue any legal means, including setoff, even though other remedies lay open under the contract for deed. Victor Werlhof Aviation Ins. v. Farmers St. Bank, 237 M 51, 771 P2d 962, 46 St. Rep. 613 (1989). See also FDIC v. Shoop, 2 F3d 948 (9th Cir. 1993).

Deficiency Judgment:

A lender, electing to foreclose on its security under a trust deed by judicial procedure, is not entitled to remedies inconsistent with the Small Tract Financing Act of Montana. Specifically, the lender may not recover a deficiency judgment against the borrower, and the borrower has no right of redemption as is accorded in a judicial foreclosure of a conventional mortgage. First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203, 44 St. Rep. 451 (1987).

The purpose of this section is to require the mortgagee to bring one foreclosure action to enforce "any right" protected by the mortgage. If the price bid in at foreclosure is insufficient to reimburse the mortgagee, a deficiency judgment may be entered against the mortgagor for the balance due and may be enforced by a lien upon the real property of the mortgagor only. Stallings v. Erwin, 148 M 227, 419 P2d 480 (1966).

Where an equally liable defendant was a nonresident and personal service was impossible, rendering a deficiency judgment impossible, the judgment in the foreclosure suit did not extinguish the debt. Therefore, an action against the nonresident on one of the unpaid notes was properly maintainable and did not constitute a splitting of the creditor's cause of action. Lepper v. Jackson, 102 M 259, 57 P2d 768 (1936).

When, by election, a judgment creditor takes a deficiency judgment against one of two joint defendants both subject to the personal jurisdiction of the court, without in any way preserving his right as against the other defendant against whom he takes only a foreclosure, the judgment creditor waives his rights with respect to the second defendant. Subsequent action against the second defendant is barred by the deficiency judgment. Lepper v. Jackson, 102 M 259, 57 P2d 768 (1936).

A mortgage on real property was foreclosed and the property sold. The price received at the foreclosure sale was not sufficient to satisfy the debt, and a deficiency judgment could not be entered because the mortgagor was served by publication. Therefore the debt afforded grounds for a separate action. Craig v. Burns, 65 M 550, 212 P 856 (1923).

A deficiency judgment may be properly entered against the grantor in a deed of trust given to secure the payment of a promissory note, whether or not the deed itself specifically provides for entry of a deficiency judgment. First Nat'l Bank of Butte v. Pardee, 16 M 390, 41 P 77 (1895), followed in Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608, 46 St. Rep. 1661 (1989).

Writ of Assistance — No Dependence on Confirmation of Foreclosure: The issuance of a Writ of Assistance is not dependent on judicial confirmation of a foreclosure sale. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Heidema, 224 M 64, 727 P2d 1336, 43 St. Rep. 2020 (1986), followed in Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Bratsky Farms, 238 M 398, 778 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 1366 (1989).

Foreclosure on Trust Indenture — Order of Sale Upheld When Debtor Failed to Demand Specific Order: In an action by a bank to foreclose a trust indenture secured by the mortgagor's residence and separate commercial property, sale of the residential property first was upheld when the debtor did not exercise her right to determine the order of the sale. It is a proper election for a debtor at the time of the sale to demand a specific order in which separate parcels are to be sold. However, when the debtor acquiesced in the order of the sale and deferred to the discretionary authority of the trustee, the order of sale will be upheld. First Nat'l Bank v. Powell, 212 M 468, 689 P2d 255, 41 St. Rep. 1870 (1984).

Foreclosure of Mortgage Securing Note — Payment to Holder Required: The Dahls executed a note to Sythe and also executed a real estate mortgage in Sythe's favor. The note was placed in an escrow account in the Culbertson State Bank, and the bank was designated as the place where payment was to be made. Sythe assigned the note to the bank as security for a note obtained by him. Sythe later gave the bank a written assignment of the mortgage. Defendant Dahl was given written notice of this assignment. The bank did not receive any payments from Sythe on his notes or from Dahl on the note assigned to the bank. The bank brought an action for the foreclosure of the mortgage against Dahl. Dahl contended that the note was discharged because paid in full, with payments being made to Sythe. The bank was never able to make service of process on Sythe. The bank was a "holder" of the note since it was in possession of the note endorsed by Sythe. As a holder and having produced the note, the bank was entitled to recover unless the defendant established a defense. Defendant's sole defense was that he had paid the note to Sythe. The defense of payment only discharges the maker's liability on the instrument if payment is made to the holder. Defendant never attempted to prove payment to the holder. Since the bank was the holder of the note and a valid assignee of the mortgage securing the note, it was entitled to a decree of foreclosure. Culbertson St. Bank v. Dahl, 190 M 33, 617 P2d 1295, 37 St. Rep. 1752 (1980).

Writ of Assistance: The Writ of Assistance, employed in mortgage foreclosure actions, issues as an aid in carrying out the decree of sale and is not governed in its issuance by the law on executions, as is the Writ of Possession. Dodd v. Simon, 113 M 536, 129 P2d 224 (1942).

Contract for Sale Not a Mortgage:

This section applies only to actions for the recovery of debts or the enforcement of rights secured by a mortgage, or what amounts to a mortgage in law, and has no application to an action for the cancellation of a land contract brought by the vendor. White v. Jewett, 106 M 416, 78 P2d 85 (1938).

A contract of sale which, among other things, provided that time should be of the essence, that the vendors could, at their option, terminate the contract for failure on the part of the vendee to comply strictly with its terms, that, upon such termination, the property involved and all payments made by the vendee would be the property of the vendors, and that the vendee would not have a right of recovery, was not a mortgage. Arnold v. Fraser, 43 M 540, 117 P 1064 (1911). See also Cook-Reynolds Co. v. Chipman, 47 M 289, 133 P 694 (1913).

Failure of Security:

This section does not prohibit a personal action when the security given the creditor has become valueless without any fault on his part. Nor is it necessary for him to foreclose his mortgage in order to prove that his security has become valueless. He may prove the value of the security in any way possible. Further, in an action on the debt, the creditor may secure an attachment under the provisions of 27-18-201. Bailey v. Hansen, 105 M 552, 74 P2d 438 (1937), followed in FDIC v. Shoop, 2 F3d 948 (9th Cir. 1993).

The purpose of this section is to require mortgagees to exhaust their security before having recourse to the general assets of the debtor. However, where the mortgagee has lost his security in any manner, other than deliberately parting with it for the purpose of evading the provisions of the section, he may proceed against the mortgagor on the debt. Bailey v. Hansen, 105 M 552, 74 P2d 438 (1937); Lepper v. Jackson, 102 M 259, 57 P2d 768 (1936); Leffek v. Luedeman, 95 M 457, 27 P2d 511, 91 ALR 286 (1933).

A mortgagee whose mortgage was rendered invalid for failure to file a renewal affidavit but whose debt has not become barred by the general Statute of Limitations may proceed against the mortgagor's administrator on the debt. The mortgagee is entitled to a judgment adjudicating the debt as a valid claim against the estate payable in due course of administration. Leffek v. Luedeman, 95 M 457, 27 P2d 511, 91 ALR 286 (1933).

Plaintiff sued defendant on a promissory note, alleging that the note had been secured by a chattel mortgage but that defendant had sold the secured property without plaintiff's knowledge or consent. It was proper to permit plaintiff to introduce testimony that the mortgage had become valueless without any fault on his part. Vande Veegaete v. Vande Veegaete, 75 M 52, 243 P 1082 (1925).

When a note was secured by a second mortgage, which has become worthless because of foreclosure of the first mortgage and expiration of the time of redemption, the complaint in an action on such note need not refer to such mortgage or loss of security. Brophy v. Downey, 26 M 252, 67 P 312 (1902).

Exhaustion of Security Required Before Taking Other Recourse:

When there has been an improper sale of mortgaged property, the mortgagee still has security for the indebtedness and must resort to it in satisfaction of his claim. Advance-Rumely Thresher Co. v. Kruger, 93 M 66, 16 P2d 1102, 85 ALR 1053 (1932).

The word "secured" does not mean that the security must be adequate to satisfy the debt. As long as the security has value, the mortgagee must proceed according to this section. The fact that the mortgagor caused the security to become encumbered does not estop him from asserting that the mortgagee is barred by this section from maintaining a personal action against him. Barth v. Ely, 85 M 310, 278 P 1002 (1929).

In a suit on a promissory note, the defendant's answer that the plaintiff has taken "security" for the payment of the note does not bar the action when it does not appear from the answer that the security is in the form of a mortgage or the equivalent of a mortgage. The fact that the obligation sued upon is secured by a mortgage or its equivalent is a matter of defense, and the burden rests upon the defendant to make that appear by his pleading. St. Sav. Bank v. Albertson, 39 M 414, 102 P 692 (1909).

The obvious purpose of this section is to compel one who has taken a special lien to secure his debt to exhaust his security before having recourse to the general assets of the debtor. St. Sav. Bank v. Albertson, 39 M 414, 102 P 692 (1909).

A surety on a promissory note whose liability has been secured by a chattel mortgage cannot, upon being obliged to pay the note, waive the mortgage security and proceed by attachment against his principals to recover the debt but must foreclose the mortgage as required by this section. The decision in this case does not affect the question of enforcing the debt by exercising a power of sale contained in the mortgage. Largey v. Chapman, 18 M 563, 46 P 808 (1896), explained in Bailey v. Hansen, 105 M 552, 74 P2d 438 (1937).

Alternative Remedies:

When the pleadings in an action on a promissory note do not disclose that plaintiff has security for the debt, a personal action may be maintained; in such a case the provision that foreclosure is the only action for the recovery of a debt secured by mortgage does not apply. Richardson v. Lloyd, 90 M 127, 300 P 254 (1931).

This section prohibits any action other than that provided by statute for the foreclosure of the mortgage. The creditor cannot waive the mortgage and sue on the debt. Section 71-3-110, providing that the existence of a lien as security for the performance of an obligation does not affect the right of the creditor to enforce the obligation without regard to the lien, has reference to liens other than mortgage liens. Barth v. Ely, 85 M 310, 278 P 1002 (1929).

While 71-3-110 appeared in the Civil Code, and this section in the Code of Civil Procedure, R.C.M. 1921, both referring to the right of creditors to enforce obligations secured by lien, they must be considered to have been passed at the same time, and it must be presumed that it was intended that both should be operative, and each should govern as to the title in which it is found, and courts must construe them together and reconcile them, if possible. Barth v. Ely, 85 M 310, 278 P 1002 (1929).

When, in an action to foreclose a first mortgage, the mortgagee in a second mortgage is made a defendant and defaults, such action does not defeat the right of his assignee of the note to recover thereon after the time to redeem the premises from the foreclosure sale has expired. Brophy v. Downey, 26 M 252, 67 P 312 (1902).

The holder of a note secured by a second mortgage is not required to foreclose during the period of redemption after the first mortgage has been foreclosed and the property sold thereunder, but he may wait until such period has expired and his lien is determined, and then sue on the note. Brophy v. Downey, 26 M 252, 67 P 312 (1902), explained in Barth v. Ely, 85 M 310, 278 P 1002 (1929).

PARTIES TO FORECLOSURE

Tax Lien: When, subsequent to purchase of tax certificates, mortgagee foreclosed the mortgage, the foreclosure sale cut off any lien asserted by mortgagee for taxes paid even though the mortgage permitted mortgagee to pay taxes and collect the same upon foreclosure. A mortgagee who pays taxes on the mortgaged property prior to foreclosure does not acquire a distinct and separate lien on the property which survives the foreclosure sale. Stallings v. Erwin, 148 M 227, 419 P2d 480 (1966).

Unrecorded Conveyances: Under this section a grantee holding an unrecorded conveyance from or under the mortgagor at the commencement of a foreclosure suit need not be made a party to that suit, and the proceedings and the judgment rendered therein are as conclusive against such grantee as if he had been made a party. West v. Capital Trust & Sav. Bank, 113 M 130, 124 P2d 572 (1942).

Void Mortgage: When a mortgage is held void as to all the parties against whom it was attempted to be foreclosed, the foreclosure sale is equally void as to all the parties. Gaer v. Bank of Baker, 113 M 116, 122 P2d 828 (1942).

Creditor Attacking Mortgage: When a general creditor of a probate estate seeks to set aside a mortgage foreclosure decree on the basis of fraud, before he can be granted any relief, he must secure a lien by some process upon the property involved. A general creditor cannot assert the invalidity of a mortgage unless he has fastened a lien on the mortgaged property. Missoula Trust & Sav. Bank v. Boos, 106 M 294, 77 P2d 385 (1938).

Lessee Bound by Decree: A farm tenant holding under an unrecorded oral lease was bound, under this section, by the decree of foreclosure even though he was not a party to the action. The Writ of Assistance lay to oust him from possession unless he acquired a new and independent right after rendition of the decree. State ex rel. Goodhue County Nat'l Bank v. District Court, 96 M 600, 31 P2d 837 (1934).

Second Mortgagees Unnecessary Parties to Action: Where a second mortgage of church property did not purport to be the deed of the corporation but was executed by the president and secretary of the trustees individually and duly recorded, it was not necessary to make the second mortgagees parties to an action to foreclose a prior mortgage on the church property, in order to bar their equitable right to redeem. Shackleton v. Allen Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church, 25 M 421, 65 P 428 (1901).

Acceleration and Immediate Possession Clauses:

When a chattel mortgage contains a clause giving to the mortgagee the right to declare the debt due and payable before the due date under certain circumstances and the power to take possession of the property and sell it, concluding that the power thus conferred shall be in addition to and not in substitution of the right of foreclosure, it is evidence of the intention of the parties that the mortgagee has the right of election granted by this section to proceed either by foreclosure or under the above provision of the mortgage. Bice v. Daffern, 88 M 479, 293 P 433 (1930).

When the parties to a real estate mortgage had contracted that upon the mortgagor's default the mortgagee could at his option declare the entire indebtedness due and payable without notice, foreclose by judicial proceedings, or sell the premises according to law, and should be entitled to immediate possession and receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof, he was entitled to possession upon condition broken without foreclosure and sale. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Jensen, 74 M 70, 237 P 518 (1925), distinguished in Sharp Bros., Inc. v. Bartlett, 76 M 415, 248 P 199 (1926), Morton v. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co., 80 M 593, 261 P 278 (1927), and First Nat'l Corp. v. Perrine, 99 M 454, 43 P2d 1073 (1935).

Breach of Obligation — Note Incorporating Mortgage: In determining whether there has been a breach of an obligation for which a mortgage was given as security, within the meaning of this section, prescribing how a power of sale conferred by the mortgage may be executed, the note and mortgage must be read together and the stipulation in the mortgage must be construed as entering into and becoming a part of the note. Bice v. Daffern, 88 M 479, 293 P 433 (1930).

Mortgagee as Purchaser: A mortgagee cannot become a purchaser at a summary sale of property conducted by himself under a power of sale contained in the mortgage. Union Cent. Life Ins. Co. v. Jensen, 74 M 70, 237 P 518 (1925).

Trust Deed Executed by Attorney in Fact: An attorney in fact, under a general power of attorney to sell, convey, and mortgage the grantor's property, may secure the payment of his grantor's debt by executing a trust deed conveying the grantor's property and authorizing the trustee or his successor in trust to sell the same in case of nonpayment of the indebtedness. Muth v. Goddard, 28 M 237, 72 P 621 (1903).

No Error in Ordering Foreclosure of Personal Real Property for Failure to Repay Business Loans — Deficiency Judgment Proper: Defendants, husband and wife, failed to make scheduled payments on two bank loans, and the bank filed for foreclosure of two deeds of trust. Defendants were in the process of obtaining a divorce. The husband failed to respond to the complaint, and a default judgment was entered against him. The District Court then granted summary judgment against the wife, ordered foreclosure and sale of the collateral real property, and entered a deficiency judgment holding the wife responsible for any deficiency following sale of the real property. The wife appealed on grounds that the District Court erroneously granted summary judgment by: (1) determining that any oral representations made by bank agents were merged into written documents; (2) holding that the bank was entitled to a deficiency judgment; and (3) finding that the bank had no fiduciary duty to the wife. The Supreme Court considered each argument in turn and affirmed. First, the written loan agreements expressed the entire agreement between the parties, and any alleged oral understandings that were not reduced to writing were invalid. Second, although a deficiency judgment may not issue if the secured property is a single-family residence, in this case, the security agreements provided that the collateral property be used for business purposes, so even though the property was defendants' primary residence, the trust indenture was not strictly residential, and the District Court did not err in ordering a deficiency judgment. Third, as stated in Coles Dept. Store v. First Bank, 240 M 226, 783 P2d 932 (1989), to establish a fiduciary relationship, in addition to a long history of bank dealings, a bank must act in some capacity other than that common in the usual arm's-length debtor-creditor relationship. Here, no prior banking relationship existed between the parties, and given the wife's extensive legal and marketing background, she would not have needed to rely on the bank to interpret the loan documents for her or to act as her adviser, so no fiduciary relationship or duty existed. First Sec. Bank v. Abel, 2008 MT 161, 343 M 313, 184 P3d 318 (2008), following First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203 (1987), and Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608 (1989).

Deficiency Judgment Available in Foreclosure on Recreational Home Condominium: First Western Federal Savings Bank foreclosed on a deed of trust securing Lence's condominium for nonpayment of mortgage and obtained a judgment from the District Court declaring that a deficiency judgment was available to First Western. The Supreme Court affirmed, based on its prior opinions in First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203 (1987), and First Fed. Sav. & Loan v. Anderson, 238 M 296, 777 P2d 1281 (1989). The rulings that the Small Tract Financing Act of Montana was not intended to apply the remedy of deficiency judgment trust deeds securing owner-occupied, single-family residences did not apply to Lence's condominium. The condominium was not Lence's primary residence because it was occupied by him only in the summers, and the Act was not intended by the Legislature to apply to this type of property. First W. Fed. Sav. Bank v. Lence, 255 M 7, 839 P2d 1277, 49 St. Rep. 857 (1992).

Fair Market Value of Property Subject to Sheriff's Sale Determinable Notwithstanding Pendency of Litigation: First Western Federal Savings Bank foreclosed on a deed of trust securing Lence's condominium for nonpayment of mortgage and obtained a judgment from the District Court declaring that a deficiency judgment was available to First Western. Lence claimed that the District Court erred in refusing to delay the Sheriff's sale until the completion of certain federal court litigation over owners' access to resort facilities. The Supreme Court held that there was no reason to delay the sale, inasmuch as determination of the value of the property was the job of the appraiser. The Supreme Court also said that there was no reason in law or equity to further delay the mortgagee's right of foreclosure and sale, inasmuch as Lence had been in default since 1989. First W. Fed. Sav. Bank v. Lence, 255 M 7, 839 P2d 1277, 49 St. Rep. 857 (1992).

Determination of "Fair Market" Value in Mortgage Foreclosure: The Supreme Court, exercising its equity jurisdiction, examined the size of a deficiency judgment in relation to the original note to determine whether after foreclosure a judgment debtor was also liable for the deficiency judgment. The case was remanded to the District Court to determine the fair market value of the property at the time of the Sheriff's sale. "Fair market" is the intrinsic value of the real property with its improvements at the time of sale under judicial foreclosure, without consideration of the impact of foreclosure proceedings on the fair market value. Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608, 46 St. Rep. 1661 (1989). The District Court judgment valuing the foreclosed property at $1.1 million and awarding no interest on the loan was affirmed in Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 250 M 175, 819 P2d 158, 48 St. Rep. 724 (1991), followed in Bank of Baker v. Mikelson Land Co., 1999 MT 76, 294 M 64, 979 P2d 180, 56 St. Rep. 315 (1999).

Combining Properties for Sale — Validity of Notice: When the parties to two mortgages executed at the same time were the same, the fact that the property covered by both was included in one sale did not affect the validity of the notice of sale or the sale. First Nat'l Corp. v. Perrine, 99 M 454, 43 P2d 1073 (1935).

Erroneous Description in Notice: Erroneous inclusion of a tract of land owned by one other than the mortgagor in a notice of sale under a power contained in the mortgage did not vitiate the sale as to the mortgagor, whose property covered by the mortgage was properly described in the notice. First Nat'l Corp. v. Perrine, 99 M 454, 43 P2d 1073 (1935).

Jurisdictional Defect When Notice Improper: The notice of sale of mortgaged realty under a power of sale in the mortgage on default of the mortgagor is jurisdictional; unless the requirements of this section were met, a sale made is void. When notice is given by publication, posting of the notice is not required by this section. First Nat'l Corp. v. Perrine, 99 M 454, 43 P2d 1073 (1935).

Time of Sale Relative to Publication: A notice of the type required by this section was published in a local weekly newspaper for 4 consecutive weeks, beginning with March 11 and ending on April 1; the sale was had on April 15. Although only 15 days had elapsed between the last publication and the sale, the first publication was as much notice as the last, and therefore the sale had been advertised at least 30 days before the sale, rendering the notice sufficient. First Nat'l Corp. v. Perrine, 99 M 454, 43 P2d 1073 (1935).

71-1-228. Rights of redemption applicable.

Case Notes

Person Not in Residence on Mortgaged Property Not Entitled to Possession During Statutory Redemption Period: Halseth defaulted on several promissory notes, so Independence Bank filed a foreclosure action on Halseth's property in Blaine County. At trial, Halseth contended that because he was currently residing on the property, he was entitled to possession of the property during the 1-year redemption period following the foreclosure sale. Although Halseth maintained a residence in Harlem, he testified that he had moved a camper trailer to the Blaine County property for the sole purpose of establishing his right to retain the property during the redemption period. The District Court applied the definition of residence in 1-1-215, and determined that Halseth resided in Harlem, not on the Blaine County property, and that he was therefore not entitled to retain possession during the redemption period. Halseth appealed. The Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's findings. Even though he moved the camper trailer to Blaine County, Halseth retained ties to the Harlem residence and did not intend to relinquish it. Absent a demonstration of the union of act and intent necessary to change permanent residence from Harlem to Blaine County, Halseth could not be said to reside at the Blaine County property and was not entitled to retain possession of the property during the redemption period. Independence Bank v. Halseth, 2002 MT 100, 309 M 398, 46 P3d 657 (2002).

Foreclosure Sale Order Not Violative of Conveyance Restriction or Redemption Right: Defendant contended the wording of an order of sale in a foreclosure proceeding, stating that defendants "have no lien, right, title, estate, claim, or interest on or to the mortgaged property, whether real, personal, or mixed hereinafter described", incorrectly severed his interest in the land prior to foreclosure sale and severely hindered his attempts to sell the land and satisfy the promissory note. However, the language did not violate 71-1-202 because it did not enable the mortgage owner to recover possession without a foreclosure and sale. Further, the statement did not affect the defendant's 1-year statutory right of redemption. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Slack, 232 M 250, 756 P2d 1140, 45 St. Rep. 1028 (1988).

Express Waiver of Redemption Rights in Federal Loan Contract: Although the mortgagors' Small Business Administration (SBA) loan contained an express waiver of redemption rights, the mortgagors were entitled to redeem property purchased by the SBA at a mortgage foreclosure sale pursuant to 71-3-109. That statute provides that all contracts in restraint of the right of redemption from a lien are void. The balance between federal and state law must be struck in favor of Montana's interest in protecting its debtors. U.S. v. Pastos, 781 F2d 747 (9th Cir. 1986).

Mortgage Terminated by Quitclaim Deed — Foreclosure Procedure Not Required: Plaintiff, d/b/a Starhaven Ranch, Ltd., purchased a ranch on a contract for deed from Crofts. Crofts had purchased the land on a contract basis from Clarnos. Crofts assigned their purchasers' interest in the contract to defendant. Crofts defaulted on a contract provision requiring them to obtain grazing permits and on their contract with Clarnos. Starhaven fell in default on its final downpayment. Crofts fell in default on the loan with defendant. The bank recorded the quitclaim deed from Crofts. The bank asserted it succeeded to the rights of the Croft-Starhaven contract and took action against Starhaven. Crofts disappeared. Starhaven made payment on the Clarno-Croft contract to prevent Clarnos from declaring a forfeiture. The bank asserted absolute ownership rights against Starhaven. The bank obtained the quitclaim deed Starhaven had executed to Crofts and recorded it. The bank then sent Starhaven a notice to vacate, triggering the proceedings. The trial court held the bank had succeeded to all Crofts' interest in the property when it obtained and recorded the assignment. The court then concluded the bank could assert the default provisions of the Croft-Starhaven contract and was entitled to forfeiture. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the assignment as collateral for a loan created a security interest only—in this case a mortgage—and mortgage foreclosure proceedings were the proper method for the bank to pursue its remedies. On rehearing, the court upheld the trial court, finding that the mortgagors waived their right to foreclosure proceedings by filing a quitclaim deed to defendant bank. Waiver of the right to foreclosure includes consent to the possession of the mortgagee and the waiver of the equity of redemption. The bank was entitled under the Croft-Starhaven contract to require Starhaven's forfeiture upon defaulting on the contract payments, and Starhaven was not entitled to foreclosure proceedings. Erickson v. First Nat'l Bank, 215 M 350, 697 P2d 1332, 42 St. Rep. 423 (1985).

Case Notes

Person Not in Residence on Mortgaged Property Not Entitled to Possession During Statutory Redemption Period: Halseth defaulted on several promissory notes, so Independence Bank filed a foreclosure action on Halseth's property in Blaine County. At trial, Halseth contended that because he was currently residing on the property, he was entitled to possession of the property during the 1-year redemption period following the foreclosure sale. Although Halseth maintained a residence in Harlem, he testified that he had moved a camper trailer to the Blaine County property for the sole purpose of establishing his right to retain the property during the redemption period. The District Court applied the definition of residence in 1-1-215, and determined that Halseth resided in Harlem, not on the Blaine County property, and that he was therefore not entitled to retain possession during the redemption period. Halseth appealed. The Supreme Court agreed with the District Court's findings. Even though he moved the camper trailer to Blaine County, Halseth retained ties to the Harlem residence and did not intend to relinquish it. Absent a demonstration of the union of act and intent necessary to change permanent residence from Harlem to Blaine County, Halseth could not be said to reside at the Blaine County property and was not entitled to retain possession of the property during the redemption period. Independence Bank v. Halseth, 2002 MT 100, 309 M 398, 46 P3d 657 (2002).

Residence by Relative Not Substitute for Personal Residence: DeSaye appealed the trial court's ruling that he was not entitled to possession of his foreclosed farm during the statutory redemption period. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that DeSaye had to personally reside on the farm to be entitled to possession and could not use his son's residence on the farm to meet the residency requirement. Interstate Prod. Credit Ass'n v. DeSaye, 250 M 320, 820 P2d 1285, 48 St. Rep. 986 (1991), followed in Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Occupation of Foreclosed Land as Home — Payment of Rents and Profits Not Required: Defendants occupied the land that was foreclosed on as their home. To require that they pay rent or profits from the land diminished their unqualified right to possession under 25-13-821 and this section in a way that was not provided for by the Legislature. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Snider, 247 M 508, 808 P2d 475, 48 St. Rep. 285 (1991), distinguishing Citizens' Nat'l Bank v. W. Loan & Bldg. Co., 64 M 40, 208 P 893 (1922), followed in Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 254 M 208, 835 P2d 770, 49 St. Rep. 703 (1992), and distinguished in Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Mortgage Terminated by Quitclaim Deed — Foreclosure Procedure Not Required: Plaintiff, d/b/a Starhaven Ranch, Ltd., purchased a ranch on a contract for deed from Crofts. Crofts had purchased the land on a contract basis from Clarnos. Crofts assigned their purchasers' interest in the contract to defendant. Crofts defaulted on a contract provision requiring them to obtain grazing permits and on their contract with Clarnos. Starhaven fell in default on its final downpayment. Crofts fell in default on the loan with defendant. The bank recorded the quitclaim deed from Crofts. The bank asserted it succeeded to the rights of the Croft-Starhaven contract and took action against Starhaven. Crofts disappeared. Starhaven made payment on the Clarno-Croft contract to prevent Clarnos from declaring a forfeiture. The bank asserted absolute ownership rights against Starhaven. The bank obtained the quitclaim deed Starhaven had executed to Crofts and recorded it. The bank then sent Starhaven a notice to vacate, triggering the proceedings. The trial court held the bank had succeeded to all Crofts' interest in the property when it obtained and recorded the assignment. The court then concluded the bank could assert the default provisions of the Croft-Starhaven contract and was entitled to forfeiture. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the assignment as collateral for a loan created a security interest only—in this case a mortgage—and mortgage foreclosure proceedings were the proper method for the bank to pursue its remedies. On rehearing, the court upheld the trial court, finding that the mortgagors waived their right to foreclosure proceedings by filing a quitclaim deed to defendant bank. Waiver of the right to foreclosure includes consent to the possession of the mortgagee and the waiver of the equity of redemption. The bank was entitled under the Croft-Starhaven contract to require Starhaven's forfeiture upon defaulting on the contract payments, and Starhaven was not entitled to foreclosure proceedings. Erickson v. First Nat'l Bank, 215 M 350, 697 P2d 1332, 42 St. Rep. 423 (1985).

Vendee of Mortgagor: Purchasers who took premises subject to preexisting mortgage, and who had not assumed payment of mortgage, even though occupying premises as their home at time of foreclosure, were not "execution debtors" within the meaning of the statute and were not entitled to possession of premises during 1-year period of redemption. First Nat'l Bank of Circle v. Hastetter, 149 M 142, 423 P2d 306 (1967).

Premises Not Occupied as Home:

The mortgagor's right of possession during the period of redemption does not apply unless the debtor occupies the premises as a home for himself and family, and does not apply to a business establishment. Rock Island Plow Co. v. Cut Bank Implement Co., 101 M 117, 53 P2d 116 (1935).

The purchaser at a sale of realty under foreclosure, as against the judgment debtor, is entitled to possession during the period of redemption if the premises are not occupied by the debtor as a home for himself and his family. Lepper v. Home Ranch Co., 90 M 558, 4 P2d 722 (1931); Kester v. Amon, 81 M 1, 261 P 288 (1927); State ex rel. Flowerree v. District Court, 71 M 89, 227 P 579 (1924); Dyer v. Schmidt, 67 M 6, 213 P 1117 (1923); Citizens' Nat'l Bank of Laurel v. W. Loan & Bldg. Co., 64 M 40, 208 P 893 (1922).

Change of Possession: The right granted by this section to remain in possession during the period of redemption is exempt from forced sale; the right, however, is lost if there is a change of possession. U.S. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Stevens, 93 M 11, 17 P2d 62 (1932).

Refusal of District Court to Invoke Equitable Power to Require Payment of Past-Due Monthly Payments in Light of Nonjudicial Foreclosure Proceedings — Affirmed: Plaintiff was delinquent in making monthly payments on a trailer park. Defendant estate initiated a nonjudicial foreclosure against plaintiff. The trust indenture under which plaintiff secured financing allowed the estate to issue a notice of trustee sale if plaintiff defaulted. After the notice of trustee sale was recorded, foreclosure proceedings were stayed through an injunction. The injunction was lifted following trial, and the estate then requested that the District Court use its equitable and contempt powers to compel plaintiff to pay the past-due payments or go to jail if plaintiff refused. The District Court declined, explaining that the estate was entitled to the amount plaintiff provided as security when the injunction was issued and that the estate could resume the nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings or initiate judicial foreclosure proceedings for further remedy. By using this approach, the District Court attempted to return the parties to the positions held when the injunction was issued rather than putting the estate in a better position. The Supreme Court affirmed. Because the estate as the seller financed the sale of the property to plaintiff, the estate was acting as a purchase money mortgagee and thus was not entitled to a deficiency judgment upon foreclosure of the property. Therefore, the District Court did not err in releasing the bond and returning the parties to the trustee sale position. The estate's request for further equitable relief was declined. Deschamps v. Treasure St. Trailer Ct., Ltd., 2010 MT 74, 356 Mont. 1, 230 P.3d 800.

Deficiency Judgment Not Allowed on Vendor Foreclosure of Purchase Money Mortgage: This section applies only to vendors of real property who take back a mortgage for part of the purchase price of real property and does not authorize a vendor to receive a deficiency judgment on the foreclosure of a purchase money mortgage. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Hill, 266 M 258, 879 P2d 1158, 50 St. Rep. 726 (1993).

Statute Inapplicable When Foreclosure Unavailable to Junior Mortgagee: McGregors sold 255 acres of irrigated farmland to Madsens for $510,000 on a contract for deed, which included a $235,000 balloon payment 3 years after the sale. When Madsens borrowed $200,000 from Equitable Life Assurance Society (Equitable) for the balloon payment, McGregors agreed to subordinate their interest to Equitable, accepting a second mortgage. The balance remaining pursuant to the contract for deed was converted into a promissory note and mortgage in favor of McGregors. Following default by Madsens on payments to both Equitable and McGregors, Equitable foreclosed. McGregors also initiated a foreclosure action, but after Equitable's foreclosure, they sought instead to sue Madsens on the promissory note. Madsens argued that McGregors' mortgage was a purchase money mortgage to secure the balance of the purchase price and that this section prevented McGregors from suing on the note. However, the foreclosure action and sale by Equitable, through no fault of McGregors, extinguished McGregors' security interest in the land. Inasmuch as foreclosure of the mortgage was unavailable to McGregors, they did not come under the prohibition of this section and the District Court properly awarded McGregors a money judgment on the note. McGregor v. Madsen, 253 M 210, 832 P2d 779, 49 St. Rep. 483 (1992).

Foreclosure of First Lien — Second Lienholder's Direct Action on Note — Summary Judgment: A second lienholder whose lien is extinguished by the foreclosure of a first lien may maintain a direct action on the note. The bank, which held a promissory note secured by a junior trust indenture, was entitled to sue directly on the note after foreclosure by the holder of the senior trust indenture. The statutory prohibitions against deficiency judgments after foreclosure upon a note secured by a trust indenture apply only to the foreclosing creditor. They do not apply to a creditor holding a note that is no longer secured because of a foreclosure action taken by another creditor possessing a first trust deed. Summary judgment for the bank was proper when there was no genuine issue of any material fact and when the bank was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. First Interstate Bank of Kalispell v. Wann, 235 M 111, 765 P2d 749, 45 St. Rep. 2232 (1988).

What Constitutes Purchase Money Mortgage: Respondent purchased a tract of land. After a complicated series of conveyances, respondent, as security for a loan, granted a mortgage that covered only a portion of the original tract purchased. The mortgage was granted by respondent 8 months after the tract had been conveyed to the respondent and was granted to parties who were not the sellers of the tract. The court found the evidence indicated the mortgage was given to secure payment of the purchase price of the original tract, was not given to secure any new indebtedness, and was therefore a purchase money mortgage. A purchase money mortgage under this section is not required to be issued simultaneously with the conveyance of the property on which it is given. (Section 71-3-114 was determined to be inapplicable to this case.) Swenson v. Ramage, 234 M 188, 762 P2d 851, 45 St. Rep. 1832 (1988).

Mortgage Foreclosure Executed to Secure Loan — Deficiency Judgment Not Prohibited: Defendant relied on this section in arguing that a deficiency judgment was not proper because the mortgage was a purchase money mortgage. However, the section did not apply because the plaintiff insurance company was not the vendor of the property and foreclosure was not executed to satisfy the balance of the purchase price. Rather, the company assumed the status of mortgagee to secure its loan, and the mortgage foreclosure was executed to satisfy the amount owing on the promissory note. A deficiency judgment was not prohibited under these circumstances. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Slack, 232 M 250, 756 P2d 1140, 45 St. Rep. 1028 (1988), followed in Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608, 46 St. Rep. 1661 (1989), and in First Fed. S&L Ass'n of Missoula v. Anderson, 238 M 296, 777 P2d 1281, 46 St. Rep. 1280 (1989).

Contract for Deed Not a Purchase Money Mortgage: A contract for deed and a purchase money mortgage are not one and the same thing with two different names. They are based upon two distinct legal theories. Glacier Campground v. Wild Rivers, Inc., 182 M 389, 597 P2d 689 (1978), followed in Aveco Properties, Inc. v. Nicholson, 229 M 417, 747 P2d 1358, 44 St. Rep. 2098 (1987).

71-1-233. Attorney's fee on foreclosure.

Case Notes

Attorney Fees Payable When Possession Resolved by Stipulation: After property was purchased at a foreclosure sale, purchaser moved for a writ of assistance because debtor did not immediately vacate the property. The motion included a request for attorney fees. The possession dispute was later settled by stipulation, which allowed continued possession of the property for a short time. Debtor asserted that because she retained the property until it could be redeemed and sold to a third party, she was the prevailing party and could not be liable for attorney fees. The Supreme Court followed the rationale in Nett v. Stockgrowers Fin. Corp., 84 M 116, 274 P 497 (1929), that the prevailing creditor is entitled to recoup the costs of collection even if the matter never goes to court. The Supreme Court held that it was not error to award attorney fees to the creditor for work performed in connection with the postforeclosure dispute regarding possession when possession was resolved by stipulation, even though the stipulation itself did not provide for the award of fees. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Newton, 252 M 336, 829 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 267 (1992).

Reasonableness of Fees — Fees on Appeal: Based on the record of considerable time and energy spent by a New Mexico bank to foreclose mortgages on Montana land and the complexity and involved nature of the litigation, the award of $50,000 for attorney fees was not unreasonable. The bank is also entitled to its attorney fees on appeal. First Nat'l Bank of Albuquerque v. Quinta Land & Cattle Co., 238 M 335, 779 P2d 48, 46 St. Rep. 1313 (1989).

Determination of Fee — Considerations: In mortgage foreclosure actions, the District Court must allow a reasonable attorney fee. The statute is reciprocal so that a party successfully defending against a foreclosure action is awarded attorney fees. The amount of property involved and the complexity of the case may be considered as important elements in determining the fee. Bermes v. Sylling, 179 M 448, 587 P2d 377 (1978).

Intervenor: Where a party intervened in an action to foreclose mortgage in an effort to have title quieted in his behalf as against both mortgagee and mortgagor, it was error to award intervenor judgment for attorney's fees under this section, since intervenor qualified as neither mortgagee bringing foreclosure action nor as possible successful mortgagor defending such action. Nikles v. Barnes, 153 M 113, 454 P2d 608 (1969).

Priority of Claim:

On foreclosure of mortgage, federal tax lien took priority over attorney's fees allowed under this section, since attorney's lien failed to meet "choate" test at the time the amount of federal taxes owed on the property was fixed. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown v. Tilzey, 238 F. Supp. 750 (D.C. Mont. 1965).

The cost of extending abstract and attorney fees borne by mortgagee seeking foreclosure took priority over federal tax liens, which attached after the mortgage was in default. Streeter Bros. v. Overfelt, 202 F. Supp. 143 (D.C. Mont. 1962).

Deficiency After Foreclosure: The provision for allowance of attorney's fees does not apply to an action in personam on the note after exhaustion of the security. Goggins v. Bookout, 141 M 449, 378 P2d 212 (1963).

Defense Attorney's Fees: This section, making it incumbent upon the District Court in a mortgage foreclosure action to allow a reasonable attorney's fee, applies as well to the fees of defense counsel when the action has been dismissed. Graham v. Superior Mines, 100 M 427, 49 P2d 443 (1935), distinguished in Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999).

Power of Sale in Mortgage Providing for Attorney's Fee: Where a chattel mortgage provides that in case of default in payment of the note secured the mortgagee may have the property sold and out of the proceeds retain a reasonable attorney's fee, the only method of recovering it is by sale. Therefore the mortgagor may not assert that the fee intended was one to be fixed by the court in its discretion on institution of foreclosure proceedings. Nett v. Stockgrowers' Fin. Corp., 84 M 116, 274 P 497 (1929).

Evidence as to Fees: In fixing an attorney's fee in a foreclosure proceeding the District Court may consider the practice of the court and its own knowledge of the usual compensation for such services, and while it also may call to its aid attorneys as expert witnesses, it is not required to make its decision in accordance with their testimony. Bohan v. Harris, 71 M 495, 230 P 586 (1924).

Award of Attorney Fees for Work Performed After Purchase at Foreclosure Sale: Defendant contended that this section precluded an award of attorney fees for postforeclosure legal work because the award would require a second determination of fees in violation of the "one-action" rule of 71-1-222. However, this section merely requires the District Court to act upon the mortgagee's petition for attorney fees before the notice of sale issues and neither expressly prohibits postjudgment attorney fees nor expressly provides that an award of fees earned prior to the foreclosure decree is final and conclusive. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Newton, 252 M 336, 829 P2d 931, 49 St. Rep. 267 (1992).

Small Tract Financing

Part Case Notes

Notice Requirements Not Met — Second Trustee's Sale Appropriate Recourse: When the defendant trustee failed to provide proper notice as required by 71-1-315, the first trustee's sale of the property was null and void as to the plaintiff junior easement holder who had not received notice of the sale. The appropriate recourse was a second trustee's sale where each interest holder who did not previously receive notice was notified and had an opportunity to purchase the subject property. The second trustee's sale effectively foreclosed on the property and extinguished the plaintiff's easement. Terry L. Bell Generations Trust v. Flathead Bank of Bigfork, 2013 MT 152, 370 Mont. 342, 302 P.3d 390.

Deficiency Judgment Available in Foreclosure on Recreational Home Condominium: First Western Federal Savings Bank foreclosed on a deed of trust securing Lence's condominium for nonpayment of mortgage and obtained a judgment from the District Court declaring that a deficiency judgment was available to First Western. The Supreme Court affirmed, based on its prior opinions in First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203 (1987), and First Fed. Sav. & Loan v. Anderson, 238 M 296, 777 P2d 1281 (1989). The rulings that the Small Tract Financing Act of Montana was not intended to apply the remedy of deficiency judgment trust deeds securing owner-occupied, single-family residences did not apply to Lence's condominium. The condominium was not Lence's primary residence because it was occupied by him only in the summers, and the Act was not intended by the Legislature to apply to this type of property. First W. Fed. Sav. Bank v. Lence, 255 M 7, 839 P2d 1277, 49 St. Rep. 857 (1992).

Default on Trust Indenture — Motion for Possession Proper: Ryans contended the District Court erred in granting the motion of the beneficiary of a trust indenture and underlying promissory note for possession of real property following Ryans' default. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting the trust indenture was properly filed, interest was properly transferred, and procedures governing notice, posting, and publication of sale were correctly followed. Citizens St. Bank v. Ryan, 243 M 23, 792 P2d 1116, 47 St. Rep. 1179 (1990).

Constitutionality: The Small Tract Financing Act of Montana, Title 71, ch. 1, part 3, is not unconstitutional on grounds that it is special legislation favoring rural landowners, that its withdrawal of redemption rights and its notice provisions violate due process, or that it provides for statutory power of sale to be read into all agreements using trust indentures even where agreement between parties does not so provide. Trust Indenture Exceeding Statutory Acreage Defective — Equitable Mortgage — Notice: A trust indenture involving 7.61 acres violated the public policy of this state because it exceeded the permitted 3 acres and therefore was not a statutory trust indenture. Electronic Mortgage Tracking Entity Not Beneficiary Under Small Tract Financing Act: The plaintiff homeowners brought suit against several lenders, including Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems (MERS), alleging the lenders lacked the authority to foreclose the plaintiffs' property. The plaintiffs alleged that MERS, which is an electronic mortgage tracking entity, had no authority to assign the plaintiffs' deed of trust to another lender and did not qualify as a beneficiary under the Small Tract Financing Act. The Supreme Court agreed and held that MERS did not constitute a beneficiary under 71-1-303 since MERS held only legal title to the property and received no benefit or secured obligation from the deed of trust. The lenders' argument that MERS constituted a special agent under 28-10-102 was not raised before the District Court and therefore did not qualify for consideration by the Supreme Court on appeal.

The Supreme Court remanded the case for consideration of the agency relationship between MERS and the lenders. Pilgeram v. GreenPoint Mortgage Funding, Inc., 2013 MT 354, 373 Mont. 1, 313 P.3d 839.

Case Notes

No Error in Ordering Foreclosure of Personal Real Property for Failure to Repay Business Loans — Deficiency Judgment Proper: Defendants, husband and wife, failed to make scheduled payments on two bank loans, and the bank filed for foreclosure of two deeds of trust. Defendants were in the process of obtaining a divorce. The husband failed to respond to the complaint, and a default judgment was entered against him. The District Court then granted summary judgment against the wife, ordered foreclosure and sale of the collateral real property, and entered a deficiency judgment holding the wife responsible for any deficiency following sale of the real property. The wife appealed on grounds that the District Court erroneously granted summary judgment by: (1) determining that any oral representations made by bank agents were merged into written documents; (2) holding that the bank was entitled to a deficiency judgment; and (3) finding that the bank had no fiduciary duty to the wife. The Supreme Court considered each argument in turn and affirmed. First, the written loan agreements expressed the entire agreement between the parties, and any alleged oral understandings that were not reduced to writing were invalid. Second, although a deficiency judgment may not issue if the secured property is a single-family residence, in this case, the security agreements provided that the collateral property be used for business purposes, so even though the property was defendants' primary residence, the trust indenture was not strictly residential, and the District Court did not err in ordering a deficiency judgment. Third, as stated in Coles Dept. Store v. First Bank, 240 M 226, 783 P2d 932 (1989), to establish a fiduciary relationship, in addition to a long history of bank dealings, a bank must act in some capacity other than that common in the usual arm's-length debtor-creditor relationship. Here, no prior banking relationship existed between the parties, and given the wife's extensive legal and marketing background, she would not have needed to rely on the bank to interpret the loan documents for her or to act as her adviser, so no fiduciary relationship or duty existed. Preclusion of Deficiency Judgment Not Applicable to Commercial Loan: In deciding whether a partnership qualified for the preclusion of a deficiency judgment on deeds of trust used as security instruments in a commercial loan transaction, the Supreme Court relied on First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203, 44 St. Rep. 451 (1987), in finding that when a lender holding a trust indenture as security chooses to foreclose under the mortgage laws, a deficiency judgment can be obtained, except for occupied single-family residential property. No Deficiency Judgment Upon Foreclosure of Trust Deed: A lender, electing to foreclose on its security under a trust deed by judicial procedure, is not entitled to remedies inconsistent with the Small Tract Financing Act of Montana. Specifically, the lender may not recover a deficiency judgment against the borrower, and the borrower has no right of redemption as is accorded in a judicial foreclosure of a conventional mortgage. Statement That Property Does Not Exceed Statutory Acreage: A trust indenture which states that the real property involved does not exceed 3 acres when in fact it involved 7.61 acres is a defective trust indenture notwithstanding 71-1-304. (The 3-acre limit was increased to 15 acres by a 1974 amendment, to 30 acres by a 1989 amendment, and to 40 acres by a 2001 amendment.) Amsterdam Lumber, Inc. v. Dyksterhouse, 179 M 133, 586 P2d 705 (1978).

Trust Indenture Exceeding Statutory Acreage Defective — Equitable Mortgage — Notice: A trust indenture involving 7.61 acres violated the public policy of this state because it exceeded the permitted 3 acres and was therefore not a statutory trust indenture. The defective trust indenture became an equitable mortgage and was binding on subsequent encumbrancers with actual knowledge of the existence of the indenture. Recording a trust indenture executed in violation of statute does not constitute constructive, imputed, or presumed notice. A defective trust indenture will be enforced between the parties as an equitable lien. However, the lien is subordinate to the claims of subsequent encumbrancers and of judgment creditors who extended credit subsequent to the date of the instrument, without actual knowledge of the existence of the instrument. (The 3-acre limit was increased to 15 acres by a 1974 amendment, to 30 acres by a 1989 amendment, and to 40 acres by a 2001 amendment.) Amsterdam Lumber, Inc. v. No Error in Ordering Foreclosure of Personal Real Property for Failure to Repay Business Loans — Deficiency Judgment Proper: Defendants, husband and wife, failed to make scheduled payments on two bank loans, and the bank filed for foreclosure of two deeds of trust. Defendants were in the process of obtaining a divorce. The husband failed to respond to the complaint, and a default judgment was entered against him. The District Court then granted summary judgment against the wife, ordered foreclosure and sale of the collateral real property, and entered a deficiency judgment holding the wife responsible for any deficiency following sale of the real property. The wife appealed on grounds that the District Court erroneously granted summary judgment by: (1) determining that any oral representations made by bank agents were merged into written documents; (2) holding that the bank was entitled to a deficiency judgment; and (3) finding that the bank had no fiduciary duty to the wife. The Supreme Court considered each argument in turn and affirmed. First, the written loan agreements expressed the entire agreement between the parties, and any alleged oral understandings that were not reduced to writing were invalid. Second, although a deficiency judgment may not issue if the secured property is a single-family residence, in this case, the security agreements provided that the collateral property be used for business purposes, so even though the property was defendants' primary residence, the trust indenture was not strictly residential, and the District Court did not err in ordering a deficiency judgment. Third, as stated in Coles Dept. Store v. First Bank, 240 M 226, 783 P2d 932 (1989), to establish a fiduciary relationship, in addition to a long history of bank dealings, a bank must act in some capacity other than that common in the usual arm's-length debtor-creditor relationship. Preclusion of Deficiency Judgment Not Applicable to Commercial Loan: In deciding whether a partnership qualified for the preclusion of a deficiency judgment on deeds of trust used as security instruments in a commercial loan transaction, the Supreme Court relied on First St.

Lien — Priority Over Trust Indenture: This case involves the question of priority between a trust indenture and subsequent mechanics' lien (now construction lien). The holder of the mechanics' lien brought the action to recover amounts owing on a contract for home improvements. The home owners, prior to contracting for the improvements to their home, had obtained a loan from a mortgage company, which prepared a trust indenture. The District Court held that the trust indenture took priority over the lien. However, the Supreme Court reversed as to the priority issue, stating that the party having the greatest ability to protect its interests, in this case the holder of the trust indenture, had the burden of exercising due care to prevent overreaching by an interested party. The holder of the trust indenture, which is a mortgage on the real property subject to the laws relating to mortgages, was in the best position to protect against nonpayment by the landowner by either withholding funds to the extent of the contemplated improvements or by requiring the home owner to obtain lien waivers from the mechanics. The mechanics' lien (now construction lien) took priority over the mortgagee's trust indenture. Home Interiors, Inc. v. Hendrickson, 214 M 194, 692 P2d 1229, 41 St. Rep. 2408 (1984).

Foreclosure on Trust Indenture — Order of Sale Upheld When Debtor Failed to Demand Specific Order: In an action by a bank to foreclose a trust indenture secured by the mortgagor's residence and separate commercial property, sale of the residential property first was upheld when the debtor did not exercise her right to determine the order of the sale. It is a proper election for a debtor at the time of the sale to demand a specific order in which separate parcels are to be sold. However, when the debtor acquiesced in the order of the sale and deferred to the discretionary authority of the trustee, the order of sale will be upheld. First Nat'l Bank v. Powell, 212 M 468, 689 P2d 255, 41 St. Rep. 1870 (1984).

Defective Trust Indenture: The trust indenture in this case is a defective trust indenture which will be enforced between the parties as an equitable lien. However, the lien of such defective trust indenture is subordinate to the claims of subsequent encumbrancers and of judgment creditors who extended credit subsequent to the date of the instrument, without actual knowledge of the existence of the indenture. Amsterdam Lumber, Inc. v. Dyksterhouse, 179 M 133, 586 P2d 705 (1978).

Duties of Indenture Trustee Limited to Provisions of Small Tract Financing Act: Under the Small Tract Financing Act of Montana, an indenture trustee's duties are those related to properly conducting a foreclosure sale, including providing proper notice to affected parties, conducting the sale, and disposing of sale proceeds. In this case, plaintiff contended that broader duties of trustees, as set out in 72-34-113 (now repealed), also applied to indenture trustees. The Supreme Court disagreed. There is no indication that broader duties than those outlined in the Act were contemplated for indenture trustees, and the duties of indenture trustees are therefore limited to the statutory duties in the Act. Case Notes

Judicial Foreclosure Action by Junior Lien Holder — Counterclaim for Judicial Foreclosure by Senior Lien Holder Not Compulsory: A lien holder commenced a judicial foreclosure action on real property and named several possible senior lien holders as defendants. Only one defendant, a bank, claimed to hold a senior lien interest. The plaintiff acknowledged that the recording date of the bank's predecessor in interest preceded its own. After the bank filed its witness and exhibit list 10 days late, the District Court granted the plaintiff's motion to strike the list. It also granted the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, holding that the bank could not prove the elements necessary for judicial foreclosure. The bank appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the District Court had failed to recognize principles of judicial foreclosure. The Supreme Court reiterated that a foreclosure does not terminate the interest of a senior lien holder and that a senior lien holder is not required to counterclaim for a judicial foreclosure brought by a junior lien holder. Ruby Valley Nat'l Bank v. Wells Fargo Delaware Trust Co., N.A., 2014 MT 16, 373 Mont. 374, 317 P.3d 174.

Notice Requirements Not Met — Second Trustee's Sale Appropriate Recourse: When the defendant trustee failed to provide proper notice as required by 71-1-315, the first trustee's sale of the property was null and void as to the plaintiff junior easement holder who had not received notice of the sale. The appropriate recourse was a second trustee's sale where each interest holder who did not previously receive notice was notified and had an opportunity to purchase the subject property. The second trustee's sale effectively foreclosed on the property and extinguished the plaintiff's easement. Terry L. Bell Generations Trust v. Flathead Bank of Bigfork, 2013 MT 152, 370 Mont. 342, 302 P.3d 390.

Absence of Evidence of Violation of Standards of Commercial Reasonableness — Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Not Breached: Plaintiff contended that defendant title companies breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing during a foreclosure sale. Plaintiff presented an expert who opined that defendants did not conduct the sale in the same manner as the expert, but offered no conclusion that defendants' administration of the sale demonstrated a violation of accepted and reasonable commercial standards. Absent evidence of defendants' failure to act in accordance with industry practices, the District Court did not err in holding that defendants did not breach the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Knucklehead Land Co., Inc. v. Accutitle, Inc., 2007 MT 301, 340 M 62, 172 P3d 116 (2007).

Knucklehead Land Co., Inc. v. Accutitle, Inc., 2007 MT 301, 340 M 62, 172 P3d 116 (2007).

Negligent Misrepresentation Claim Erroneously Characterized — No Error: Defendants conducted a foreclosure sale of real property in which plaintiff was the successful bidder, but the sale was subsequently voided, and plaintiff sued for negligent misrepresentation. Plaintiff contended that the District Court erroneously characterized the claim as a misrepresentation that the property would be sold on a particular day to the highest bidder when, in fact, the issue was the false representation that adequate notice had been given to the Internal Revenue Service. However, the District Court concluded that the notice was adequate as a matter of law, so even if the court mischaracterized the issue underlying the negligent misrepresentation claim, plaintiff could not demonstrate error on appeal by relying on a notice issue that was decided to the contrary and not challenged. The District Court was affirmed. Knucklehead Land Co., Inc. v. Accutitle, Inc., 2007 MT 301, 340 M 62, 172 P3d 116 (2007).

No Recovery When No Damages Incurred in Failure to Convey Property: Defendants conducted a foreclosure sale of real property in which plaintiff was the successful bidder, but the sale was subsequently voided, and plaintiff sued for breach of contract. The District Court concluded that under 27-1-314, defendant was not entitled to damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because no purchase price was paid that could be recovered in this case, 27-1-314 limited recoverable damages to expenses incurred in examining title and preparing the necessary sale papers. Only when there is a showing of bad faith does the statute authorize the nonbreaching party to recover the difference between the agreed price and the property value at the time of the breach, when the agreed price is lower than the value. However, plaintiff failed to produce facts showing defendants' bad faith, so plaintiff's damages were limited to actual damages, of which there were none. Knucklehead Land Co., Inc. v. Accutitle, Inc., 2007 MT 301, 340 M 62, 172 P3d 116 (2007).

"Credit Bid" Satisfies Requirement of Payment in Cash: A bank foreclosed on a trust indenture and, at the foreclosure sale, made a "credit bid" under which it applied the amount bid against the outstanding debt owed by the defendant. The defendant contested the sale on the grounds that the sale was not properly conducted because the bank did not pay the trustee in cash. The Supreme Court held that paying the price bid in money or its equivalent immediately or promptly after the foreclosure sale satisfies the requirements of this section. Rocky Mtn. Bank v. Stuart, 280 M 74, 928 P2d 243, 53 St. Rep. 1305 (1996).

Postponing Sale by Public Proclamation — General Emergency: Where potential purchasers, subsequent lienholders, and the public in general are practically and legally prevented from traveling to and attending a sale at the time and place noticed for the sale, the giving of notice of a postponed sale only by "public proclamation at the time and place fixed in the notice of sale" is a futile act, of no practical or legal significance. The provisions of 71-1-315(3) apply to normal situations where there is no state of general emergency (Mt. St. Helens' eruption) preventing potential purchasers, subsequent lienholders, and the public in general from attending at the time and place fixed in the notice of sale. Consol. Dairies of Lake County, Inc. v. Amer. Abstract & Title Co., 193 M 1, 629 P2d 770, 38 St. Rep. 933 (1981).

Preclusion of Deficiency Judgment Not Applicable to Commercial Loan: In deciding whether a partnership qualified for the preclusion of a deficiency judgment on deeds of trust used as security instruments in a commercial loan transaction, the Supreme Court relied on First St. Bank of Forsyth v. Chunkapura, 226 M 54, 734 P2d 1203, 44 St. Rep. 451 (1987), in finding that when a lender holding a trust indenture as security chooses to foreclose under the mortgage laws, a deficiency judgment can be obtained, except for occupied single-family residential property. Trustees of the Wash.-Idaho-Mont. Carpenters-Employers Retirement Trust Fund v. Galleria Partnership, 239 M 250, 780 P2d 608, 46 St. Rep. 1661 (1989).

No Deficiency Although Debtors Rented Premises: Although the defendant debtors no longer occupied the residential property themselves and had rented it, the beneficiary of a trust indenture on the property was not entitled to a deficiency judgment. At the time the bank accepted the trust indenture for the mortgaged property, the trust deed related to an occupied, single-family residential property, sometimes occupied by renters. The property therefore fit the Chunkapura exception, and the bank could not obtain a deficiency judgment against the debtors after the sale of the mortgaged property. First Fed. S&L Ass'n of Missoula v. Anderson, 238 M 296, 777 P2d 1281, 46 St. Rep. 1280 (1989). See also Cavanaugh v. CitiMortgage, Inc., 2013 MT 349, 372 Mont. 541, 313 P.3d 212.

Foreclosure of First Lien — Second Lienholder's Direct Action on Note — Summary Judgment: A second lienholder whose lien is extinguished by the foreclosure of a first lien may maintain a direct action on the note. The bank, which held a promissory note secured by a junior trust indenture, was entitled to sue directly on the note after foreclosure by the holder of the senior trust indenture. The statutory prohibitions against deficiency judgments after foreclosure upon a note secured by a trust indenture apply only to the foreclosing creditor. They do not apply to a creditor holding a note that is no longer secured because of a foreclosure action taken by another creditor possessing a first trust deed. Summary judgment for the bank was proper when there was no genuine issue of any material fact and when the bank was entitled to judgment as a matter of law. First Interstate Bank of Kalispell v. Wann, 235 M 111, 765 P2d 749, 45 St. Rep. 2232 (1988).

No Deficiency Judgment Upon Foreclosure of Trust Deed: A lender, electing to foreclose on its security under a trust deed by judicial procedure, is not entitled to remedies inconsistent with the Small Tract Financing Act of Montana. Specifically, the lender may not recover a deficiency judgment against the borrower, and the borrower has no right of redemption as is accorded in a judicial foreclosure of a conventional mortgage. Satisfaction of Judgment by Purchaser of Indentured Property — Further Action Not Foreclosed: The plaintiff received a secondary trust indenture from the defendant as collateral for a loan, and after obtaining a default judgment against the defendant on the underlying debt, purchased the indentured property from the trustee under the provisions of Title 71, thereafter selling the property at a loss. In an appeal from a declaratory judgment, the Supreme Court held that this section did not prohibit the plaintiff from proceeding against other real property held by the defendant, as the plaintiff seeks only to satisfy its default judgment, which has no relationship to the foreclosure on the indentured property by the holder of the first trust indenture. AVCO Financial Serv. of Billings One, Inc. v. Christiaens, 201 M 117, 652 P2d 220, 39 St. Rep. 1993 (1982).

Priority of Lien Over Trust Indenture: Considering the rights affected, competing policies, and potential consequences, the Supreme Court held that a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) for improvements constructed after the grant of a trust indenture has priority over the interest of a purchaser at trustee's foreclosure sale. Case Notes

Grantor Named in Trust Indenture Not Entitled to Notice to Vacate After Nonjudicial Foreclosure Proceedings: A bank foreclosed on a trust indenture and filed a complaint for possession. The defendant argued that the bank's complaint for possession was premature because 70-27-104 entitled the defendant to a postsale notice to vacate, which the bank did not give. The Supreme Court held that by executing the trust indenture and agreeing by one of its paragraphs to vacate the trust property on the 10th day following the foreclosure sale, the defendant had waived any right to notice to vacate under 70-27-104. 71-1-321. Deeds of trust and trust deeds not invalidated.

Case Notes

Priority Determined by Intention of Parties: A purchaser simultaneously executed a mortgage in favor of the seller and a deed of trust in favor of the bank. The deed of trust was filed the day before the mortgage was filed. The mortgage bore the notation "no exceptions", following the form language reading "free from all encumbrances excepting". Upon the buyer's default, the sellers filed an action for a declaratory ruling that their purchase money mortgage was prior in time and right to the bank's deed of trust. The trial court reformed the sellers' mortgage to delete the term "no exceptions" and held that the bank's deed of trust was prior in time and right to the mortgage. The Supreme Court affirmed and held that the deed of trust, executed to secure the purchase loan, was a purchase money mortgage and prior in time and right because the evidence indicated that the parties intended the sellers' mortgage to be a second mortgage and the words "no exceptions" were due to a typing error. Pulse v. N. Am. Land Title Co. of Mont., 218 M 275, 707 P2d 1105, 42 St. Rep. 1578 (1985).

Depository as Pledge Holder: When bank accepts special deposit as a pledge to secure return of borrowed personal property by pledgor to a third person, it becomes a pledge holder within this section. Maser v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Winnett, 90 M 33, 300 P 207 (1931).

Deposit as Guaranty of Use Held a Pledge: Where tenant of an estate was required to deposit sum of money as a guaranty that premises would not be used for unlawful purposes, the deposit amounted to a pledge, and he was entitled to its return upon distribution of the estate and passing of title to the premises in question to one of the heirs. Ryan v. Stagg, 89 M 390, 298 P 353 (1931).

Sale With Title in Seller Until Full Payment Not a Pledge: When property is sold under contract providing that title shall remain in seller until purchase price is paid, the seller does not have a mortgage, pledge, or lien upon property within the attachment statute. State ex rel. Malin-Yates Co. v. Justice of Peace Court, 51 M 133, 149 P 709 (1915).

What May Be Pledged:

Transaction by which collateral security is delivered by debtor and accepted by creditor constitutes a pledge. Averill Mach. Co. v. Bain, 50 M 512, 148 P 334 (1915).

Real estate lease or mortgage may be pledged. There seems to be no difference in principle between pledge of a lease and pledge of a contract to purchase land. Ringling v. Smith River Dev. Co., 48 M 467, 138 P 1098 (1914).

Bank Deposit as Pledge — Interest Belongs to Pledgor: A deposit in a bank to indemnify sureties on bond against possible loss is a pledge within this section. Title to it, as between principal and sureties, is in the principal, and any interest accruing belongs to him and not to sureties. Leggat v. Palmer, 39 M 302, 102 P 327 (1909).

Pledgor Deemed Trustee of Securities Under Certain Circumstances: Pledgee may entrust pledged notes to pledgor for a special purpose in which case pledgor holds them as trustee; receiver of bank who obtained notes for purpose of endorsing payments thereon fell under this rule. Ainsworth v. Kruger, 80 M 468, 260 P 1055 (1927).

Delivery of Property Essential:
Lien of pledge is dependent on possession, and pledge therefore is not valid until property pledged is delivered to pledgee or pledge holder. Goriez v. Rock Creek Ditch Co., 67 M 566, 216 P 778 (1923).

Elements essential to contract of pledge are delivery of personal property by owner to pledgee and an agreement of the parties, express or implied, that the pledgee shall hold it as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of some obligation. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Higgins, 54 M 11, 165 P 1109 (1917), distinguished in Ainsworth v. Kruger, 80 M 468, 260 P 1055 (1927).

Constructive Delivery: Constructive delivery of accounts by debtor to creditor for purpose of collection is sufficient to satisfy rule that pledge is dependent on possession of thing pledged. Savage Tire Sales Co. v. Stuart, 61 M 524, 203 P 364 (1921).

Assumption of Apparent Ownership: This section has no application when the apparent ownership is permitted to be assumed for any purpose other than that of transfer or sale, and applies then only if pledgee received property in good faith and for value. Vinson v. Pelletier, 78 M 254, 255 P 1067 (1927).

Return of Corporate Stock: When owner of corporate stock had delivered it for purpose of its being turned over to persons entitled thereto upon happening of certain event, rather than for the purpose "of making any transfer of it" within meaning of this section, and when the bailee pledged it instead to person who brought action to foreclose the pledge, who was fully conversant with the facts and respective rights of parties, and who was therefore not a holder in good faith, the court properly decreed return of the stock to its owner. LIENS

Joint Resolution on Interim Study of Lien Laws: Senate Joint Resolution No. 31 of the 49th Legislature requesting an interim study of Montana's lien laws read: "WHEREAS, Montana adopted its basic lien laws from the "Field Code" shortly after becoming a state; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has added to and amended the basic lien laws of Montana, including the adoption of the Uniform Commercial Code in 1963, without comprehensive analysis of the various statutes that provide for liens; and

WHEREAS, there have been introduced in the 49th Legislative Session numerous and conflicting bills dealing with delayed recording, lien priorities, place of filing, centralized filing, purchase free of lien, and other subjects which indicate that Montana's lien laws are confusing and that relative lien priorities are possibly unfair; and

WHEREAS, it is essential to the economic growth of the State of Montana that the lien laws not hinder or obstruct the free flow of credit, especially in the agricultural area; and

WHEREAS, there is insufficient time during a regular legislative session to resolve the conflicting legislation or to provide a comprehensive, careful study of the existing lien laws, after considering all relevant factors, and there is insufficient time to receive information from the public, those concerned with the lien laws, and those obtaining and providing credit.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE SENATE AND THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE STATE OF MONTANA:

That an appropriate interim committee be assigned to:

(1) examine Montana laws relating to liens, including Montana's basic lien laws and the Uniform Commercial Code;

(2) study the problems of delayed recording, lien priorities, conflicting lien priorities, and other related subjects;

(3) study the problems with place of filing and the possibility of centralized lien filing;

(4) obtain testimony and information relevant to Montana's lien laws as they may affect those who obtain or grant credit, including:

(a) testimony and information addressing the conflicting positions of persons asking for preferential lien priority;

(b) the apparent conflict or lack of uniformity of present laws covering lien priorities; and

(c) any other matters pertinent to the effects of lien laws on such persons;

(5) study the laws of other states relating to liens and lien priorities, recordation, and other relevant matters;

(6) draft legislation to implement its recommendations, if necessary; and

(7) report its findings and recommendations to the 50th Legislature."

Part 1
General Provisions

Part Case Notes

Damages to Be Ascertained Before Granting Lien: The District Court granted plaintiff a lien on timber cut by defendant on plaintiff's land under a contract. The lien was granted because defendant had failed to clean up slash on the land pursuant to the contract. The issue of the amount of damages was never raised at the trial. It was improper to grant a lien where there was no ascertained debt or claim. Madison Fork Ranch v. L & B Lodge Pole Timber Prod., 189 M 292, 615 P2d 900, 37 St. Rep. 1468 (1980).

Personal Property Taxes Due as Liens: When taxes were due on personal property (cattle), the tax was a lien on that property and also a lien on the real property of the owner. However, "because the cattle have long since gone to that great roundup in the sky, the lien on the cattle per se has evaporated. It has not evaporated as against the real property of the owners of the cattle, however". Stensvad v. Musselshell County, 180 M 489, 591 P2d 225 (1979).

Case Notes

Contract Remedy Providing Transfer of Twenty-Acre Parcel of Land as Security for Contractual Obligations Violative of Subdivision Laws: As part of a sale of real property, Canton pledged a 20-acre parcel to Riverview Homes II, Ltd. (Riverview), as security in the event that Canton breached his contractual obligation to complete a proposed subdivision and construct an artificial lake. Canton breached the contract, and Riverview sought to quiet title to the 20-acre parcel. The District Court agreed that Canton breached the contract, but held that the contract remedy violated subdivision laws. Riverview appealed, contending that the parcel was exempted from subdivision review as a division of land created to provide security for a lien under 76-3-201, and that the security provision was an enforceable construction lien because of Canton's contractual obligation to construct the lake. The Supreme Court noted that Riverview neither furnished services or materials to Canton for the lake construction nor satisfied any other requirement applicable to construction liens in Title 71, ch. 3, part 5, so the construction lien theory failed. If it was not a construction lien, it had to be considered a general lien under this section, which, pursuant to Reiter v. Reiter, 237 M 220, 772 P2d 314 (1989), can be claimed only as arising from dealings in particular trades or businesses in which the existence of a general lien has been recognized by judicial decisions or if a custom to that effect can be established by evidence. General liens are looked upon with disfavor, and the court refused to recognize a general lien for breach of a contract to provide equity in land in this case. The District Court's conclusion that the 20-acre parcel was not transferable under 76-3-302, and failed to qualify for an exemption under 76-3-201, was affirmed. Riverview Homes II, Ltd. v. Canton, 2001 MT 309, 307 M 517, 38 P3d 848 (2001).

No General Lien for Breach of Contract to Provide Equity in Land: Son filed a lien against the family farm held by his mother, asserting it was a general lien under this section. The Supreme Court held that in the absence of an express agreement to give a lien, a general lien can be claimed only as arising from dealings in particular trades or businesses in which the existence of a general lien has been recognized by judicial decisions or if a custom to that effect can be established by evidence. General liens are looked upon with disfavor. The court refuses to recognize a general lien for breach of a contract to provide equity in land or to convey land upon the owner's death. Reiter v. Reiter, 237 M 220, 772 P2d 314, 46 St. Rep. 751 (1989), followed in Riverview Homes II, Ltd. v. Canton, 2001 MT 309, 307 M 517, 38 P3d 848 (2001). A later appeal by the son was dismissed as frivolous in Reiter v. Reiter, 240 M 450, 784 P2d 917, 47 St. Rep. 20 (1990).

Conditional Sale: A conditional sale, not an absolute sale with retention of lien, is not in effect a mortgage, and therefore is not void as to innocent third parties, though never acknowledged and recorded with an affidavit. Bennett Bros. Co. v. Fitchett, 24 M 457, 62 P 780 (1900).

71-3-102. How liens created.

Attorney General's Opinions

No Duty for County Clerk and Recorder to Accept Common-Law Liens for Filing: Although a County Clerk and Recorder has a statutory duty to accept for filing any instrument, paper, or notice authorized by law to be recorded, there is no apparent authority in Montana law for allowing the filing of a common-law lien. It is unclear whether Montana even recognizes common-law liens. Because a common-law lien is not authorized by law to be received, County Clerk and Recorders may refuse to accept for filing written instruments purporting to be liens when the writing does not qualify as a statutory lien or lien created by contract. 38 A.G. Op. 114 (1980).

71-3-105. Lien on future interest.

Case Notes

Deliverable Property: Subsequently acquired personal property may be mortgaged, provided it is capable of delivery, and may be taken possession of by the mortgagee upon its acquisition by the mortgagor. Sec. St. Bank of Havre v. Mariette, 69 M 536, 223 P 114 (1924).

Description of Property: While a mortgagor of personal property may include in the mortgage property thereafter to be acquired by him, such after-acquired property must be described so accurately that third persons consulting the record may be put upon notice as to what is intended to be mortgaged. If the after-acquired property is not so described as to enable the Sheriff to identify it, the mortgage is void as against such third persons. Hackney v. Birely, 67 M 155, 215 P 642 (1923).

Crop Mortgage:

While, independently of statute, one cannot sell or mortgage personal property not in existence or in which he has no present interest, property which has a potential existence may be mortgaged or hypothecated. Isbell v. Slette, 52 M 156, 155 P 503 (1916).

Annual crops have a potential existence even before they are planted, and the owner or one rightfully in possession of land has a mortgageable interest in the crops thereafter to be planted thereon, the lien of such mortgage not attaching until they are planted, and being limited to the interest which the mortgagor has. Isbell v. Slette, 52 M 156, 155 P 503 (1916).

A mortgage on crops yet to be planted is, in effect, nothing more than an executory contract that may become executed when the crops are planted and the lien attaches, but which may be defeated if, for any reason, the mortgagor violates good faith and fails or refuses to plant the crops. Isbell v. Slette, 52 M 156, 155 P 503 (1916).

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

71-3-108. Lien or contract for lien transfers no title.

Case Notes

Termination of Lien: A mortgage does not transfer any title to the property mortgaged; it is merely a lien fixed upon the property to secure the performance of an act or obligation, and therefore when it ceases to be a lien it ceases to be a mortgage. Morrison v. Farmers & Traders' St. Bank, 70 M 146, 225 P 123 (1924).

Chattel Mortgage: A chattel mortgage creates a lien only and therefore does not pass title from the mortgagor to the mortgagee. Demers v. Graham, 36 M 402, 93 P 268 (1907); Mueller v. Renkes, 31 M 100, 77 P 512 (1904); Bennett Bros. Co. v. Fitchett, 24 M 457, 62 P 780 (1900).

Increase in Property: A chattel mortgage upon cows in which no mention was made of their increase did not cover their calves that were in gestation at the time of the execution of the mortgage but that were born prior to foreclosure. Demers v. Graham, 36 M 402, 93 P 268 (1907).

71-3-109. Certain contracts void.

Case Notes

Express Waiver of Redemption Rights in Federal Loan Contract: Although the mortgagors' Small Business Administration loan contained an express waiver of state redemption rights, the mortgagors were entitled to redeem property purchased at a foreclosure sale pursuant to this section, which provides that all contracts in restraint of the right of redemption from a lien are void. The balance between state and federal law must be struck in favor of Montana's interest in protecting its debtors. U.S. v. Pastos, 781 F2d 747 (9th Cir. 1986).

Sale of Mortgagor's Rights: The rule stated in this section does not apply to transactions after the execution of the mortgage. A mortgagor may sell and convey all his right and interest in the mortgaged premises to the mortgagee, when the transaction is fair, honest, and without fraud and when no unconscionable advantage has been taken of his position by the mortgagee. Donohoe v. Landoe, 126 M 351, 251 P2d 560 (1952).

Possessory Rights After Foreclosure: A clause in a real estate mortgage by which the mortgagor on foreclosure waives any claim of homestead and all right of possession of the mortgaged premises during the period of redemption is not invalid under this section. U.S. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Stevens, 93 M 11, 17 P2d 62 (1932).

Equity of Redemption: Although the term "right of redemption" is used in this section, the subject treated is the "equity of redemption". Banking Corp. of Mont. v. Hein, 52 M 238, 156 P 1085 (1916).

Conditional Sales: When, under a contract of sale of property, both real and personal, cancellation with forfeiture of an advance payment was sought because of breach by the vendee in failing to make a deferred payment, the legal title remained in the vendor even though possession had been delivered to the vendee. Cook-Reynolds Co. v. Chipman, 47 M 289, 133 P 694 (1913).

71-3-110. Enforcement of obligation by creditor.

Case Notes

Mortgage Foreclosure: Section 71-1-222, declaring that there is but one action for the recovery of a debt or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage, prohibits any action other than that provided by statute for the foreclosure of the mortgage, and the creditor cannot waive the mortgage and sue on the debt; this section has reference to liens other than mortgage liens. Barth v. Ely, 85 M 310, 278 P 1002 (1929).

Reconciliation With Other Statutes: While this section appeared in the Civil Code, and 71-1-222 appeared in the Code of Civil Procedure, R.C.M. 1921, both referring to the right of creditors to enforce obligations secured by lien, they must be considered to have been passed at the same time, and it must be presumed that it was intended that both should be operative, and each should govern as to the title in which it is found, and courts must construe them together and reconcile them, if possible. Barth v. Ely, 85 M 310, 278 P 1002 (1929).

71-3-111. Creation of lien not a personal obligation.

Case Notes

Purchaser From Mortgagor: The purchaser of mortgaged real estate does not thereby become personally liable for the payment of the indebtedness described in the mortgage. Mueller v. Renkes, 31 M 100, 77 P 512 (1904).

Authority for Additional Expenditures for Preservation and Protection of Property — Priority of Payment: Section 70-7-110 and this section provide sufficient statutory authority to allow lien claimants to add expenditures for the preservation and protection of encumbered property on to their liens after the liens are filed. Such preservation expenses should be accorded a first priority of payment. Tri-County Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. Levee Restorations, Inc., 221 M 403, 720 P2d 247, 43 St. Rep. 928 (1986).

71-3-113. Priority of liens.

Case Notes

Attorney Lien Priority Over Chiropractor Lien: Under this section, other things being equal, different liens on the same property have priority according to the time of their creation. Relying on this section, the District Court concluded that, having been filed first, a chiropractor's lien had priority over an attorney's lien. However, 71-3-1114 specifically provides that an attorney's lien has priority over a chiropractor's lien, regardless of the time of the liens' creation, so the District Court's declaration of lien priority was reversible error. Wyant v. Kenda, 2004 MT 348, 324 M 342, 102 P3d 1260 (2004).

Secured Mortgage Lien Superior to Subsequent Delinquent Special Improvement District Lien: Great Falls sold industrial development revenue bonds (IDR bonds), secured by a mortgage lien held by the First Trust Company, to develop an industrial park. Later, the city issued special improvement district bonds (SID bonds) to defray the costs of street and utility construction at the industrial park. When the city defaulted on both the IDR and SID bond payments, the District Court ruled that the First Trust Company mortgage lien securing IDR bonds had a higher priority than the city's lien securing the SID bonds. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the lower court's decision, holding that when a governmental body creates an SID and issues SID bonds that are a lien on the property that is also subject to a prior IDR lien created by a governmental body, the IDR lien has priority under this section because it was created prior to the SID lien. First Trust Co. of Mont. v. Great Falls, 256 M 390, 845 P2d 1227, 50 St. Rep. 45 (1993).

Executors Advancing Funds: When executors advanced money from their personal funds to the legatee of a cash bequest before distribution of the estate, their claim against the indebtedness of the estate was prior in time and therefore superior to the claim of a judgment debtor of the legatee. Hustad v. Reed, 133 M 211, 321 P2d 1083 (1958).

Attachment of Interest in Revested Property: A grantee of property under a deed absolute on its face but in fact a mortgage reconveyed the property by deed to the grantors (husband and wife) upon payment of the debt secured thereby and presented it for record 5 minutes before a second grantee of the same grantors presented his, also given as security for a loan. A creditor of the wife previously had attached her interest in the premises and secured judgment which had been duly docketed. Under these circumstances, immediately upon the filing for record of the first deed, the grantors were reinvested with the legal title, and the judgment lien of the creditor at once attached to the interest of the wife and was therefore prior and superior to the claim of the second grantee under decree of foreclosure of his mortgage deed. Isom v. Larson, 78 M 395, 255 P 1049 (1927).

71-3-114. Priority of purchase money mortgage.

Case Notes

Construction Lien Attaches From Date Work Commenced - Priority Over Purchase Money Mortgage: Gaston began water monitoring and percolation tests on property to be purchased by Yellowstone Bank, even though ownership of the property had not yet passed to the Bank. When payments to Gaston for its work stopped, Gaston sued to foreclose its construction lien and to establish priority of the lien. The Supreme Court held that the lien was valid against the Bank and its financing company, that the lien attached the day Gaston began work, and that Gaston's construction lien had priority over the purchase money mortgage used to finance the purchase of the property by Yellowstone Bank. Gaston Eng'r & Surveying v. Oakwood Properties, LLC, 2011 MT 44, 359 Mont. 341, 249 P.3d 75.

What Constitutes Purchase Money Mortgage: Respondent purchased a tract of land. After a complicated series of conveyances, respondent, as security for a loan, granted a mortgage that covered only a portion of the original tract purchased. The mortgage was granted by respondent 8 months after the tract had been conveyed to the respondent and was granted to parties who were not the sellers of the tract. The court found the evidence indicated the mortgage was given to secure payment of the purchase price of the original tract, was not given to secure any new indebtedness, and was therefore a purchase money mortgage. A purchase money mortgage under 71-1-232 is not required to be issued simultaneously with the conveyance of the property on which it is given. (This section was determined to be inapplicable to this case.) Swenson v. Ramage, 234 M 188, 762 P2d 851, 45 St. Rep. 1832 (1988).

Priority Determined by Intention of Parties: A purchaser simultaneously executed a mortgage in favor of the seller and a deed of trust in favor of the bank. The deed of trust was filed the day before the mortgage was filed. The mortgage bore the notation "no exceptions", following the form language reading "free from all encumbrances excepting". Upon the buyer's default, the sellers filed an action for a declaratory ruling that their purchase money mortgage was prior in time and right to the bank's deed of trust. The trial court reformed the sellers' mortgage to delete the term "no exceptions" and held that the bank's deed of trust was prior in time and right to the mortgage. The Supreme Court affirmed and held that the deed of trust, executed to secure the purchase loan, was a purchase money mortgage and prior in time and right because the evidence indicated that the parties intended the sellers' mortgage to be a second mortgage and the words "no exceptions" were due to a typing error. Pulse v. N. Am. Land Title Co. of Mont., 218 M 275, 707 P2d 1105, 42 St. Rep. 1578 (1985).

Construction Money Advanced Before Purchase Money: One who advances money for the purchase price of property acquires an interest therein superior to the lien claims for the price of the construction of buildings thereon, even though work on the buildings was commenced prior to such advancement. Soliri v. Fasso, 56 M 400, 185 P 322 (1919).

Equity of Redemption in Assignee: A third mortgagee failed to exercise his statutory right to redeem the property from a foreclosure sale on the first mortgage within the statutory time period. After the expiration of the statutory time period, he assigned the mortgage. Although he had lost his statutory right of redemption, he retained his equity of redemption and passed it to his assignee. However, this right could only be exercised to protect the assignee from loss. Parcells v. Nelson, 103 M 412, 62 P2d 131 (1936).

Deed Absolute in Form:

In an action to have a deed absolute on its fact declared a mortgage, the defense of laches may be interposed. Riley v. Blacker, 51 M 364, 152 P 758 (1915).

This section does not apply to a case when an absolute deed is claimed to be a mortgage long after the delivery of the deed, the death of the grantee, and the settlement and distribution of his estate. Riley v. Blacker, 51 M 364, 152 P 758 (1915).

Laches in Failure to Redeem: When no proceedings were ever instituted for foreclosure of a mortgage, the mortgagor, in bringing an action to redeem 4 years after the mortgagee went into possession, was not guilty of such laches as to deprive him of the right to relief. Grogan v. Valley Trading Co., 30 M 229, 76 P 211 (1904).

71-3-121. Extinction by sale or wrongful conversion.

Case Notes

Evidence Sufficient to Indicate No Wrongful Conversion: The jury correctly found that defendant production credit association did not wrongfully convert farm equipment when a security agreement and financial statement indicated that: (1) the money owed on the equipment was a liability for use in calculating the debtor's ability to repay the loan; (2) the association considered the equipment as collateral; and (3) a sale of the equipment to the debtor had taken place. Zimmerman v. Bozeman Prod. Credit Ass'n, 233 M 156, 759 P2d 166, 45 St. Rep. 1387 (1988).

Full Extinction: Pursuant to the judgment in a foreclosure action, the mortgaged property was sold at public sale. The purchase of the property satisfied and extinguished the judgment, and the rendering court lacked jurisdiction to alter its judgment after the sale. Further, the purchase of the property extinguished the mortgage lien as fully as it would have been extinguished by payment of the indebtedness by the mortgagor. Oreg. Mtg. Co., Ltd. v. Kunneke, 76 M 117, 245 P 539 (1926).

Form of Conveyance:

Although the case was not decided on this issue, in analyzing this section, the Supreme Court stated that the meaning of the section appears to be that in order to be effective to extinguish the lien of the mortgage, a sale by the mortgagor to the mortgagee must be for that purpose and that the evidence of the sale (the conveyance) must disclose the fact. The sale must be "in satisfaction of the claim secured" by the lien. Dubbels v. Thompson, 49 M 550, 143 P 986 (1914).

Although the case was not decided on this issue, in analyzing this section, the Supreme Court stated that the legislative intent of the section appeared to be to leave open to inquiry the status of the mortgage lien in every case in which the evidence of the sale does not refer to the mortgage. Upon this assumption, a deed from the mortgagor to the mortgagee that does not refer to the mortgage leaves the record equivocal in meaning, and persons taking the title from the mortgagee are bound at their peril to ascertain by inquiry whether the conveyance was intended as a final adjustment of the rights of the parties. Dubbels v. Thompson, 49 M 550, 143 P 986 (1914).

Lien Extinguished When Debt Barred: When the debt is barred the lien to secure it is extinguished. Mont. Valley Land Co. v. Bestul, 126 M 426, 253 P2d 325 (1953).

Implied Amendment: Section 71-1-210, limiting the validity of a mortgage, unless renewed, to 8 years after maturity of the debt which it was given to secure, affects merely the lien of the mortgage and does not extend the life of the debt and to that extent amends this section; hence, when the debt dies, the mortgage dies with it. Humbird v. Arnet, 99 M 499, 44 P2d 756 (1935); Jones v. Hall, 90 M 69, 300 P 232 (1931).

Lien of Mortgage:

This section was made directly applicable to mortgages by section 45-106, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed). Berkin v. Healy, 52 M 398, 158 P 1020 (1916).

In the absence of legislation declaring a different rule, the lien of a mortgage on real property was not extinguished by the lapse of the period fixed by the statute within which an action to enforce payment of the debt could be brought and prosecuted to a successful termination.

However, such lien was extinguished by the provisions of this section. Berkin v. Healy, 52 M 398, 158 P 1020 (1916).

Case Notes

Substitution of Surety Bond for Lien — Lienee Not Entitled to Attorney Fees: Although the District Court discharged a construction lien after the property owner substituted a surety bond pursuant to 71-3-551, the substitution did not mean that the subcontractor failed to establish the lien and that the property owner was entitled to attorney fees. The Legislature did not intend for the lien substitute statute to allow lienees to recover their attorney fees by securing a surety bond despite their underlying liability. AAA Constr. of Missoula, LLC v. Choice Land Corp., 2011 MT 262, 362 Mont. 264, 264 P.3d 709.

Proper Award of Attorney Fees to Party Establishing Construction Lien: As prevailing party in a construction lien case, plaintiff was entitled to attorney fees, and statutory fee shifting provisions for the prevailing party created the presumption that plaintiff's lodestar fee was reasonable. Defendant failed to produce sufficient evidence to overcome the presumption of reasonableness or to demonstrate how the award of attorney fees was arbitrary, unreasonable, or substantially unjust. The award of attorney fees was affirmed. JTL Group, Inc. v. New Outlook, LLP, 2010 MT 1, 355 Mont. 1, 223 P.3d 912. See also Blue Ridge Homes v. Thein, 2008 MT 264, 345 Mont. 125, 191 P.3d 374.

Proper Award of Attorney Fees for Enforcement of Construction Lien: The District Court did not err in awarding plaintiff attorney fees related to plaintiff's construction lien arbitration award, successful enforcement of the arbitration award, efforts to foreclose on the lien, and efforts to win dismissal of a federal court action brought by defendant on the issue. Eisenhart v. Puffer, 2008 MT 58, 341 M 508, 178 P3d 139 (2008).

Posttrial Motions to Amend Judgment, to Limit Punitive Damages, and for Attorney Fees Properly Denied: In a construction contract case, defendants filed numerous posttrial motions, including motions to amend the judgment, to limit the punitive damages award, and for attorney fees and costs. The motions were denied, and defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The motion to amend the judgment was unsupported by any authority. The motion to limit punitive damages was based on the statutory limit of 3% of net worth enacted by the 2003 Legislature, effective October 1, 2003, but the cause of action accrued prior to October 1, 2003, and the statutory limit did not apply retroactively. For the motion for attorney fees and costs to be granted, defendants would have to have been the prevailing party in the action, but defendants failed to provide any argument explaining how they were the prevailing party. Accordingly, the District Court did not err in denying the posttrial motions. Murphy Homes, Inc. v. Muller, 2007 MT 140, 337 M 411, 162 P3d 106 (2007).

Judgment for Lesser Amount Than Claimed in Lien — No Proportional Reduction Required: The District Court found that $14,201.58 was due on a construction lien rather than $16,568 claimed in the lien. Defendant asserted that because this section allows attorney fees only for a claimant whose lien is established, plaintiff should have received only 86% of its attorney fees in proportion to the ratio of plaintiff's success to the amount claimed in the lien. The Supreme Court disagreed. This section does not require a proportional reduction in attorney fees when judgment is for a lesser amount than was claimed in the lien. LHC, Inc. v. Alvarez, 2007 MT 123, 337 M 294, 160 P3d 502 (2007).

Attorney Fees and Costs of Appeal Owing to Successful Lien Claimant: Under this section, a successful lien claimant is entitled to recover attorney fees and costs incurred at trial and on appeal. The Supreme Court remanded for a determination of attorney fees and costs of appeal to be awarded to the successful plaintiff in this case. Johnston v. Palmer, 2007 MT 99, 337 M 101, 158 P3d 998 (2007).

Improper Premise for Award of Plaintiff's Attorney Fees Based on Defendant's Affidavit — Abuse of Discretion Warranting Reversal: Plaintiff sought attorney fees on a Construction lien foreclosure. The District Court agreed that reasonable attorney fees were owed, but the court premised the amount on an affidavit submitted by defendant 19 months after the hearing without allowing plaintiff the opportunity to hear testimony and cross-examine. The Supreme Court held that the affidavit was not competent evidence. Because the District Court abused its discretion in awarding attorney fees in this manner, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a hearing in which both parties would have equal opportunity to present and hear relevant testimony and undertake necessary cross-examination. The court also affirmed that plaintiff was entitled to postjudgment interest on its legal fees from the date of the original judgment in which the District Court determined that plaintiff was entitled to its then-undetermined fees and costs. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006), following Glaspey v. Workman, 234 M 374, 763 P2d 666 (1988).

Award of Attorney Fees When Construction Lien Established: Although the timeliness of a construction lien was initially contested on appeal, once it was determined that a contractor had properly established a lien, the contractor was entitled to attorney fees for the costs of the appeal pursuant to this section. Rossi v. Pawiroredjo, 2004 MT 39, 320 M 63, 85 P3d 776 (2004).

Denial of Attorney Fees Previously Awarded Improper: An amendment of a summary judgment award, denying fees previously and properly awarded pursuant to this section, was inappropriate. (See 1999 amendment.) Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799, 53 St. Rep. 86 (1996).

Fee Nearly as Much as Claim:

Appellant cited the holding in Carkeek, supra, that an attorney fee was unreasonable in relation to the size of the lien. However, the Supreme Court noted the finding in Glaspey v. Workman, 234 M 374, 763 P2d 666 (1988), that an attorney fee that exceeds the amount in controversy is not per se excessive and that each case depends on its own unique set of facts. Therefore, a disproportionate award of attorney fees may not necessarily constitute an abuse of discretion in some fact situations. DeVoe v. Gust. Lagerquist & Sons, Inc., 244 M 141, 796 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 1527 (1990).

The District Court reduced the award of attorney's fees in a successful defense against a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure from $5,773.20 to $3,000. A reasonable attorney fee in a given case does not necessarily result from simple multiplication of the hours spent times a fixed hourly rate. To award an attorney's fee of $5,773.20 in defending against a $6,200 claim would appear most unreasonable regardless of the time spent, the skill involved in the work, the experience of the attorney, and similar considerations. There was no abuse of discretion by the District Court in awarding the fee, so it was not overturned on appeal. Carkeek v. Ayer, 188 M 345, 613 P2d 1013, 37 St. Rep. 1274 (1980).

Expert Witness Fees and Deposition Costs Not Included: Plaintiff that prevails in its action is entitled to recover attorney fees and costs. This does not include expert witness fees and costs. Tri-County Atlas, Inc. v. Brummer, 238 M 331, 779 P2d 46, 46 St. Rep. 1309 (1989).

Error in Failure to Award Attorney Fees: Under this section, it was error for the District Court to award judgment to a plaintiff who foreclosed on a construction lien and to then order each party to pay its own attorney fees. (See 1999 amendment.) Hanzel v. Marler, 237 M 521, 774 P2d 426, 46 St. Rep. 1020 (1989).

Total Amount of Claim Not Obtained — Award of Attorney Fees: Once a lien is established, this section mandates an award of attorney fees. The fact that a claimant does not receive the entire amount of his claim does not alter this mandate. Donnes v. Orlando, 221 M 356, 720 P2d 233, 43 St. Rep. 890 (1986).

Defense Counsel Fees:

This statute distinguishes between attorney fees and costs. Even if he is entitled to costs under former Rule 68, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), a defendant in a lien foreclosure action is entitled to attorney fees only if the lien is not established. (See 1999 amendment.) Schillinger v. Brewer, 215 M 333, 697 P2d 919, 42 St. Rep. 408 (1985).

When the evidence indicated that there was no lien to be foreclosed, as a matter of law, the defendant was allowed attorney's fee. Thompson v. Cure, 133 M 273, 322 P2d 323 (1958), distinguished in Valeo v. Tabish, 1999 MT 146, 295 M 34, 983 P2d 334, 56 St. Rep. 579 (1999). See also Mtn. W. Bank, N.A. v. Cherrad, LLC, 2013 MT 99, 369 Mont. 492, 301 P.3d 796.

A houseowner entered into a contract to erect a house in reliance on a lumber company's manager's representations that it was backing the contractor. When the houseowner paid the contractor, the lumber company was estopped from asserting a lien for materials, and the houseowner was entitled to a judgment including attorney's fees. Monarch Lumber Co. v. Wallace, 132 M 163, 314 P2d 884 (1957).

Priority of Lien — Attorney Fees: The holders of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) established the validity and priority of their lien and therefore are entitled to recover costs and attorney fees pursuant to this section. Home Interiors, Inc. v. Hendrickson, 214 M 194, 692 P2d 1229, 41 St. Rep. 2408 (1984).

Award of Attorney Fees — Contingent Contract — Proper: Plaintiff agreed to remodel a prefab home for defendant. He also built a foundation, added a bedroom and deck, and built a double garage. Plaintiff completed the basement and sent a bill to defendant. The bill was paid. The remainder of the work was completed, but defendant refused to pay, contending the oral agreement between the parties contained a "cap" of $30,000. Plaintiff contended the agreement was on a cost-plus basis, the unpaid portion of which was $63,310. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded the amount due with interest at 6% from the completion date. The court also awarded plaintiff attorney fees. Defendant contended attorney fees were not properly awarded. The Supreme Court adopted the rationale of Wight v. Hughes Livestock Co., Inc., 204 M 98, 664 P2d 303, 40 St. Rep. 696 (1983), a workers' compensation case. The court held that plaintiff is merely made whole by the award. To require him to pay attorney fees out of the award would be advantageous to defendant because defendant would pay only what was already owed and plaintiff would end up with less than the contract price. Plaintiff was unable to hire counsel on any basis other than a contingent fee due to financial limitations. Because of the substantial legal questions in the case, counsel was risking that his work would be uncompensated. The market value of counsel's service was affected by the need for a contingent fee. The award was proper. Frank L. Pirtz Constr., Inc. v. Hardin Town Pump, Inc., 214 M 131, 692 P2d 460, 41 St. Rep. 2366 (1984).

District Court Reduction of Attorney Fees Not Abuse of Discretion — Reasonable Attorney Fees Allowable for Defending Appeal: Lumber company filed a materialmen's lien (now construction lien) for unpaid amounts for materials supplied for construction of an addition to real property. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's order of foreclosure of the lien even though there was a minor defect in filing. The Supreme Court found that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by reducing the plaintiff's claimed attorney fees from $2,648.75 to $800 when amount in controversy totaled only $888. On appeal, plaintiff requested additional attorney fees of $1,285. The Supreme Court stated that although it was reluctant to award additional attorney fees under the circumstances, the language of this section is mandatory, and remanded to the District Court for further proceedings to establish the plaintiff's reasonable attorney fees for defending the appeal. Simkins-Hallin Lumber Co. v. Simonson, 214 M 36, 692 P2d 424, 41 St. Rep. 2305 (1984).

Validity of Lien — Attorney's Fees: The tenant is entitled to attorney's fees for the cost incurred in establishing the validity of his mechanics' lien (now construction lien). Kosena v. Eck, 195 M 12, 635 P2d 1287, 38 St. Rep. 1736 (1981).

Order of Trial: Attorney's fees are recoverable by the prevailing party in a lien foreclosure action. The fact that evidence of attorney's fees was allowed to be presented upon reopening of plaintiff's case in chief is within the discretion of the trial court, and defendant made no showing that he was injured by the manner in which the evidence was presented. Maxwell v. Anderson, 181 M 215, 593 P2d 29 (1979).

Attorney's Fees — Error in Amending Judgment: The District Court struck an award of attorney's fees to a defendant in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien (now construction lien). This was error because this section provides that attorney's fees must be allowed to a defendant against whose property the lien is claimed if the lien is not established. M. & R. Constr. Co. v. Shea, 180 M 77, 589 P2d 138 (1979).

Attorney's Fees — Lien Appeal: A claimant in a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure action is entitled to attorney's fees for defending an appeal if counsel's affidavit details the time expended on the appeal. Beck v. Hanson, 180 M 82, 589 P2d 141 (1979).

Award of Fees Not Discretionary: District Court's denial of recovery of attorney's fees in prosecution of mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure was reversed because the award of attorney's fees under this section is not discretionary. Matzinger v. Remco, Inc., 171 M 383, 558 P2d 650 (1976), followed in Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Holms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553, 42 St. Rep. 84 (1985).

Invalid Lien — Premature Action: Liens which were filed prematurely before the contracted work was completed or substantial performance had been made were invalid, and the property owners who defended against such invalid liens by contractors were entitled to attorney's fees. W. Plumbing of Bozeman v. Garrison, 171 M 85, 556 P2d 520 (1976).

Attorney's Claim for Services: This statute does not create authority for granting attorney fees in a proceeding for a Writ of Supervisory Control in a dispute over the proper amount of attorney's fees to be awarded to a court-appointed attorney. State ex rel. Stephens v. District Court, 170 M 22, 550 P2d 385 (1976).

Wage Claims Generally: There is no statutory provision for the allowance of an attorney's fee in the ordinary action for wages or salary. This section has reference only to claims of employees against an employer who makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors. McBride v. School District, 88 M 110, 290 P 252 (1940).

Preliminary Costs: It was error in a suit to foreclose a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) to allow as costs items charged for the preparation and verification of the lien and for an abstract of title to the property. Neuman v. Grant, 36 M 77, 92 P 43 (1907).

Case Notes

Interaction of Agricultural Lien Law and Uniform Commercial Code on Secured Transactions — Filing of Agricultural Lien Adequate to Fulfill Financing Statement Requirements of Uniform Commercial Code: Agricultural liens are not security interests, and only the parts of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.) that expressly refer to agricultural liens, rather than those that refer only to security interests, apply to agricultural liens. Merely because collateral consists of farm products does not automatically turn an agricultural lien into a security interest. The attachment rules of Article 9 do not apply to agricultural liens; rather, agricultural liens attach according to the rules in the statutes that created agricultural liens. Similarly, 71-3-902 clearly delineates the procedure for perfecting an agricultural lien. This case presented a potential conflict regarding lien priority in that 71-3-904 grants agricultural liens a superpriority status that is not dependent on being the first to file, while 30-9A-322 states that an agricultural lien has priority over a conflicting security interest on the same collateral if the lien is perfected pursuant to 30-9A-310 of the U.C.C. Thus, agricultural lienors must satisfy the perfection requirements of 30-9A-310 in addition to the perfection requirements of 71-3-902, and by doing so, the lienors will be insulated from the U.C.C. first-in-time rule and retain the superpriority status pursuant to 71-3-904. However, because agricultural liens require the same and more information as a U.C.C. filing and both filings are documented in the same database, the filing of an agricultural lien with the Secretary of State also satisfied the financing statement requirements of the U.C.C., and a duplicate filing of a U.C.C. financing statement is not required. Stockman Bank of Mont. v. Mon-Kota, Inc., 2008 MT 74, 342 M 115, 180 P3d 1125 (2008).

Part 2
Federal Tax Liens

Part Compiler's Comments

States Enacting Uniform Federal Lien Registration Act: In 1983, Montana adopted with minor changes the Uniform Federal Lien Registration Act, (Ch. 396, L. 1983), the successor to the Revised Federal Tax Lien Registration Act. This act has been adopted in the following states: California, Idaho, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Nevada, North Dakota, Oregon, and Wisconsin. The Uniform Law Commissioners' prefatory note states that the new act does not make any changes to the previous act "except as required to prescribe the method of perfecting the employer liability lien, provided by the Pension Reform Act and any other similar liens."

Uniform Federal Lien Registration Act — Prefatory Note: The Uniform Law Commissioners' prefatory note to the Uniform Federal Lien Registration Act states: "This Act is a successor to the Revised Federal Tax Lien Registration Act as revised by the Conference in 1966 and does not make any drafting changes to the previous Act except as required to prescribe the method of perfecting the employer liability lien, provided by the Pension Reform Act, and any other similar liens.

Since most of the policy decisions made in drafting this Act were derived from the Revised Uniform Federal Tax Lien Registration Act as it was revised in 1966, it would appear helpful to include here the Prefatory Note which was included with the earlier Act in 1966.

"Section 6323 of the United States Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by P.L. 89-719, Federal Tax Lien Act of 1966 provides that liens for an unpaid federal tax shall not be valid as against mortgagees, pledgees, judgment creditors, purchasers and holders of other security interest until notice of the tax lien has been filed in an office designated by the law of the state in which the property subject to the lien is situated, or, in the absence of a valid state designation, in the federal district court for the place where the property is situated. Under federal law, personal property is deemed situated at the residence of the taxpayer regardless of its physical location.

"Thus the new federal act would invalidate any provision of a state law which required filing of liens for property other than real estate at more than one office or at any state office other than that associated with the residence of the taxpayer. State law requiring filing at the physical location of personal property or at both physical location and residence of the taxpayer is not permissible and if a state law includes such a provision the Internal Revenue Service would, for that state, file liens in the federal district court rather than in a state office.

"The new federal legislation provides for filing of certain types of certificates and notices affecting previously filed liens which some of the existing state legislation does not provide for. The effectiveness of these additional notices as a communication to interested persons depends on their being filed in the same office where the notice of lien is filed. It is necessary, therefore, that state law be broadened to permit filing and indexing of these additional notices.

"In addition to the above reasons for new state legislation, there is another reason for revising existing state laws concerned with federal tax liens. Many of the existing laws are no longer appropriate in the states (all but three in December, 1966) which have enacted the Uniform Commercial Code. It is highly desirable that the place for filing and searching for federal tax liens be the same place as that designated by the state law under the Uniform Commercial Code for filing and searching for a security interest in the same property. Unfortunately, complete coordination of federal tax lien filing with the rules for filing under the Uniform Commercial Code cannot be fully achieved by state legislation. The United States Supreme Court has held that the Congressional permission to a state to designate the office for filing of federal tax liens cannot be taken advantage of by the states in such a way as to require the federal tax collector to specify the particular property to which the lien applies. United States v. Union Central Life Insurance Company, 363 U.S. 291 (1961). The Internal Revenue Service has interpreted this decision to preclude a state requirement for filing federal tax liens in conformity with the Uniform Commercial Code because of the Code's differing requirements for various types of property and its requirement for filing in two offices in some cases. Rev.Rul. 64-170, 1964-1 Cum.Bull. 499. P.L. 89-719 continues this interpretation.

"Nevertheless, it is possible to go a long way toward bringing federal tax lien filing into conformity with the Uniform Commercial Code and it is highly desirable to do so in order to accommodate to commercial convenience so far as possible within the limitations of federal law. States which departed from the uniformity of the Commercial Code by amendment as to the place of filing may now wish to conform their Commercial Code to the original uniform version at the same time they change the federal tax lien requirements. The Act presented here calls for filing on taxpayers who are corporations or partnerships in the office of the Secretary of State and in all other cases in an office in the place where the taxpayer resides. No provision is possible calling for filing of the tax lien at the place where particular kinds of property are physically located. Any attempt to deviate from the proposed place of filing in this Code risks non-compliance with Federal Law. The federal act does permit filing of notices as to real property in an office at the place where the real property is situated. It has no such permission for other kinds of property. Section 1 of the Act contained herein complies with the federal requirement.

"The present Act was prepared in light of Public Law 89-719 of 1966 amending Section 6323 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Internal Revenue Service has reviewed the Act and believes it meets the requirement of federal law. The Conference recommends that it be adopted and that existing legislation concerning federal tax liens be repealed.""

Official Comments

Uniform Law Commissioners' Comment: The official comment to this section prepared by the Uniform Law Commissioners states: "1. In order to accommodate to commercial convenience so far as possible within the limitations of Section 6323 of the Internal Revenue Code, filing with the Secretary of State is provided for the lien on tangible and intangible personal property of partnerships and corporations (as those terms are defined in Section 7701 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and the implementing regulations) thus including within "partnerships" such entities as joint ventures and within "corporations" such entities as joint stock corporations and business trusts.

Because most purchases and secured transactions involving personal property of natural persons relate to consumer goods or farm personal property, searches for liens against those persons are more likely to be made at the local level. Thus, with few exceptions a search for corporation federal tax liens with the Secretary of State and for natural persons with an officer in the county of residence will normally be in the same office as searches for security interests under the Uniform Commercial Code.

Section 6323 of the Internal Revenue Code "locates" all tangible and intangible personal property at the residence of the taxpayer even though it is physically located elsewhere in the same or in another state. State law cannot vary this requirement. State law does affect the result, however, in that state law determines the "residence" of a taxpayer. See IRC §6323(f)(2). Filing at the physical location of personal property of a taxpayer who is not a resident of the state of location of the property cannot be required.

2. The coverage of this Act now extends beyond federal tax liens as described in the Comment to Section 1. [Montana omits this section.]

3. In some jurisdictions, a question may be raised concerning the propriety of incorporating federal law by reference. In others, the place of filing described in this Act may not correspond to the place of filing under the Uniform Commercial Code. Alteration of this Act in these respects may create the peril that the notices will be filed in the federal district court, thus eliminating the benefits of this Act."

Official Comments

Uniform Law Commissioners' Comment: The official comment to this section prepared by the Uniform Law Commissioners states: "1. It is the practice of the Internal Revenue Service to regard a "certificate of discharge" as primarily referable to specific pieces of property, so a certificate of discharge corresponds to a release under Section 9-406 of the Uniform Commercial Code. A "certificate of release" in tax practice is equivalent to a "termination statement" in Section 9-404 of the Uniform Commercial Code in the sense that it is a general statement applicable to all property or types of property referred to in the termination statement.

2. It is expected that the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation will adopt the same practices as the Internal Revenue Service or other practices as the circumstances may require."

1987 Amendment: Deleted former (5) that read: "(5) The fee for a certificate is $2. Upon request, the filing officer shall furnish a copy of any notice of federal lien or notice or certificate affecting a federal lien for a fee of $1 per page."

1983 Amendment: Near beginning of (1), changed "tax lien" to "federal lien"; near end of (1)(b), after "receipt, the" substituted "title and address of the official or entity certifying the lien" for "serial number of the district director"; after "the total" substituted "amount" for "unpaid balance of the assessment"; in (3), after "alphabetical" deleted "federal tax"; and in (4), after "notice of" deleted "federal tax".

Official Comments

Uniform Law Commissioners' Comment: The official comment to this section prepared by the Uniform Law Commissioners states: "1. It is understood that the Treasury accepts the obligation to pay nondiscriminatory filing fees for filing notice of tax liens but desires those payments to be on a monthly billing basis. For notice of tax lien on real property, the filing fee for a real estate mortgage may serve as a standard; for a filing fee on notice of tax lien on personal property the filing fee for filing a financing statement may serve as a standard. There is now no established practice concerning fees for other notices. The certificate of discharge is comparable to a satisfaction of a real estate mortgage and to release of collateral under Section 9-406 of the Uniform Commercial Code. Those instruments are usually filed by persons other than the Treasury, and a filing fee for filing them should be prescribed.

A different problem is presented by certificates of release or non-attachment. Sometimes those certificates serve the purpose of permitting the public filing official to clear his records, and for that purpose the filing fee perhaps should be low in order to induce filing. Sometimes those notices are filed for purposes of the taxpayer. Given the volume of notices of tax liens which are filed daily in large filing offices, it may serve the public interest to have filed certificates of release. From the standpoint of the Treasury, those certificates serve no important purpose, and the Treasury may not file them if the fee is large. In adoption of this Act, consideration should be given by the states to provide a substantially smaller fee for filing a certificate of release, so that when a tax case is closed the Treasury will file those releases in a routine manner in order to reduce the storage and administrative problem of the local and state filing officers.

2. It is understood that the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation will accept the same obligations as those imposed on the Treasury for federal tax liens."

Wage Earner's Assignee as Claimant: After a wage earner has once established his right to preference payment for wages earned within the period of 60 days immediately preceding a levy upon the property of his employer, by giving the notice provided for by the "Wageworkers' Law", he may assign his claim. The assignment carries with it the lien as an incident, and the assignee is therefore entitled to assert the preference. Thompson v. Twodot Fertilizer Co., 71 M 486, 230 P 588 (1924).

Affirmation of Judgment: When there is no evidence in the record and the findings of the court bring the plaintiff within the operation of the statute known as the "Wageworkers' Law", a judgment for plaintiff against an assignee for the benefit of creditors will be affirmed on the authority of Flanders v. Murphy, 10 M 398, 25 P 1052 (1891) and Marshall v. Livingston Nat'l Bank, 11 M 351, 28 P 312 (1891). Knatz v. Wise, 16 M 555, 41 P 710 (1895).

Assignment to Creditor Directly for His Benefit: It is no objection to a complaint in an action by a laborer to enforce his claim that it alleges an assignment to a creditor directly for his sole benefit, and not as a trustee or for the benefit of creditors. Encumbrance Interpreted as Farm Laborer's Lien — No General Lien for Breach of Contract to Provide Equity in Land: Son filed a lien against the family farm held by his mother, asserting it was a general lien under 71-3-101. The Supreme Court held that in the absence of an express agreement to give a lien, a general lien can be claimed only as arising from dealings in particular trades or businesses in which the existence of a general lien has been recognized by judicial decisions or if a custom to that effect can be established by evidence. General liens are looked upon with disfavor. The court refuses to recognize a general lien for breach of a contract to provide equity in land or to convey land upon the owner's death. DECISIONS AFTER 1987 GENERAL REVISION OF MECHANICS' LIEN LAWS

No Authority of Arbitration Panel to Foreclose Construction Lien Against Party Not Involved in Arbitration: An arbitration panel liquidated damages related to breach of contract actions filed by both parties and also made findings of fact regarding the issue of a construction lien placed by plaintiff on improvements to defendant's property. The District Court subsequently relied on the findings in granting summary judgment in plaintiff's favor on the construction lien. Defendant third party that was not a party to arbitration contended that the panel overlooked disputed issues of fact in entering judgment in the lien foreclosure action, and the Supreme Court agreed. The panel had authority to liquidate the parties' breach of contract damages, but no authority to foreclose the construction lien or make findings of fact regarding foreclosure because the third party was not involved in the arbitration. The case was remanded for further proceedings on the lien and its foreclosure. Dick Anderson Constr., Inc. v. Monroe Constr. Co., LLC, 2009 MT 416, 353 M 534, 221 P3d 675 (2009).

Doctrine of Foreseeability Not Sufficiently Raised in Context of Construction Contract: Defendants in a construction contract dispute attempted to raise the issue of foreseeability as a defense, asserting that if plaintiff suffered damages, the damages were the result of plaintiff's own negligence. The District Court determined that foreseeability had no place in the lawsuit because foreseeability had not been pleaded, in that foreseeability to determine the size of a particular construction contract was not the same as foreseeability from the standpoint of causal relationship in a negligence claim. The Supreme Court concluded that defendants did not sufficiently raise the foreseeability issue either in pleadings or in the pretrial order, even assuming that it had a place in the case, so the District Court did not err in barring the foreseeability defense. Murphy Homes, Inc. v. Muller, 2007 MT 140, 337 M 411, 162 P3d 106 (2007).

Contractor Entitled to Stop Work Pursuant to Developer's Breach of Contract — Contractor Improperly Required to Reimburse Postbreach Expenses: Plaintiff contractor submitted a claim for construction costs to defendant developer's architect, who approved payment, but the developer refused to pay the costs, so the contractor stopped work. The developer hired another contractor to finish the work, and the District Court penalized the contractor by requiring reimbursement of the developer's costs for finishing the work. The Supreme Court reversed the award. The contractor was entitled to stop work because of the developer's material breach of contract, and the developer was not entitled to benefit from its own wrong, so it was error to penalize the contractor for amounts expended by the developer to finish the work. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006).

Insufficient Evidence to Warrant Award of Home Office Overhead: Plaintiff contractor sought to enforce a contractor's lien and was awarded damages, but the contractor sought additional damages to cover extended costs for home office overhead occasioned by delays caused by defendant, claiming that under the contract, delay costs were to be borne by the responsible party. A special master found that plaintiff had failed to establish entitlement to additional home office overhead costs and that the evidence submitted in support of the claim was not credible. The District Court adopted the special master's findings, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Without addressing the credibility of the evidence, the Supreme Court held that the evidence submitted by the contractor was insufficient to establish entitlement to additional home office overhead costs. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006).

Prejudgment Interest Allowable on Amount Recoverable Under Construction Lien: Although a construction contract provided for payment of prejudgment interest, the District Court refused to approve it on the amount that plaintiff was entitled to collect under a Construction lien. On appeal, the Supreme Court approved payment of prejudgment interest, notwithstanding defendant's challenge to the amount of the claim. Plaintiff's damages were certain or capable of being ascertained, and a dispute on the amount owed on the claim did not transform the claim into one that did not bear prejudgment interest, nor did a difference between claimed damages and the amount actually awarded preclude the award of prejudgment interest. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006), following Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Helms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553 (1985), and followed in LHC, Inc. v. Alvarez, 2007 MT 123, 337 M 294, 160 P3d 502 (2007), and Total Indus. Plant Serv., Inc. v. Turner Indus. Group, LLC, 2013 MT 5, 368 Mont. 189, 294 P.3d 363.

Failure of Trial Court to Consider Damages From Defective Construction Not Erroneous: In a construction lien case, the District Court adopted the contractor's proposed findings and conclusions almost verbatim. Plaintiffs alleged error because the court failed to consider damages from defective workmanship, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Although the verbatim adoption of findings and conclusions is discouraged, in this case, the trial court considered substantial but conflicting evidence from both parties regarding the quality of the work and resolved the conflict in favor of the contractor. Given the substantial evidence upon which the decision was made, the Supreme Court declined to disturb the findings. Rossi v. Pawiroredjo, 2004 MT 39, 320 M 63, 85 P3d 776 (2004).

Final Work Performed to Enhance Value of Project, Not to Extend Time for Lien Filing — Lien Timely Filed: Defendant initially ceased work on plaintiffs' residence on April 6 but returned on June 11 to try to clean some tile that was stained upon installation; however, the cleaning attempt was unsuccessful. On September 7, 88 days later, defendant filed a construction lien for the balance due, plus interest. The District Court held that the filing was timely because defendant had worked on the project within the previous 90 days and that the work was performed to enhance the value of the property, not to extend the time for filing a lien. Plaintiffs contended that the lien filing was untimely because the unsuccessful work on June 11 did not render a tangible improvement to the property and that the last actual work occurred on April 6, more than 90 days prior to filing. The Supreme Court affirmed. The fact that the June 11 work was unsuccessful or insignificant in relation to the overall work performed was not conclusive with regard to extending the time for lien filing. So long as the final work was done to enhance the property value, it was sufficient to extend the time for filing a construction lien. Rossi v. Pawiroredjo, 2004 MT 39, 320 M 63, 85 P3d 776 (2004).

Purpose of Procedural Lien Requirements to Provide Notice to and Protect Interests of Property Owners — Construction Lien Statutes Construed: The purpose of the procedural requirements in construction lien law is to impart notice to the owner of real property that a lien has been filed against the property and to protect all parties dealing with the property, including subsequent owners. The requirements will be strictly construed, but once the procedure is fulfilled, the statutes will be liberally construed so as to give effect to their remedial purpose. Failure to state on the lien statement the owner or person whose interest in property is sought to be charged is fatal to the lien. In the case at bar, Swain listed Battershell as the contracting owner, but Battershell held no interest in the property at the time that the lien was filed and was not listed as owner of record in the County Clerk's office; thus, the listing of Battershell as the contracting owner on the lien statement was fatal to the lien. Swain v. Battershell, 1999 MT 101, 294 M 282, 983 P2d 873, 56 St. Rep. 424 (1999), distinguishing Mtn. St. Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Right to Retain Lien — Substantive Property Right: Talcott Construction brought an action to foreclose on its construction lien on certain condominiums. Mountain Bank filed an irrevocable letter of credit with the District Court on behalf of the defendant, P&D Land Enterprises, and the court entered an order dissolving Talcott's lien. The defendant argued that Talcott could not appeal the dissolving of the lien because former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), referred only to writs of attachment. The Supreme Court held that an appeal was proper because the rule referred to "attachments" and the construction lien was an attachment and a property right, the release of which was the deprivation of a substantive right. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 261 M 260, 862 P2d 395, 50 St. Rep. 1313 (1993).

Priority of Recorded Trust Deed Over Mechanics' Lien for Improvements: Schenk borrowed $80,000 from American Federal Savings and Loan Association (American) to purchase a bar, executing a promissory note secured by a deed of trust in favor of American. None of the loan proceeds were used as payment for improvements. Subsequent to completion of remodeling and electrical work on the bar, an electric company perfected a mechanics' lien. American later filed a complaint seeking foreclosure of the deed of trust, and the electric company asserted as an affirmative defense the priority of the mechanics' lien. The District Court granted summary judgment to the company, citing the lien priority. The Supreme Court reversed, based on the facts that: (1) the parties entered into the loan agreement almost 1 year prior to the commencement of improvements; (2) American lacked any resource to determine that improvements would be commenced at a date far removed from the loan date; (3) American could not withhold funds intended for construction because the loan was used for purchase rather than improvements; and (4) Schenk was under no obligation to notify American of the remodeling, and even if notified, American had no legal means to further secure its lien position. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n v. Schenk, 241 M 177, 785 P2d 1024, 47 St. Rep. 177 (1990), distinguishing Beck v. Hanson, 180 M 82, 589 P2d 141 (1979), Home Interiors, Inc. v. Henderson, 214 M 194, 692 P2d 1229 (1984), and Tri-County Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. Levee Restorations, Inc., 221 M 403, 720 P2d 247 (1986).

DECISIONS PRIOR TO 1987 GENERAL REVISION OF MECHANICS' LIEN LAWS

PARTIES WHO MAY HAVE LIEN

General

Property Value Not Enhanced — Quantum Meruit Inapplicable: Plaintiff contractors argued that they be allowed to recover expenditures for work they performed on commercial property, under the theory of quantum meruit. However, recovery was disallowed upon finding that the work had not enhanced the value of the property but instead had rendered the property unusable commercially and noncommercially. Durand v. Dowdall, 232 M 347, 757 P2d 1302, 45 St. Rep. 1104 (1988).

Materialman Not Bound by Owners' Agreement to Share Costs: In an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), an agreement between the lessors and lessees of the liened property on sharing improvement costs is a matter to be settled only between the lessors and lessees. The contractor was not a party to that contract and is not bound by its terms. Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Holms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553, 42 St. Rep. 84 (1985).

Work to Enhance Property — Extension of Filing Time: Plaintiff agreed to remodel a prefab home for defendant. He also built a foundation, added a bedroom and deck, and built a double garage. Plaintiff completed the basement and sent a bill to defendant. The bill was paid. The remainder of the work was completed, but defendant refused to pay, contending the oral agreement between the parties contained a "cap" of $30,000. Plaintiff contended the agreement was on a cost-plus basis, the unpaid portion of which was $63,310. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded the amount due with interest at 6% from the completion date. The plaintiff had filed a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) on the property. Defendant contended the lien was invalid because it was not timely filed. The lien was filed on July 9, 1981. The last working day for plaintiff was in December 1980, but carpet was relaid on April 20, 1981. While performing additional insubstantial work will not extend the 90-day time limit for filing a lien, if the work was done to enhance the property and not merely to extend the time limit, the lien is timely. The District Court found the work was done to enhance the property, and its finding was supported by substantial credible evidence. Frank L. Pirtz Constr., Inc. v. Hardin Town Pump, Inc., 214 M 131, 692 P2d 460, 41 St. Rep. 2366 (1984).

Architect's Services — Enhancement of Structure or Other Thing on Property Required: As agreed with landowner, architect prepared plans and specifications for buildings. Before any construction was begun, the project was abandoned. The landowner refused to pay the architect, and the architect filed a lien against the land under 71-3-501 (now repealed). The lien was invalid because the architect's services did not enhance the value of a structure or other thing built on the property. Kenneth D. Collins Agency v. Hagerott, 211 M 303, 684 P2d 487, 41 St. Rep. 1375 (1984).

Contract Ceiling Price — Precludes Quantum Meruit: Plaintiff agreed to build a house for defendants. The contract entered into contained cost-plus language as well as ceiling price language. Costs were more than had been anticipated. Defendants ordered plaintiff to stop working on the house. Defendants paid the ceiling price referred to in the contract. Plaintiff filed a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) on the property. A trial was held, with the judge finding for defendants. Plaintiff maintained that regardless of the terms of the contract he was entitled to a reasonable quantum meruit for supplying materials and services from which defendants received the benefit. Cases where this was previously allowed did not involve a ceiling price provision, however. There was no implied agreement to waive the ceiling price, nor was there a preponderance of evidence indicating a sum owed to plaintiff in equity. Matos v. Rohrer, 203 M 162, 661 P2d 443, 40 St. Rep. 366 (1983), distinguished in Lewistown Miller Constr. Co., Inc. v. Martin, 2011 MT 325, 363 Mont. 208, 271 P.3d 48.

Repair by Tenant as Basis for Lien: The leased premises were partially destroyed by fire. The landlord had a contractual obligation to repair the building but failed to repair. The tenant completed the repairs himself with the knowledge and consent of the landlord. After the repairs were completed, the landlord attempted, contrary to the terms of the lease, to drastically increase the rent. A dispute arose over the rent increase, and the tenant filed a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) to cover the cost of the repairs. The court held that there was an implied contract between the parties, and an implied contract is sufficient to support a valid mechanics' lien (now construction lien). In addition, the landlord's totally unjustified demand for drastically increased rental payment after the completion of the repairs presents an even stronger equitable basis to uphold the lien. The tenant is entitled to a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) in the full amount of the value of any permanent repairs that were the duty of the landlord to provide. Kosena v. Eck, 195 M 12, 635 P2d 1287, 38 St. Rep. 1736 (1981).

Counterclaim for Defective Performance — Finding Necessary Before Denial: When the trial court did not enter a judgment or make a general finding on defendant's counterclaim alleging defective performance, it cannot be implied that the claim was without merit. The cause was remanded for entry of findings and judgment disposing of the counterclaim. Bauer v. Cook, 182 M 221, 596 P2d 200 (1979).

Breach of Contract — Abandonment of Jobsite: Defendant's refusal to authorize payment to a contractor upon completion of a portion of construction when the evidence indicated that time was of the essence and the defendant had delayed construction constituted a total breach of contract justifying abandonment of the jobsite and giving the contractor the right to file and enforce a mechanics' lien (now construction lien). Bauer v. Cook, 182 M 221, 596 P2d 200 (1979).

Award Based on Reasonable Cost Notwithstanding Contract: Under proper circumstances an award can be made on the reasonable cost of labor and materials furnished by the lienholder, in disregard of the original contract between the parties. Maxwell v. Anderson, 181 M 215, 593 P2d 29 (1979).

Waiver of Lien: Plaintiff retained lien rights for money owing to him despite his execution of a series of lien releases written in general terms when each release was executed upon the payment of an amount of money and uncontradicted parol testimony indicated that the parties regarded the lien waivers to be releases only as to amounts paid and not general releases of lien rights. Fillbach v. Inland Constr. Corp., 178 M 374, 584 P2d 1274 (1978).

Construction Superintendent: Lien of general construction superintendent on housing projects was invalid and void when there was no proof in the record of the amount of money due and owing to him under terms of contract with investment company and party doing actual construction work. Harsh Mont. Corp. v. Locke, 134 M 150, 328 P2d 926 (1958).

Failure of Contractor to Pay Laborers and Materialmen: The fact that a plaintiff building contractor did not pay claims of certain materialmen furnishing labor and materials in the remodeling of a residence could not result in relieving the owner of liability under the contract. Because the contractor made no claim for the items furnished in his lien foreclosure action, the owner was liable directly to the materialmen and no prejudice resulted to the owner from the contractor's failure to pay the claims. If the plaintiff had paid them, then he would simply have added the amounts of such payments to his own claim and lien plus 10% for plaintiff's services and supervision. Smith v. Gunniss, 115 M 362, 144 P2d 186 (1943).

Assignment to Trustee for Collection: Various laborers filed lien claims for wages due them from a mining company, and the money to pay their claims was furnished by certain persons, whereupon the laborers assigned their claims and liens to one of such persons as trustee. Such trustee had the right to enforce the lien held by him for the benefit of those who paid off the laborers' claims. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Enhancement of Mining Claim Unnecessary for Lien: When a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) is for labor performed on a mining claim, as distinguished from that performed on a building or structure, there need be no enhancement of the property in order to entitle claimant to a lien. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Prior Understanding Not Required to File Lien: In order for a lien to attach there need not have been an understanding between a materialman and the purchaser of materials that they were being furnished upon the credit of the particular building. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Materialman Not Bound by Contractor's Agreement or to Deal Directly With Owner: The right to a materialmen's lien (now construction lien) may not be taken away by implication. A materialman's knowledge that the contractor had agreed in writing to turn the building over free from encumbrances did not affect his right to a lien. The materialman did not assent to be bound by such contract. Further he did not deal directly with the owner, but dealt with her sons as lessees, and the owner gave her consent and ratified what was done by making a substantial payment. Morin Lumber Co. v. Person, 110 M 114, 99 P2d 206 (1940).

Necessary Parties to Action: In a proceeding to foreclose a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) instituted by an oil well driller under 71-3-501 (now repealed) and 71-3-1002, asserted against a leasehold interest, neither the lessor nor, in the case of an assigned lease, the assignor is a necessary party. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Callender, 84 M 178, 274 P 834 (1929).

Burden of Proof: The burden is on a lien claimant to establish his lien, and to support this burden he must show not only that he furnished the materials, but also that they were used for the enhancement of the property to which he claims a right to resort as security for the debt thus created. In the absence of this showing, his equity does not arise. Rogers-Templeton Lumber Co. v. Welch, 56 M 321, 184 P 838 (1919); Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 M 65, 60 P 594 (1900).

Who May Assert Lien
What Property Is Lienable

Property Covered by Lien: When defendant owned seven unpatented mining claims and leased such claims under agreement requiring lessee to do shaft and engineering work, and such work was subsequently done by plaintiff with knowledge of lessor, mechanics' lien (now construction lien) held by plaintiff attached to all mining claims held by defendant, notwithstanding that plaintiff performed work on only one such claim in group of seven claims. Fausett v. Blanchard, 154 M 301, 463 P2d 319 (1969).

Materialmen of Subcontractor: The materialmen of the subcontractor were not entitled to a lien under the facts of this case. Any implied contractual relationship between the owner and the materialmen through the contractor and the subcontractor was disaffirmed by agreement of the parties. Glacier St. Elec. Supply Co. v. Hoyt, 152 M 415, 451 P2d 90 (1969).

Abandoned Improvements — Delay in Completion:

When contract specifically said that contractor's ability to continue work would be dependent upon prompt payment by owner as agreed and owner did not pay as agreed, contractor was allowed foreclosure of lien even though he was unable to complete the work. Gramm v. Ins. Unlimited, 141 M 456, 378 P2d 662 (1963), distinguished in Intermtn. Elec., Inc. v. Berndt, 164 M 67, 518 P2d 1168 (1974).

The abandonment of an improvement before its completion without fault of the contractor does not abrogate his right or that of laborers and materialmen to liens for the value of the work done and the materials furnished. In such case the improvement is considered completed, so far as the rights of the lienors are concerned. When the owner frequently makes changes in the plans, causing delay and necessitating additional work, materials, and expense and permits the contractor to continue after expiration of the time fixed for completion, the owner waives the original date as if the extended time had been originally fixed in the contract. Smith v. Gunniss, 115 M 362, 144 P2d 186 (1943).

"Structures":

A platform without foundation, walls, or roof, except for a wall on one side to serve as an instrument panel and so constructed so that it could be moved if the location did not prove satisfactory, was not a structure within the meaning of 71-3-501 (now repealed). Cascade Elec. Co. v. Assoc. Creditors, Inc., 124 M 370, 224 P2d 146 (1950).

Under the rule of "noscitur a sociis", i.e., the meaning of a word may be known from the accompanying words, a threshing machine is not a "structure" within the meaning of 71-3-501 (now repealed). A structure to be lienable must be attached to the land at the time labor is performed upon or materials are used in connection with its creation, improvement, or repair upon it. Barnes v. Mont. Lumber Co., 67 M 481, 216 P 335 (1923).

"Fixtures": Machines, motors, and other electrical equipment placed upon a movable platform were not fixtures so as to make them lienable. Cascade Elec. Co. v. Assoc. Creditors, Inc., 124 M 370, 224 P2d 146 (1950).

Inclusion of Articles Not Used in Building: In the absence of a fraudulent intent, the fact that a notice or claim of lien may include some items which are lienable and others which are not or the fact that the claim was made for a larger amount than the claimant shows himself entitled to will not vitiate or destroy the lien for the amount actually due the claimant. The inclusion in a contractor's lien claim of materials not used in the dwelling remodeled did not prejudice the owner when the judgment of the court provided for a proper reduction for such items. Smith v. Gunniss, 115 M 362, 144 P2d 186 (1943).

Architectural Services — Sampling Ore, Etc.: "Architectural services", rendered by a foreign engineering company, consisting of technical work in the sampling of ore, metallurgical tests, preparation of mining plant specifications, making blueprints, etc., used in the construction of a quartz mill as well as supervising its construction, and an item for placing orders for machinery to enable the mining company to obtain wholesale prices thereon, was lienable. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Corporation as Person: A corporation is a "person" within the meaning of the mechanics' and materialmen's lien (now construction lien) law, and as such may claim a lien under 71-3-501 (now repealed). Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Independent Contractor's Right to Claim Lien: An independent contractor may claim, under 71-3-501 (now repealed), a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) whether he hires servants to do the actual work or not. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Lien for Tools and Machinery or Labor as Extending to Entire Unit: By virtue of 70-15-104, mining tools and machinery are deemed affixed to the mine; hence in effect they constitute "machinery or fixtures for" mining claims under 71-3-501 (now repealed), entitling one who furnishes the same or performs labor thereon to a lien, which extends to all improvements and structures operated as a unit in the common enterprise. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Trucker Entitled to Lien: A trucker who hauled lumber and other materials for use in the erection of a building on a mining claim is entitled to a lien for the costs of delivery thereof, but not for hauling groceries and other supplies which are consumed in mining operations, or for the hauling of concentrates to a smelter. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Extent of Lien as to Land: The lien given by 71-3-501 (now repealed) attaches primarily to the structure in the erection of which the labor or materials were used, and extends only incidentally to the land upon which it is situated. Stritzel-Spaberg Lumber Co. v. Edwards, 50 M 49, 144 P 772 (1914).

Lien Not to Be Denied Because It Would Necessitate Removal of Building: The lien on a building cannot be denied because of the fact that some injury may result to the realty from the removal of the building. Section 71-3-501 (now repealed) contemplates removal, whether injury does or does not result. Stritzel-Spaberg Lumber Co. v. Edwards, 50 M 49, 144 P 722 (1914).

Nonlienable Articles: Illuminating oil, mica grease, lubricating oil, and gasoline for fuel used in a mining plant did not enhance the value or become a part of the machinery, and hence were not lienable within 71-3-501 (now repealed). A. M. Holter Hardware Co. v. Ontario Min. Co., 24 M 198, 61 P 8 (1900).

Material Entering Into the Construction: A cover for a stovepipe flue, opening into the chimney from the interior of a building and removable when such flue was to be used, was not material entering into the construction of the building, or a fixture, and such building was not subject to a lien therefor. Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 M 65, 60 P 594 (1900).

Statutory Construction

Quantum Meruit Action on Modified Written Contract — Completion of Contract Prevented by Defendant: Where, following oral modification by the parties of a written contract for the construction of a foundation under the defendant's house, the defendant procured a third party to finish the work, the District Court did not err in refusing to grant the defendant's motion for a directed verdict. It makes no difference to the resolution of the case that the contract was partially written and partially oral, as the mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statute is remedial and should be given a liberal construction in order to achieve its purposes. Because the defendant prevented the plaintiff from carrying out the remainder of the modified contract, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for the work it did do, under its quantum meruit claim. William Bros. Constr. v. Vaughn, 193 M 224, 631 P2d 688, 38 St. Rep. 1070 (1981).

Counterclaim by Home Owners Allowed: The rule denying a lien claimant a personal judgment against a property owner in a lien foreclosure action when privity of contract is absent cannot be conversely applied to deny a property owner a personal judgment against a lien claimant for damages attributable to the lien claimant and arising out of a contract between the property owner and the prime contractor. Miller v. Melaney, 172 M 74, 560 P2d 902 (1977).

Claim Arising Upon Contract: A mechanics' lien (now construction lien) under 71-3-501 (now repealed) is not a claim arising upon a contract under section 91-2704, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and the lien is not lost because creditor's claim is not filed. Hammer v. Chapin, 256 F. Supp. 818 (D.C. Mont. 1966).

Requirements of Chapter Exclusive: Compliance with the provisions of Title 71, ch. 3, part 5, is sufficient to perfect the lien, and 28-10-609 does not apply to mechanics' liens (now construction liens). Monarch Lumber Co. v. Haggard, 139 M 105, 360 P2d 794 (1961).

Form of Contract Immaterial: The right of a mechanic or materialman to a lien on property upon which he has supplied work, labor, or materials is not dependent upon whether the construction contract with the owner is written, oral, express, or implied; it is not the contract which creates the lien under 71-3-501 (now repealed), but the use of the materials furnished and the work and labor expended that give rise to the lien. Smith v. Gunniss, 115 M 362, 144 P2d 186 (1943).

Claimant Not Barred by Right to Agisters' Lien: The fact that an engineering company furnishing tools, machinery, and labor for their repair could have asserted an agisters' lien under 71-3-1201 did not deprive it of the right to assert a mechanics' lien (now construction lien). Nor does the fact that hauling building materials gives a trucker a carrier's lien under 69-11-410 and an agister's lien under 71-3-1201 bar him from asserting a lien under the mechanics' lien (now construction lien) law. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Nature of Act:

Insofar as the granting of a materialmen's or mechanics' lien (now construction lien) is concerned, the statute is remedial in character and must be liberally construed. Rogers-Templeton Lumber Co. v. Welch, 56 M 321, 184 P 838 (1919).

The manner of perfecting a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) consists of various steps which are purely statutory, and, while the statute is in some respects remedial in its nature and thus far should be construed liberally, it creates a new right, and the statutory proceedings by which this new right is perfected and enforced must be strictly followed. Crane & Ordway Co. v. Baatz, 53 M 438, 164 P 533 (1917); McGlauflin v. Wormser, 28 M 177, 72 P 428 (1903).

The fountainhead of all mechanics' liens (now construction liens) in this state is 71-3-501 (now repealed); by it mining claims and railroads are, as possible subjects for such liens, in pari materia. Dean v. Stewart, 49 M 506, 143 P 966 (1914).

Though the mechanics' lien (now construction lien) law is remedial in character, its requirements must be complied with. Cook v. Gallatin R.R. Co., 28 M 340, 73 P 131 (1903); Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 M 65, 60 P 594 (1900); Richards v. Lewisohn Bros., 19 M 128, 47 P 645 (1897); Black v. Appolonio, 1 M 342 (1871).

Operation of Statute in General:

One who does work or labor upon or furnishes material for a mining claim is entitled to a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) therefor on the claim. McIntyre v. MacGinniss, 41 M 87, 108 P 353 (1910).

The mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statute is materially different from that concerning loggers' liens, and cases upon the former are inapplicable to the latter. Lane v. Lane Potter Lumber Co., 40 M 541, 107 P 898 (1910).

The history of the mechanics' lien (now construction lien) law is given in detail in Merrigan v. English, 9 M 113, 22 P 454 (1898). Lane v. Lane Potter Lumber Co., 40 M 541, 107 P 898 (1910).

A subcontractor has a direct lien for the reasonable value of his labor and materials. Merrigan v. English, 9 M 113, 22 P 454 (1898). See also Eccleston v. Hetting, 17 M 88, 42 P 105 (1895); Duignan v. Mont. Club, 16 M 189, 40 P 294 (1895); Wortman v. Kleinschmidt, 12 M 316, 30 P 280 (1892).

Requirement of Contract — Substantial Performance

Work to Be Completed: A lien can arise only upon completion of the contracted work. A contractor cannot successfully assert a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) upon the property where there has been only part performance or a lack of substantial performance of the work for which the part claims the lien. Durand v. Dowdall, 232 M 347, 757 P2d 1302, 45 St. Rep. 1104 (1988); Olson v. Westfork Properties, Inc., 171 M 154, 557 P2d 821 (1976); W. Plumbing of Bozeman v. Garrison, 171 M 85, 556 P2d 520 (1976).

Sufficiency of Evidence — Lack of Contract: There was substantial evidence to support the judgment of the District Court that a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) filed by the plaintiff against the defendant's property was invalid for lack of a contract, express or implied, between the defendant and the plaintiff. The lien had been filed against the defendant's property for work performed for a third party who was under contract to purchase the property from the defendant. M. & R. Constr. Co. v. Shea, 180 M 77, 589 P2d 138 (1979).

Substantial Performance: Electrical subcontractor was not entitled to lien under 71-3-501 (now repealed) when, after completing 40% of the agreed work and upon learning of the contractor's insolvency, he voluntarily abandoned the work without requesting a promise for payment from the home owner. Intermtn. Elec., Inc. v. Berndt, 164 M 67, 518 P2d 1168 (1974), followed in Durand v. Dowdall, 232 M 347, 757 P2d 1302, 45 St. Rep. 1104 (1988).

Requirement of Contract: Subcontractor who verbally agreed with contractor to install electrical circuitry in residence was not entitled to lien against the home owner when the contract between the home owner and the general contractor specifically provided that the contractor was not entitled to subcontract work without the home owner's written permission and the home owner had not expressly or impliedly assented to the subcontractor's performance of the work. In order for a valid lien to be created under 71-3-501 (now repealed) there must be a contract, express or implied, between the owner of the property and the subcontractor. Intermtn. Elec., Inc. v. Berndt, 164 M 67, 518 P2d 1168 (1974).

Contractual Debt Required: To render the owner of realty liable to a materialmen's lien (now construction lien), the lien must rest upon a contract debt incurred either directly or indirectly, unless the owner has ratified what was done or in some manner is estopped from questioning the lien. The mere fact that the material furnished enhances the value of the property is insufficient to establish liability. Dewey Lumber Co. v. McQuirk, 96 M 294, 30 P2d 475 (1934).

PRIORITIES

Lien as Superior to Mortgage: A mechanics' lien (now construction lien) is superior to a prior recorded mortgage. Tri-County Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. Levee Restorations, Inc., 221 M 403, 720 P2d 247, 43 St. Rep. 928 (1986), following Home Interiors, Inc. v. Hendrickson, 214 M 194, 692 P2d 1229, 41 St. Rep. 2408 (1984).

Priority of Lien Over Trust Indenture: Considering the rights affected, competing policies, and potential consequences, the Supreme Court held that a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) for improvements constructed after the grant of a trust indenture has priority over the interest of a purchaser at trustee's foreclosure sale. Beck v. Hanson, 180 M 82, 589 P2d 141 (1979), followed in Home Interiors, Inc. v. Hendrickson, 214 M 194, 692 P2d 1229, 41 St. Rep. 2408 (1984).

Precedence of Lien Over Subsequent Mortgage — Relation Back of Lien:

A mechanics' lien (now construction lien) for work performed and material furnished on a building erected on land of decedent prior to his death, which was perfected August 23, 1963, after decedent's death, had priority over a mortgage executed by the successor to the estate of the deceased on January 21, 1965, to the Small Business Administration. Hammer v. Chapin, 256 F. Supp. 818 (D.C. Mont. 1966).

Under 71-3-502 (now repealed), the lien relates back to the date on which work was commenced, whether commenced by the lien claimant or another, and temporary cessation of work on the building will not prevent the operation of the statute when there has been no change of design or evidence of an intention to abandon prosecution of the work. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Green, 108 M 56, 90 P2d 489 (1939).

When a mortgage was executed subsequent to the furnishing of materials and labor, for which a lien was claimed on the mortgaged property, the mortgagee, by purchase of the property on foreclosure of the mortgage, did not become a bona fide purchaser but was substituted only to the rights of the mortgagor and took the property subject to the mechanics' lien (now construction lien). W. Iron Works v. Mont. Pulp & Paper Co., 30 M 550, 77 P 413 (1904).

Right to Remove Buildings:

Where land is mortgaged at the time of the erection of a building or other improvement thereon, a mechanics' or materialmen's lien (now construction lien) attaches only to the building or improvement, and on lien foreclosure sale the purchaser has the right to remove the structure from the land. Interstate Lumber Co. v. Rider, 93 M 489, 19 P2d 644 (1933).

Where the judgment in a materialmen's foreclosure proceeding establishes the lien on the building alone, separate from the land, and orders it sold, the purchaser thereof has a right to remove it within the time allowed by 71-3-502 (now repealed). Wyman v. Hall, 84 M 571, 276 P 944 (1929).

Waiver or Forfeiture of Right: While failure of the purchaser of a building at a lien foreclosure sale to remove it from the land within a reasonable time will operate as a waiver or forfeiture of the right, the question of waiver or forfeiture cannot be considered unless pleaded. Midland Coal & Lumber Co. v. Ferguson, 61 M 402, 202 P 389 (1921).

Lien Preferred to Prior Mortgage on Land:

The lien of a mechanic as to the improvement is superior to a prior mortgage on the land, but as to the land itself the prior mortgage maintains precedence, and where a lien claimant has not erected a building or placed such an improvement upon a mining claim as is susceptible of severance or removal, his lien must yield to a prior mortgage upon the premises. Johnson v. Puritan Min. Co., 19 M 30, 47 P 337 (1896); Opera House Co. v. Maguire, 14 M 558, 37 P 607 (1893).

A purchaser who is in possession of premises under a sale upon the foreclosure of his lien is entitled, as against the holder of a mortgage having priority to his lien as to the land, to remain in possession of the premises until the foreclosure of the mortgage without losing his right to remove the buildings. Opera House Co. v. Maguire, 14 M 558, 37 P 607 (1893).

WHO IS CONSIDERED AN OWNER

Existence of Agency — "Contracting Owner" Established: The defendant property owner, acting through its agent construction company, was a "contracting owner" under 71-3-522 when the construction company was created to act and did act as the agent of the defendant for the purpose of contracting for improvements. Dick Anderson Constr., Inc. v. Monroe Property Co., LLC, 2011 MT 138, 361 Mont. 30, 255 P.3d 1257.

Contract for Deed — Purchasers and Sellers Owners: A mechanics' lien (now construction lien) that referred to both the sellers and purchasers under a contract for deed of the property at issue as the "owners" of the property was valid. Further, failure to name as owners persons who, after the lien was filed, exercised a lease option to purchase the property was proper. Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Holms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553, 42 St. Rep. 84 (1985).

Pleading Ownership: In a suit to foreclose a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), the alleged insufficiency of the complaint for indefiniteness concerning the ownership of the property on which the work was done was cured by attaching and incorporating within the complaint a copy of the lien setting forth the name of the record owner. Doney v. Ellison, 103 M 591, 64 P2d 348 (1937).

Improvements at Request of Owner's Agent: When the owner of a building permitted a brother of her attorney-in-fact to rent it to the occupant, to make arrangements with contractor relative to certain improvements thereon, to collect the rent and endorse checks given in payment of rent, etc., he was at least the ostensible agent of the owner in causing contractor to perform the work on the building for which he filed the lien. Doney v. Ellison, 103 M 591, 64 P2d 348 (1937).

Contract for Deed — Purchaser Not Owner: Whitesel entered into a contract for deed to sell a house to McQuirk. After taking possession of the property under the contract, McQuirk remodeled the house. McQuirk purchased materials for the remodeling from the plaintiff. McQuirk failed to pay the plaintiff and defaulted on the contract for deed. The plaintiff filed a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) on the house. In an action to foreclose the lien the Supreme Court held that no lien affecting the interests of the seller can arise out of doing work or furnishing materials under a contract with the purchaser. A mere executory contract of purchase between others does not furnish a sufficient basis for imposition of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) against the owner of land. Dewey Lumber Co. v. McQuirk, 96 M 294, 30 P2d 475 (1934).

Owner to Benefit From Improvement: Under the statutes of this state, the name of the "owner" required to be mentioned in the lien claim is the name of the owner of the interest to be affected by or charged with the lien, and the mention of the record owner is not sufficient when he is not the person for whose use or benefit the property, building, or improvement is constructed, repaired, or altered. Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 M 65, 60 P 594 (1900).

Tenant Procuring Materials — Mining: The interests of the owners of a mine were not subject to a lien for labor and materials procured by a tenant in his operations on the mine. Block v. Murray, 12 M 545, 31 P 550 (1892). See Mont. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Obelisk Min. Concentrating Co., 15 M 20, 37 P 897 (1894); Pelton v. Minah Consol. Min. Co., 11 M 281, 28 P 310 (1891).

PERFECTION OF LIEN

General

Good Faith Error in Amount of Lien — Added to Filed Lien: A lien claimant precisely followed the statutory procedure in perfecting and securing a mechanics' lien (now construction lien); however, it made a good faith mathematical error in the amount. The District Court awarded claimant the mathematical error and added it to the amount of the filed lien. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting the liberal construction of Montana's mechanics' lien (now construction lien) laws as stated in Crane & Ordway Co. v. Baatz, 53 M 438, 164 P 533 (1917), and Gen. Elec. Supply Co. v. Bennett, 192 M 110, 626 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 553 (1981), holding that since claimant made every effort to comply with the steps necessary to acquire its lien, equity demanded that it receive the entire value of labor and materials put into the project. Tri-County

Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. Levee Restorations, Inc., 221 M 403, 720 P2d 247, 43 St. Rep. 928 (1986).

Service on Owner — When Effective: Service of a copy of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statement upon the owner of the affected property is effective when the notice is properly addressed and mailed by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to the owner's last-known address. Sheridan Ready Mix, Inc. v. First Congregational Church of Plentywood, 215 M 53, 695 P2d 456, 42 St. Rep. 175 (1985).

Lien — Compliance With Statutes: A materialmen's lien (now construction lien) becomes perfected only after full compliance with the lien statutes. Varco-Pruden v. Nelson, 181 M 252, 593 P2d 48 (1979).

Counterclaim by Home Owners Allowed: The rule denying a lien claimant a personal judgment against a property owner in a lien foreclosure action, when privity of contract is absent, cannot be conversely applied to deny a property owner a personal judgment against a lien claimant for damages attributable to the lien claimant and arising out of a contract between the property owner and the prime contractor. Miller v. Melaney, 172 M 74, 560 P2d 902 (1977).

Validity of Lien — Completion of Work Required: A lien is invalid and unenforceable if a contractor fails to substantially complete performance. The general rule is that a lien arises only upon completion of contracted work. Olson v. Westfork Properties, 171 M 154, 557 P2d 821 (1976).

When Lien Arises — Substantial Performance of Contract: A lien arises only upon completion of the contracted work, and although substantial performance of the contracted work meets this requirement, it is a condition precedent to liability of the home owners when there was a contract to perform work on their home. W. Plumbing of Bozeman v. Garrison, 171 M 85, 556 P2d 520 (1976).

Notice to Property Owner: In order to perfect a lien for material furnished to a contractor, the materialman need not give notice to the property owner prior to the property owner's payment to the contractor. Monarch Lumber Co. v. Haggard, 139 M 105, 360 P2d 794 (1961).

Purpose to Notify Subsequent Purchasers and Encumbrancers:

The requirements of 71-3-511 (now repealed) are merely to impart notice to the owner and to subsequent purchasers or lienholders that the lien attaches to a certain described piece of property. Cole v. Hunt, 123 M 256, 211 P2d 417 (1949).

The purpose of the statutory requirement relating to a description of the property covered by a lien is to notify all parties dealing therewith, i.e., subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers, that a lien is claimed upon it; hence when there were no subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers who could have been misled by an alleged defective description, that fact may be taken into consideration in determining its sufficiency. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Complaint — Itemized Statement: In suit on mechanics' lien (now construction lien) in which a copy of the verified claim of lien was made part of the complaint, it was not necessary that the claim contain an itemized statement of the materials or labor furnished, and if defendant desired such a statement, he could request it under 25-4-302. Cole v. Hunt, 123 M 256, 211 P2d 417 (1949).

Destruction of Part of Property: When a part of the lien of a lumber company was based upon the furnishing of materials, a part of which were used in construction of a building which was later destroyed by fire, and it could not be ascertained from the account how much of the materials were used in the buildings destroyed, but all of the buildings constituted in legal effect only one structure operated as a unit in a mining enterprise, the lien on the remaining structures was unaffected by the destruction of the one. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

One Contract for Erection of Buildings Operated as One Unit: When materials were furnished and labor performed under one contract for the erection of several buildings, one lien may attach to all buildings where the entire property was operated as a unit and for a common purpose, regardless of the fact that none of the materials or labor may have gone into some of the structures, and it is not necessary that the lands on which the buildings were erected be contiguous. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Separation of Items Not Lienable Where Possible: That a part of items claimed under a mechanics' or materialmen's lien (now construction lien) may not be lienable is no reason for condemning the lien as a whole, where it is possible to make a separation of what is and what is not lienable. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Reservoir Company Property Not Subject to Lien: When ownership of 804 out of 1000 shares of stock of reservoir corporation was in irrigation district so that government of corporation was virtually transferred to irrigation district organized under Montana laws, and corporation furnished all water used by landowners of district, service performed by corporation through the district to landholders was a "public service" and amounted to "dedication" of necessary facilities used to supply such service as a public use, and facilities were not liable to lien of construction company employed by corporation to enlarge the reservoir, so that property of reservoir company was not subject to execution. Ackroyd v. Winston Bros. Co., 113 F2d 657 (9th Cir. 1940), reversing Ackroyd v. Brandy Irrigation Co., 27 F. Supp. 503 (D.C. Mont. 1939).

Real Party in Interest Rule — Surviving Partner: A materialman, Herman, by cross-complaint in a mortgage foreclosure suit, asked for foreclosure of a lien on a dwelling included in the mortgage. Evidence showed the materials were furnished by a copartnership. Before the trial, Herman died and the administrator of his estate was substituted as party defendant. On appeal, plaintiff claimed that the action should have been brought by Herman's surviving partner under Title 72, ch. 12, part 7 (now repealed). The Supreme Court ruled that the real party in interest rule was not applicable because its rationale is to protect the adversary from another suit on the same issues by a different party, and in this case, no one but the lienor could claim under the lien. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Green, 108 M 56, 90 P2d 489 (1939).

Claimant Entitled to Interest: A materialman, who secured judgment for the enforcement of his lien, was entitled to interest under 27-1-211 on the entire amount, notwithstanding that he had overstated the amount, since the correct amount was readily ascertainable by consulting the owner, and there had been no offer of payment so as to stop the running of interest under 28-1-1202 and 28-1-1225. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Green, 108 M 56, 90 P2d 489 (1939).

Foreclosure Requirements:

In an action to foreclose a materialmen's lien (now construction lien), the plaintiff must prove not only that the materials were furnished but also that they were used in the construction of the building sought to be charged. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. Culbertson Hotel Co., 62 M 605, 205 P 957 (1922).

Under the rule that it is sufficient if the statute giving the right to a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) is substantially complied with by the lien claimant, a notice of lien which stated that a certain sum was due the lienor "after allowing just credits and offsets", instead of using the words of 71-3-511 (now repealed), "after allowing all credits", is sufficient. Wertz v. Lamb, 43 M 477, 117 P 89 (1911).

In an action to enforce a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), allegations showing compliance with sections similar in substance to the above are jurisdictional, and when denied must be proved as alleged in order to authorize decree of foreclosure. McGlauflin v. Wormser, 28 M 177, 72 P 428 (1903).

Timeliness of Lien Filing

Work to Enhance Property — Extension of Filing Time: Plaintiff agreed to remodel a prefab home for defendant. He also built a foundation, added a bedroom and deck, and built a double garage. Plaintiff completed the basement and sent a bill to defendant. The bill was paid. The remainder of the work was completed, but defendant refused to pay, contending the oral agreement between the parties contained a "cap" of $30,000. Plaintiff contended the agreement was on a cost-plus basis, the unpaid portion of which was $63,310. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded the amount due with interest at 6% from the completion date. The plaintiff had filed a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) on the property. Defendant contended the lien was invalid because it was not timely filed. The lien was filed on July 9, 1981. The last working day for plaintiff was in December 1980, but carpet was relaid on April 20, 1981. While performing additional insubstantial work will not extend the 90-day time limit for filing a lien, if the work was done to enhance the property and not merely to extend the time limit, the lien is timely. The District Court found the work was done to enhance the property, and its finding was supported by substantial credible evidence. Frank L. Pirtz Constr., Inc. v. Hardin Town Pump, Inc., 214 M 131, 692 P2d 460, 41 St. Rep. 2366 (1984).

Evidence to Support Timeliness: Plaintiff filed a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) against defendant on October 19, 1977. On the lien application he stated his final day of performance on the project as July 21, 1977. Section 71-3-511 (now repealed) requires liens to be filed within 90 days of completion of the project. At trial, plaintiff claimed his last full time on the job was the middle of August. Defendant claimed the last work was performed on July 15, 1977. The District Court found the filing of the lien was timely and that work was completed August 19, 1977. The Supreme Court found substantial credible evidence to support the timeliness of the lien filing but nothing to support the specific date and therefore remanded the case for a determination of the specific date of completion of the project. Anderson v. Hobbs, 196 M 31, 637 P2d 817, 38 St. Rep. 2098 (1981).

Father and Son — "Tacking": Fact that father and son worked together on one of two projects and that they often worked together did not justify "tacking" the two projects together for purpose of determining timeliness of mechanics' lien (now construction lien) filed by person furnishing them concrete when there were two distinct contracts and two distinct accounts; the fact that lien was not timely as to one project did not render entire lien void, and it remained valid as to second project. Tindall v. Negaard, 161 M 476, 507 P2d 845 (1973).

Open Account Purchases:

Entries made in open account crediting owner for materials returned did not operate to keep 90-day period allowed under 71-3-511 (now repealed) for filing mechanics' lien (now construction lien) from lapsing, since entry of credit for payment or for goods returned does not fall within ambit of "last item in such account"; the Legislature by that language meant the last item furnished, not the last entry in open account. Am. Homes, Inc. v. Broadmoor Corp., 153 M 184, 455 P2d 334 (1969).

A small item furnished within 90 days before filing of the lien was sufficient to keep alive a lien based on purchases on open account, at least as against mortgages recorded after some materials had been furnished, even though the item was not required by the original construction plans, when the original contract with the materialman was for such materials as might be required and not for specific materials, and when the last item was purchased on the initiative of the owner to make the property more salable and not on the initiative of the materialman to preserve the lien. Walsh Anderson Co. v. Keller, 139 M 210, 362 P2d 533 (1961).

The intent of the Legislature in enacting 71-3-511 (now repealed) was to provide for the filing of a lien, wherever there is an open account, within 90 days after the date of the last item furnished, and under it the question whether there was a continuous open account is one of fact for the court to determine, and its finding, if supported by the evidence, must stand. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Effect of Failure to File Lien Within 90 Days After Material Is Furnished — Subsequent Contract:

When no privity of contract existed between subcontractor and the owners of the improved building, and subcontractor did not comply with the 90-day limitation for filing lien, such subcontractor lost all right to sue owner who had paid prime contractor for work done, and subcontractor was also barred from adding on time period of a subsequent contract with owners for purposes of filing its mechanics' lien (now construction lien). Trunk & Son, Inc. v. DeHaan, 143 M 442, 391 P2d 353 (1964).

In an action to foreclose a materialmen's lien (now construction lien) on a grain elevator for machinery furnished for its equipment, evidence showed that the sale of the equipment had been completed more than 90 days prior to the day on which the claim of lien was filed, and the contention of plaintiff that it was the intention of the parties that title should not pass until it had been shown that the machinery operated successfully after a 30 days' trial could not be sustained. Richardson Grain Separator Co. v. Valier Elev. Co., 67 M 227, 215 P 237 (1923).

Effect of Overstatement of Amount:

When there were indications that contractor had "padded the bill" for nearly $4,000, but no proof that he had done so with intent to defraud, he did not lose his right to a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) but the trial court should require an accounting. Hammond v. Knievel, 141 M 433, 378 P2d 388 (1963).

In the absence of fraud alleged and proved, the bare overstatement of the amount due lienor in the lien filed did not, in view of the facts, invalidate the lien. Eskestrand v. Wunder, 94 M 57, 20 P2d 622 (1933).

Question of Continuous Open Account One of Fact: The question of whether a continuous open account existed some 15 months after completion of the contracted construction work was one of fact and the finding by the trial court would not be disturbed on appeal when supported by evidence. Hammond v. Knievel, 141 M 433, 378 P2d 388 (1963).

Time of Furnishing:

When an order for machinery to be shipped f.o.b., the place of shipment is accepted by the seller and it is so shipped "net 30 days 2%-10", the bill of lading or invoice being sent to the buyer, the sale is complete as of the day of shipment, and the machinery is "furnished" within the meaning of 71-3-511 (now repealed). Richardson Grain Separator Co. v. Valier Elev. Co., 67 M 227, 215 P 237 (1923).

When machinery was shipped from New York on June 6 and reached its destination in this state on June 18, and a claim therefor was filed September 14, the Supreme Court held that the material had been "furnished" on or before June 6 and that therefore, the claim for a lien was not filed in time to comply with the law. McEwen v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 35 M 470, 90 P 359 (1907).

Notice of Lien — Contents — Verification

Amount of Lien Based on Actual Job Cost Figures Rather Than Estimates: Appellant contended that testimony showed that applications for payment submitted by a lien claimant were based only on estimates of work completed rather than from an actual tally of hours spent on the job or from materials invoiced and installed, and that because the estimated applications were the basis for the amounts of the liens, the liens themselves were only estimates and should be disregarded. However, in affirming judgment, the Supreme Court found substantial testimony indicating that the liens were based on actual job cost figures and noted the the District Court had before it summaries of labor and materials supplied by the claimants which supported the lien amounts and which showed the amounts were not overstated. Tri-County Plumbing & Heating, Inc. v. Levee Restorations, Inc., 221 M 403, 720 P2d 247, 43 St. Rep. 928 (1986).

Description Through Accounts and Financial Statements: The accounts and financial statements attached to and filed with a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) were a part of the lien statement and could be used, in addition to the property description, to identify the property sought to be charged with the lien. Sheridan Ready Mix, Inc. v. First Congregational Church of Plentywood, 215 M 53, 695 P2d 456, 42 St. Rep. 175 (1985).

Sufficiency of Description of Property:

Mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statement adequately described the property where it stated that the property was the Congregational Church and that "the real property which is subject to this lien is situated in the County of Sheridan, State of Montana, and is particularly described as follows: to-wit: Lots one (1) and two (2) of Block Three (3) Original Townsite, Plentywood, Montana". Sheridan Ready Mix, Inc. v. First Congregational Church of Plentywood, 215 M 53, 695 P2d 456, 42 St. Rep. 175 (1985).

A mechanics' lien (now construction lien), in describing the property, in addition to the legal description referred to ". . . that certain building and improvements erected upon" the described property. Along with the lien, the contractor filed a statement of account for "Sound West", the name of the business operating from the remodeled building. The lien was challenged on the grounds that it failed to describe the building and instead merely described the land. The Supreme Court upheld the lien's validity, since one familiar with the locality could determine what property was described in the lien and referred to in the statement of account. Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Holms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553, 42 St. Rep. 84 (1985).

In this case involving the validity of an electrical equipment supplier's mechanics' lien (now construction lien) on a building, the issue on appeal was whether the description of the property in the notice of the lien filed with the County Clerk and Recorder was legally sufficient to identify the property for purposes of enforcing the lien. The Supreme Court ruled in favor of the electrical supplier. The court held that once the procedural requirements of 71-3-511 (now repealed) have been satisfied, the mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statutes are to be construed liberally so as to give effect to their remedial character. Although the land on which the building was located was covered by the lien on the building, 71-3-514 (now repealed) does not require that the land be described. When, as here, the land is described, the erroneous part of the description should be deleted. If the description remains sufficient to identify the particular property sought to be charged, the lien will be upheld. Other documents filed with the notice of lien may be used to identify the property. Gen. Elec. Supply Co. v. Bennett, 192 M 110, 626 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 553 (1981).

The description in a lien is a correct description within the meaning of 71-3-511 (now repealed) if the charged property can be identified by the description. The purpose of the statutory requirement of a "correct description" is to give notice of the existence of the lien to interested third parties. The statutory requirement is met if the lien document taken as a whole adequately describes the property to which the lien attaches. Insignificant inaccuracies will not be fatal to the lien. Morrison-Maierle, Inc. v. Selsco, 186 M 180, 606 P2d 1085 (1980).

When only construction on land was a platform without walls or roof except for a wall on one side to serve as an instrument panel, notice of lien which stated that it was for work in electrical wiring of "certain Fish Meal Plant building" was defective since there was no building on the land. Cascade Elec. Co. v. Assoc. Creditors, Inc., 124 M 370, 224 P2d 146 (1950).

When a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) was claimed on only one quartz mill on a certain claim and on a three-room house on another claim and there were two other mills and two other three-room houses in the mining district, a description of the particular mill and house was held sufficient when persons familiar with the locality could point out the particular structures as corresponding with the description, there was testimony of the age and dilapidated condition of the other buildings, and the items that went into the mill in question were traced into the proper mill. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

When a lien recited that materialman furnished lumber and building material "for that certain frame building erected upon the certain lot, piece or parcel of land hereinafter described", then gave the legal subdivisions, made the list of materials a part of the lien, the list containing items not usable in a dwelling, but also a kitchen cabinet, oak flooring, varnish, etc., suitable only for the dwelling, the validity of the lien was not affected by the fact that there were other frame buildings on the land, because one familiar with the land could point out the building. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Green, 108 M 56, 90 P2d 489 (1939).

The contention was of no merit that the complaint in an action to foreclose an oil well materialmen's lien (now construction lien) and the notice of lien were insufficient as to description of the property and of the owner of it. Section 71-3-511 (now repealed) requires no more than a description by which the property may be identified and makes no provision for a description of the owner. Cont. Supply Co. v. White, 92 M 254, 12 P2d 569 (1932).

Courts are reluctant to set aside mechanics' liens (now construction liens) merely because of a loose description of the property, and the general rule is that if there is substantial compliance with the statutory provisions and there appears enough in the description to enable one familiar with the locality to identify the property upon which the lien is claimed, it is sufficient. Under that rule, a lien filed by an oil well driller pursuant to 71-3-511 (now repealed) and 71-3-1002 was sufficient. Callender v. Crossfield Oil Synd., 84 M 263, 275 P 273 (1929).

When title to the land on which a building was constructed with material furnished by plaintiff is not in the lienee, the lien extends to the building only, and in such a case any error or mistake in the description of the land in the notice of the lien does not affect the validity of the lien if the "property", i.e., the building, can be identified. Midland Coal & Lumber Co. v. Ferguson, 61 M 402, 202 P 389 (1921).

The validity of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) must be tested by the description contained in it, and it is only in case of ambiguity that it may be explained and the property identified by oral evidence. Interstate Lumber Co. v. Magill-Nevin Plumbing & Heating Co., 57 M 334, 188 P 144 (1920).

The purpose of requiring the lien to be filed and an abstract thereof made of record is to impart notice to the owner and to subsequent purchasers or lienholders. In order that the purpose may be served, it is necessary that the description in the lien be sufficient to apprise interested parties just what property is sought to be charged. An error in the description of the property will not render the lien invalid if the property can be identified by the description given. Johnson v. Erickson, 56 M 550, 185 P 1116 (1919).

The notice of lien for material and labor furnished in the construction of a railway roadbed is sufficient, notwithstanding errors of description therein, if the property can be identified by the description given. Dean v. Stewart, 49 M 506, 143 P 966 (1914).

A notice of lien for clearing land must contain such a description of the land sought to be charged that it can be identified; if it is impossible to identify the land from such notice, the lien is invalid. Ivanhoff v. Teale, 47 M 115, 130 P 972 (1913).

The "property" to be identified is the building or improvement on which the lien is given, and hence a specific description of the "land" is not required. W. Iron Works v. Mont. Pulp & Paper Co., 30 M 550, 77 P 413 (1904). See also Stritzel-Spaberg Lumber Co. v. Edwards, 50 M 49, 144 P 722 (1914).

A notice of lien which describes the property as lot 14 in a certain block and city plat cannot sustain a lien for materials used in the erection of a building on lot 13, as such description, being neither uncertain, defective, or ambiguous, cannot be aided or explained by oral evidence. Goodrich Lumber Co. v. Davie, 13 M 76, 32 P 282 (1892).

Otherwise Valid Claim Not Defeated by Minor Technical Defect: Lumber company filed a materialmen's lien (now construction lien) for unpaid amounts for materials supplied for construction of an addition to real property. The District Court ordered foreclosure of the lien even though there was a discrepancy in the certificate of notice that was attached to the lien when filed. The certificate indicated that notice had been mailed 1 day later than the lien and certificate of notice were actually filed with the County Clerk and Recorder. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court ruling and held that an otherwise valid mechanics' lien (now construction lien) should not be defeated when the lienor substantially complied with the statutory procedural requirement, notice was actually given, and no prejudice to the property holder had arisen because of the lienor's technical error. Simkins-Hallin Lumber Co. v. Simonson, 214 M 36, 692 P2d 424, 41 St. Rep. 2305 (1984).

Filing Requirements — Adequacy of Statements: The provision of 71-3-511 (now repealed) that one filing a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) must include a "just and true account of the amount due him, after allowing all credits, containing a correct description of the property to be charged with such lien, verified by affidavit" was complied with where the lien contained a statement of the amount owing, a real property description, and an affidavit that the facts in the lien were true and within the knowledge of the affiant. The language of the statute did not have to be used. It was implicit that a just and true net amount due was stated. The case law test that the affidavit must be a sufficient basis for a perjury charge if the statement is false was also satisfied. Little Horn St. Bank v. Schessler-Miller Ready Mix, 210 M 412, 682 P2d 187, 41 St. Rep. 1128 (1984).

Description to Include Improvement Not Land: The property to be described in a materialmen's lien (now construction lien) is the building, structure, or other improvement upon which the lien is to attach, and not the land upon which the property is located. Varco-Pruden v. Nelson, 181 M 252, 593 P2d 48 (1979).

Affidavit Essential: An affidavit is an essential part of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), and verification by a corporate officer "to the best of his own knowledge", without any assertion of the validity of the underlying claim, is insufficient to perfect a mechanics' lien (now construction lien). Saunders Cash-Way Lumber & Hardware Co. v. Herrick, 179 M 233, 587 P2d 947 (1978), followed in Climate Control Co., Inc. v. Bergsieker Refrigeration Inc., 196 M 405, 640 P2d 442, 39 St. Rep. 214 (1982), and A.A. Quality Constr. v. Thomas, 224 M 108, 728 P2d 416, 43 St. Rep. 2055 (1986).

Name of Debtor: Notice of lien which named as the debtor the "Montana Fish Meal Company" when the debtor was actually the "Montana Fish Meal and Oil Corporation" was defective. Cascade Elec. Co. v. Assoc. Creditors, Inc., 124 M 370, 224 P2d 146 (1950).

Sufficiency of Statement as to Work Done and Amount:

It is not necessary that the particular items of the account be set out in the paper constituting the lien. Cole v. Hunt, 123 M 256, 211 P2d 417 (1949).

A mechanics' lien (now construction lien) was not void merely because the paper was in form an affidavit, with an itemized statement attached, instead of a statement of the account and a description of the property followed by an affidavit. The method pursued was in substantial compliance with the requirements of 71-3-511 (now repealed), and therefore sufficient. Wertz v. Lamb, 43 M 477, 117 P 89 (1911).

Though a claimant's notice of lien fails to state under oath that it contains "a just and true account of the amount due him after allowing all credits", it is sufficient when it sets forth the contract between the parties, the amount of work done, and the materials furnished in considerable detail; when it gives the total amount of credits or money paid thereon and states the balance claimed to be due; when it states "that items are correct"; when it is signed by the claimant, and when it bears a jurat reciting that it was subscribed and sworn to before a designated notary public. Mills v. Olsen, 43 M 129, 115 P 33 (1911).

One desiring to file a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) need not classify the character of work done or set out the items of it in the account filed with the notice; all that is required is an honest statement from which it may be understood what amount is claimed. McIntyre v. MacGinniss, 41 M 87, 108 P 353 (1910); Smith v. Sherman Min. Co., 12 M 524, 31 P 72 (1892); Black v. Appolonio, 1 M 342 (1871).

A verified account attached to a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statement, reciting certain items of charges, including labor and material for excavating a cistern, constituted a substantial compliance with 71-3-511 (now repealed). Neuman v. Grant, 36 M 77, 92 P 43 (1907).

A mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statement which shows the dates when the work was commenced and completed, the total number of days' work performed, and the amount due therefor is a sufficient account. It is not necessary to state the items of which the account consists or the nature of the work. Smith v. Sherman Min. Co., 12 M 524, 31 P 72 (1892).

Inclusion of Articles Not Used in Building: The fact that a notice or claim of lien may include some items which are lienable and others which are not, or the fact that the claim was made for a larger amount than the claimant shows himself entitled to, will not vitiate or destroy the lien for the amount actually due the claimant, in the absence of a fraudulent intent; inclusion of materials in a contractor's lien claim not used in the dwelling remodeled did not prejudice the owner when the judgment of the court provided for a proper reduction for such items. Smith v. Gunniss, 115 M 362, 144 P2d 186 (1943).

Verification:

Where the sufficiency of the affidavit attached to a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) is questioned, one of the tests is whether perjury is assignable upon it; if so, it is sufficient. Gregg v. Sigurdson, 67 M 272, 215 P 662 (1923).

A verification to a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) to the effect that affiant, after deposing directly and positively that he had read the claim for lien and knew its contents, that the matters and things therein stated were true "as he verily believes", was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of 71-3-511 (now repealed), and not void as having been made on information and belief. Gregg v. Sigurdson, 67 M 272, 215 P 662 (1923).

The requirement of 71-3-511 (now repealed) that a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) must be verified as a "just and true account of the amount due, after allowing all credits", was held to have been met by a certification that the notice of lien and statement of account was true; that the statement contained a full and true amount due the lienor, signed by one of two partners and sworn to before a notary public. Leigland v. Rundle Land & Abstract Co., 64 M 154, 208 P 1075 (1922).

When the statements in an affidavit made under 71-3-511 (now repealed) are in full accord with its requirements and evince a faithful adherence to all its commands, it is sufficient, though obviously made on information and belief by the assistant secretary of the plaintiff corporation. Rogers-Templeton Lumber Co. v. Welch, 56 M 321, 184 P 838 (1919).

No set form or order is required for the component parts of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), so long as they all appear; but it must be observed that the "account" mentioned in 71-3-511 (now repealed) does not include the description, and both are separate and distinct matters from the affidavit, which must verify each one of them. Crane & Ordway Co. v. Baatz, 53 M 438, 164 P 533 (1917).

The affidavit to the notice of a mechanics' or materialmen's lien (now construction lien) claim is essential and must verify both the account and the description. Both the account and the description must be verified as 71-3-511 (now repealed) requires. Otherwise, the affidavit is insufficient. A mere acknowledgment of the execution of the notice is not an affidavit. Crane & Ordway Co. v. Baatz, 53 M 438, 164 P 533 (1917).

A writing attached to an intended mechanics' lien (now construction lien), which contained no jurat or other evidence to show that the claimant made oath before a person authorized to administer oaths and which did not assume to verify either the description of the property affected or the account, did not constitute such an affidavit as is required by 71-3-511 (now repealed). Crane & Ordway Co. v. Baatz, 53 M 438, 164 P 533 (1917).

A verification, attached to a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) and executed by the president of a corporation in its behalf, stating "that the matters and things therein stated are true, to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief", is not an affidavit and is insufficient for the purpose intended. W. Plumbing Co. v. Fried, 33 M 7, 81 P 394 (1905).

Name of Owner Sought to Be Charged: A notice of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) claim which instead of setting forth the name of the owner of the property sought to be charged, stated that the lienor was the owner, was fatally defective. Interstate Lumber Co. v. Magill-Nevin Plumbing & Heating Co., 57 M 334, 188 P 144 (1920).

PROPERTY AFFECTED BY LIEN

Lien — Property Description: In this case involving the validity of an electrical equipment supplier's mechanics' lien (now construction lien) on a building, the issue on appeal was whether the description of the property in the notice of the lien filed with the County Clerk and Recorder was legally sufficient to identify the property for purposes of enforcing the lien. The Supreme Court ruled in favor of the electrical supplier. The court held that once the procedural requirements of 71-3-511 (now repealed) have been satisfied, the mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statutes are to be construed liberally so as to give effect to their remedial character. Although the land on which the building was located was covered by the lien on the building, 71-3-514 (now repealed) does not require that the land be described. When, as here, the land is described, the erroneous part of the description should be deleted. If the description remains sufficient to identify the particular property sought to be charged, the lien will be upheld. Other documents filed with the notice of lien may be used to identify the property. Gen. Elec. Supply Co. v. Bennett, 192 M 110, 626 P2d 844, 38 St. Rep. 553 (1981).

Mining Claims:

Limit of 1 acre to mechanics' lien (now construction lien), as set forth in 71-3-514 (now repealed), does not apply to mining claim. Fausett v. Blanchard, 154 M 301, 463 P2d 319 (1969).

The provision of 71-3-514 (now repealed), limiting the operation of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), does not apply to mining claims. A lien upon such property extends to the whole claim. Dean v. Stewart, 49 M 506, 143 P 966 (1914); McIntyre v. MacGinniss, 41 M 87, 108 P 353 (1910); Smith v. Sherman Min. Co., 12 M 524, 31 P 72 (1892). See also Big Blackfoot v. Blue Bird Min. Co., 19 M 454, 48 P 778 (1897).

Estoppel to Assert Lien:

Equitable estoppel will prevent a contractor from asserting a lien preference for an amount over the contract price against the first mortgagee when the contractor made representation as to the total price of the works to the mortgagee and knew that the loan would not have been granted had it been for a greater amount. McGaffick v. Leigland, 130 M 332, 303 P2d 247 (1956).

Where the vendor of real property under a contract of sale agreed, in consideration of return of the property, to assume the payment of a note signed by vendee and secured by a mortgage on the property, a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) assigned to the vendor was merged in the vendor's title and the vendor was estopped from foreclosing the lien as against the mortgage. Downing v. Crippen, 114 M 436, 138 P2d 575 (1943).

Liens for Services and Materials Furnished to Predecessor Lessees: A mining company will not be allowed to object to the allowance of liens for material and services rendered to the holders of leases prior to the time they were assumed by the mining company. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Miners' Lien — Application to Property on Which No Labor Performed: Those working in a mine or quartz mill on property held under a lease may claim a lien upon the company's buildings, machinery, and other equipment regardless of whether their labor enhanced the value of the property and even though the lease provided that the premises and improvements should revert to the lessor in case of default by the lessee. The statute giving them a right to a lien, 71-3-501 (now repealed), is paramount to the conditions of the lease. Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Extent of Lien to Land:

The acre of ground to which a lien on a dwelling located outside a city or town extends may properly be described as an acre of land of which the dwelling constitutes the geographical center, in the absence of a statutory requirement of a more particular description. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Green, 108 M 56, 90 P2d 489 (1939).

While a mechanics' or materialmen's lien (now construction lien) extends primarily to the building, if the land upon which it is erected "belongs" to, i.e., is the property of, the person who causes the building to be constructed, the lien extends also to the land; but if the owner of the building loses title to the land or if it is encumbered when work commences under the building contract, the lien attaches to the building only. Louis v. Theatorium Co., 69 M 50, 222 P 1062 (1923).

Mortgage Not to Reduce Owner's Interest to Less Than Fee Simple: Since a mortgage is merely security and creates no interest or estate in land, the existence of a mortgage on land on which was situated a building subject to a materialmen's lien (now construction lien) did not reduce the owner's interest in the land to less than fee simple estate within the meaning of 71-3-514 (now repealed). A mortgage is simply security for the performance of an act under 71-1-101. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Green, 108 M 56, 90 P2d 489 (1939).

Owner's Consent Required: To render the owner of realty liable to a materialmen's lien (now construction lien), the lien must rest upon a contract debt incurred either directly or indirectly, unless the owner ratifies what was done or in some manner estops himself from questioning the lien. The mere fact that the material furnished enhances the value of the property is insufficient to establish liability. Dewey Lumber Co. v. McQuirk, 96 M 294, 30 P2d 475 (1934).

Removal of Fixtures Not to Injure Freehold:

Where the vendee of a dwelling house under a conditional contract of sale made extensive improvements which became an integral part of the structure and could not be removed without practically destroying the house itself, the provision of 71-3-514 (now repealed) authorizing their sale and removal by the holder of a materialmen's lien (now construction lien), upon default of the conditional buyer, was not applicable. Dewey Lumber Co. v. McQuirk, 96 M 294, 30 P2d 475 (1934).

The lien of a mechanic for material or labor furnished at the request of a lessee who afterwards forfeited his lease embraces only such improvements as the lessee himself might have removed during his lease and does not include a doorway cut between two buildings, paperhanging, or other improvements which cannot be removed without injury to the freehold. Stenberg v. Liennemann, 20 M 457, 52 P 84 (1898).

Removal of Building on Lien Foreclosure: When land is mortgaged at the time of the erection of a building or other improvement thereon, a mechanics' or materialmen's lien (now construction lien) attaches only to the building or improvement, and on lien foreclosure sale the purchaser has the right to remove the structure from the land. Interstate Lumber Co. v. Rider, 93 M 489, 19 P2d 644 (1933).

Effect of Forfeiture of Oil Lease: The forfeiture of the sales contract between defendant and the syndicate terminated the rights of plaintiff and intervener in and to the leasehold and the oil wells, fixtures, etc., except "the material and supplies so furnished" by plaintiff in drilling well No. 4, or the material furnished by intervener. Callender v. Crossfield Oil Synd., 84 M 263, 275 P 273 (1929).

Improvements Add Extent of Lien: A heating plant and connecting pipes installed in a greenhouse constructed by a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) claimant were fixtures and subject to removal as a part of the structure caused to be erected by the lessee of the land, the lien under 71-3-514 (now repealed) extending in such a case to the entire building and improvements added by the lessee to the lessor's land. Bartholomew v. James, 76 M 359, 246 P 771 (1926).

Statutory Right to Remove Fixtures Governs Over Conflicting Mining Lease: The provision in 71-3-514 (now repealed) permitting sale or removal of a structure on leased land is paramount to the provision of a mining lease to the effect that all improvements placed on the premises by the lessee should become the property of the lessor as soon as placed on the mine and remain a part thereof, and such lease will be presumed to have been made in contemplation of the statute. Mont. Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Obelisk Min. Concentrating Co., 15 M 20, 37 P 897 (1894).

71-3-521. Scope.

Case Notes

Material Question Regarding Validity of Construction Lien — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff drilling company filed to foreclose on a construction lien on defendants' property based on money owed for a partially drilled well on defendants' property. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants on grounds that the lien was invalid because the well was not completed. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that genuine issues of material fact remained regarding whether abandonment of the well constituted a change order or altered contract specification for which defendants were responsible or whether plaintiff breached the contract by drilling in the wrong place, thereby eliminating plaintiff's lien entitlement. Because questions of material fact existed, summary judgment was improper, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Sudan Drilling, Inc. v. Anacker, 2009 MT 14, 349 M 42, 202 P3d 778 (2009).

Existence of Agency — "Contracting Owner" Established: The defendant property owner, acting through its agent construction company, was a "contracting owner" under 71-3-522 when the construction company was created to act and did act as the agent of the defendant for the purpose of contracting for improvements. Dick Anderson Constr., Inc. v. Monroe Property Co., LLC, 2011 MT 138, 361 Mont. 30, 255 P.3d 1257.

Construction Lien Attaches From Date Work Commenced - Priority Over Purchase Money Mortgage: Gaston began water monitoring and percolation tests on property to be purchased by Yellowstone Bank, even though ownership of the property had not yet passed to the Bank. When payments to Gaston for its work stopped, Gaston sued to foreclose its construction lien and to establish priority of the lien. The Supreme Court held that the lien was valid against the Bank and its financing company, that the lien attached the day Gaston began work, and that Gaston's construction lien had priority over the purchase money mortgage used to finance the purchase of the property by Yellowstone Bank. Gaston Eng'r & Surveying v. Oakwood Properties, LLC, 2011 MT 44, 359 Mont. 341, 249 P.3d 75.

Questions of Material Fact Regarding Excavation Project — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: Plaintiff was an excavation subcontractor on defendants' project. Several modifications arose during the project beyond the original contract bid. Plaintiff completed the requested modifications, but defendants offered only $180 to cover the extra work. Plaintiff filed a construction lien but failed to notify defendants and then sought to foreclose the lien. The District Court granted plaintiff's request for summary judgment, and defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court reversed because numerous fact issues remained that were not susceptible to summary judgment, including whether: (1) plaintiff's services were extras or alterations personally ordered by defendants; (2) leftover materials validated the construction lien by constituting substantial completion of the contract or whether the materials signified incomplete work; (3) defendants' failure to pay constituted a breach that prevented plaintiff from completing the work, thus enacting the exception to the substantial completion rule; (4) the parties intended an oral contract whereby defendants personally ordered plaintiff to complete additional work; and (5) the contract was substantially complete, thus validating the lien. Gwynn v. Cummins, 2006 MT 239, 333 M 522, 144 P3d 82 (2006).

Purpose of Procedural Lien Requirements to Provide Notice to and Protect Interests of Property Owners — Construction Lien Statutes Construed: The purpose of the procedural requirements in construction lien law is to impart notice to the owner of real property that a lien has been filed against the property and to protect all parties dealing with the property, including subsequent owners. The requirements will be strictly construed, but once the procedure is fulfilled, the statutes will be liberally construed so as to give effect to their remedial purpose. Failure to state on the lien statement the owner or person whose interest in property is sought to be charged is fatal to the lien. In the case at bar, Swain listed Battershell as the contracting owner, but Battershell held no interest in the property at the time that the lien was filed and was not listed as owner of record in the County Clerk's office; thus, the listing of Battershell as the contracting owner on the lien statement was fatal to the lien. Swain v. Battershell, 1999 MT 101, 294 M 282, 983 P2d 873, 56 St. Rep. 424 (1999), distinguishing Mtn. St. Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Case Notes

Interest Assessment on Construction Lien Not Applicable to Residential Construction Improvements Less Than $400,000 — Remand: As a discovery sanction and because the total cost of plaintiff's residential construction project exceeded $400,000, the District Court assessed interest against plaintiff on defendant's construction lien. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded. Although the total construction project cost exceeded $400,000, defendant's construction lien was based on improvements totaling only $16,763.81. The exception to the interest assessment clearly did not apply to the contract between the parties, nor could plaintiff be assessed interest as a discovery sanction based on a statute that did not apply. Weimar v. Lyons, 2007 MT 182, 338 M 242, 164 P3d 922 (2007).

Standing to File Construction Lien Despite Construction Corporation's Involuntary Dissolution: Plaintiff asserted that defendant had no standing to file a construction lien because defendant's corporation had been involuntarily dissolved for failure to file the first annual corporate report. The District Court disagreed, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant filed the lien as an individual claimant and had standing to pursue the lien as a person who furnished services pursuant to a real estate improvement contract. It would have been inequitable for plaintiff to avoid an obligation because the corporation had been involuntarily dissolved after acting in good faith through its principals, and plaintiff was properly estopped from denying the status of the corporation. Weimar v. Lyons, 2007 MT 182, 338 M 242, 164 P3d 922 (2007), following Kosena v. Eck, 195 M 12, 635 P2d 1287 (1981).

Construction Lien Properly Found Valid: Defendant argued that plaintiff's construction lien was defective because: (1) there was no written contract for the construction work; (2) plaintiff failed to serve the lien on the city of Three Forks as owner of record of the property in question; (3) the lien inadequately described the property that was improved; (4) the lien incorrectly named the person entering into the contract; (5) the lien incorrectly identified who requested the construction work; and (6) the lien's statement that a notice of right to claim was not required was incorrect. The Supreme Court examined the evidence related to each claim and affirmed. Defendant herself testified that a contract existed. The city abandoned its interest in the property before the lien was filed. Plaintiff's description of the property that was subject to the lien encompassed the entire footprint of defendant's property and was sufficient to identify it. Although the lien identified defendant rather than defendant's trust as the person entering the contract and requesting the work, defendant and the trust were the same entity, and the trust was not authorized to transact business in Montana, so naming defendant as the party subject to the lien was proper. Last, there was no evidence that the city owned the property, so no service to the city was necessary. The procedural requirements of the construction lien statutes are strictly construed, but once the procedure has been fulfilled, the statutes are liberally construed to give effect to their remedial purpose. In this case, the validity of the lien was supported by the evidence. Johnston v. Palmer, 2007 MT 99, 337 M 101, 158 P3d 998 (2007).

Contract Remedy Providing Transfer of Twenty-Acre Parcel of Land as Security for Contractual Obligations Violative of Subdivision Laws: As part of a sale of real property, Canton pledged a 20-acre parcel to Riverview Homes II, Ltd. (Riverview), as security in the event that Canton breached his contractual obligation to complete a proposed subdivision and construct an artificial lake. Canton breached the contract, and Riverview sought to quiet title to the 20-acre parcel. The District Court agreed that Canton breached the contract, but held that the contract remedy violated subdivision laws. Riverview appealed, contending that the parcel was exempted from subdivision review as a division of land created to provide security for a lien under 76-3-201, and that the security provision was an enforceable construction lien because of Canton's contractual obligation to construct the lake. The Supreme Court noted that Riverview neither furnished services or materials to Canton for the lake construction nor satisfied any other requirement applicable to construction liens in this part, so the construction lien theory failed. If it was not a construction lien, it had to be considered a general lien under 71-3-101, which, pursuant to Reiter v. Reiter, 237 M 220, 772 P2d 314 (1989), can be claimed only as arising from dealings in particular trades or businesses in which the existence of a general lien has been recognized by judicial decisions or if a custom to that effect can be established by evidence. General liens are looked upon with disfavor, and the court refused to recognize a general lien for breach of a contract to provide equity in land in this case. The District Court's conclusion that the 20-acre parcel was not transferable under 76-3-302, and failed to qualify for an exemption under 76-3-201, was affirmed. Riverview Homes II, Ltd. v. Canton, 2001 MT 309, 307 M 517, 38 P3d 848 (2001).

Contractor Entitled to Stop Work Pursuant to Developer's Breach of Contract — Contractor Improperly Required to Reimburse Postbreach Expenses: Plaintiff contractor submitted a claim for construction costs to defendant developer's architect, who approved payment, but the developer refused to pay the costs, so the contractor stopped work. The developer hired another contractor to finish the work, and the District Court penalized the contractor by requiring reimbursement of the developer's costs for finishing the work. The Supreme Court reversed the award. The contractor was entitled to stop work because of the developer's material breach of contract, and the developer was not entitled to benefit from its own wrong, so it was error to penalize the contractor for amounts expended by the developer to finish the work. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006).

Insufficient Evidence to Warrant Award of Home Office Overhead: Plaintiff contractor sought to enforce a contractor's lien and was awarded damages, but the contractor sought additional damages to cover extended costs for home office overhead occasioned by delays caused by defendant, claiming that under the contract, delay costs were to be borne by the responsible party. A special master found that plaintiff had failed to establish entitlement to additional home office overhead costs and that the evidence submitted in support of the claim was not credible. The District Court adopted the special master's findings, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Without addressing the credibility of the evidence, the Supreme Court held that the evidence submitted by the contractor was insufficient to establish entitlement to additional home office overhead costs. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006).

The requirements will be strictly construed, but once the procedure is fulfilled, the statutes will be liberally construed so as to give effect to their remedial purpose. Failure to state on the lien statement the owner or person whose interest in property is sought to be charged is fatal to the lien. In the case at bar, Swain listed Battershell as the contracting owner, but Battershell held no interest in the property at the time that the lien was filed and was not listed as owner of record in the County Clerk's office; thus, the listing of Battershell as the contracting owner on the lien statement was fatal to the lien. Swain v. Battershell, 1999 MT 101, 294 M 282, 983 P2d 873, 56 St. Rep. 424 (1999), distinguishing Mtn. St. Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Case Notes

No Error in Calculation of Construction Lien: Although invoices to be timely paid according to a contract supported a higher award claim for a contractor's work building condominiums, the parties' subsequent conduct established other evidence concerning the parties' agreement and obligations. The contractor was not paid according to the invoices, as specified in the contract, but in bulk sums upon the completion of each condominium. Hence, because of the parties' conduct, the untimely and incomplete construction of the condos, and the amount of the invoices in excess of the original contact, there was substantial credible evidence that the District Court properly awarded a sum substantially lower than that established by the invoices. Mtn. W. Bank, N.A. v. Cherrad, LLC, 2013 MT 99, 369 Mont. 492, 301 P.3d 796.

Material Question Regarding Validity of Construction Lien — Summary Judgment Improper: Plaintiff drilling company filed to foreclose on a construction lien on defendants' property based on money owed for a partially drilled well on defendants' property. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants on grounds that the lien was invalid because the well was not completed. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that genuine issues of material fact remained regarding whether abandonment of the well constituted a change order or altered contract specification for which defendants were responsible or whether plaintiff breached the contract by drilling in the wrong place, thereby eliminating plaintiff's lien entitlement. Because questions of material fact existed, summary judgment was improper, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Sudan Drilling, Inc. v. Anacker, 2009 MT 14, 349 M 42, 202 P3d 778 (2009).

Case Notes

Lien Notice Exception When Improvements Commercial in Character: After plaintiff provided gravel for defendant's subdivision, a dispute arose regarding the quantity of gravel installed as base material beneath the subdivision road, and plaintiff subsequently filed a construction lien on the property. When defendant did not pay in full, plaintiff filed to foreclose on the lien and claimed breach of contract and unjust enrichment. Defendant sought to dismiss the suit because plaintiff failed to file notice of the right to claim a construction lien. The District Court denied the motion, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. One exception to the requirement for filing notice in 71-3-531 is the provision of materials or services for an improvement that is commercial in character. The subdivision improvements qualified as commercial improvements, so plaintiff was not required to provide notice of the lien filing. JTL Group, Inc. v. New Outlook, LLP, 2010 MT 1, 355 Mont. 1, 223 P.3d 912.

Proper Dismissal of Counterclaim When Conceded Amount Not Exceeded: After plaintiff provided gravel for defendant's subdivision, a dispute arose regarding the quantity of gravel installed as base material beneath the subdivision road, and plaintiff subsequently filed a construction lien on the property. When defendant did not pay in full, plaintiff filed to foreclose on the lien and claimed breach of contract and unjust enrichment. Defendant filed a counterclaim against the gravel company based on the prospect that plaintiff might be owed an amount in excess of the amount that defendant conceded was owed. The trial court found that defendant owed no more than the conceded amount and dismissed the counterclaim. On appeal, defendant argued that dismissal of the counterclaim was error and that the counterclaim should be allowed to proceed because defendant owed attorney fees and prejudgment interest in excess of $157,000. The Supreme Court disagreed. The counterclaim was properly dismissed, and the additional amounts owed by defendant were not relevant to the counterclaim posited at trial. JTL Group, Inc. v. New Outlook, LLP, 2010 MT 1, 355 Mont. 1, 223 P.3d 912.

Questions of Material Fact Regarding Excavation Project — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: Plaintiff was an excavation subcontractor on defendants' project. Several modifications arose during the project beyond the original contract bid. Plaintiff completed the requested modifications, but defendants offered only $180 to cover the extra work. Plaintiff filed a construction lien but failed to notify defendants and then sought to foreclose the lien. The District Court granted plaintiff's request for summary judgment, and defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court reversed because numerous fact issues remained that were not susceptible to summary judgment, including whether: (1) plaintiff's services were extras or alterations personally ordered by defendants; (2) leftover materials validated the construction lien by constituting substantial completion of the contract or whether the materials signified incomplete work; (3) defendants' failure to pay constituted a breach that prevented plaintiff from completing the work, thus enacting the exception to the substantial completion rule; (4) the parties intended an oral contract whereby defendants personally ordered plaintiff to complete additional work; and (5) the contract was substantially complete, thus validating the lien. Gwynn v. Cummins, 2006 MT 239, 333 M 522, 144 P3d 82 (2006).

1987 Amendment: In (1), (2)(a), and (4) inserted "contracting" before "owner"; in (3)(b) substituted language requiring the notice to state the contracting owner's name, address, and nature of the title of the signer for "the owner's name or owners' names, as the case may be, the address of the owner or addresses of the owners, as the case may be, and the nature of the title, if any, of the person signing the notice"; and inserted (6) requiring the contracting owner to provide a copy of the notice of completion to any person who has given the owner a notice of a right to claim a lien.

Case Notes

Lien — Liquidated Damages: Plaintiff was granted proper extensions for completion of construction, and defendant properly withheld $5,300 in liquidated damages for failure to complete construction by the contract completion date. The District Court entered these findings which were affirmed on appeal. Arrowhead, Inc. v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 179 M 510, 587 P2d 411 (1978).

Counterclaim by Home Owners Allowed: The rule denying a lien claimant a personal judgment against a property owner in a lien foreclosure action, when privity of contract is absent, cannot be conversely applied to deny a property owner a personal judgment against a lien claimant for damages attributable to the lien claimant and arising out of a contract between the property owner and the prime contractor. Miller v. Melaney, 172 M 74, 560 P2d 902 (1977).

Validity of Lien — Completion of Work Required: A lien is invalid and unenforceable if a contractor fails to substantially complete performance. The general rule is that a lien arises only upon completion of contracted work. Olson v. Westfork Properties, 171 M 154, 557 P2d 821 (1976).

When Lien Arises — Substantial Performance of Contract: A lien arises only upon completion of the contracted work, and although substantial performance of the contracted work meets this requirement, it is a condition precedent to liability of the home owners when there was a contract to perform work on their home. W. Plumbing of Bozeman v. Garrison, 171 M 85, 556 P2d 520 (1976).

1981 Amendment: Inserted (2) prohibiting the County Clerk from filing a lien without certification that a copy has been served on the owner and providing for methods of service.

Case Notes

Construction Lien Properly Found Valid: Defendant argued that plaintiff's construction lien was defective because: (1) there was no written contract for the construction work; (2) plaintiff failed to serve the lien on the city of Three Forks as owner of record of the property in question; (3) the lien inadequately described the property that was improved; (4) the lien incorrectly named the person entering into the contract; (5) the lien incorrectly identified who requested the construction work; and (6) the lien's statement that a notice of right to claim was not required was incorrect. The Supreme Court examined the evidence related to each claim and affirmed. Defendant herself testified that a contract existed. The city abandoned its interest in the property before the lien was filed. Plaintiff's description of the property that was subject to the lien encompassed the entire footprint of defendant's property and was sufficient to identify it. Although the lien identified defendant rather than defendant's trust as the person entering the contract and requesting the work, defendant and the trust were the same entity, and the trust was not authorized to transact business in Montana, so naming defendant as the party subject to the lien was proper. Last, there was no evidence that the city owned the property, so no service to the city was necessary. The procedural requirements of the construction lien statutes are strictly construed, but once the procedure has been fulfilled, the statutes are liberally construed to give effect to their remedial purpose. In this case, the validity of the lien was supported by the evidence. Johnston v. Palmer, 2007 MT 99, 337 M 101, 158 P3d 998 (2007).

Purpose of Procedural Lien Requirements to Provide Notice to and Protect Interests of Property Owners — Construction Lien Statutes Construed: The purpose of the procedural requirements in construction lien law is to impart notice to the owner of real property that a lien has been filed against the property and to protect all parties dealing with the property, including subsequent owners. The requirements will be strictly construed, but once the procedure is fulfilled, the statutes will be liberally construed so as to give effect to their remedial purpose. Failure to state on the lien statement the owner or person whose interest in property is sought to be charged is fatal to the lien. In the case at bar, Swain listed Battershell as the contracting owner, but Battershell held no interest in the property at the time that the lien was filed and was not listed as owner of record in the County Clerk's office; thus, the listing of Battershell as the contracting owner on the lien statement was fatal to the lien. Swain v. Battershell, 1999 MT 101, 294 M 282, 983 P2d 873, 56 St. Rep. 424 (1999), distinguishing Mtn. St. Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Failure to Answer Request for Admissions — Invalidity of Unserved Lien: On a question of validity of mechanics' lien (now construction lien), appellant failed to respond to a request for admissions. Under former Rule 36, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), all unanswered requests for admissions are admitted for all purposes. By failing to answer, appellant admitted that he had not served or billed respondent, so the requirement of 71-3-513 (now 71-3-534) that a copy of a lien must be served on the property owner in order to be valid was not met. The District Court properly found the unserved lien invalid as a matter of law. Toavs v. Billings Fed. Credit Union, 221 M 473, 719 P2d 428, 43 St. Rep. 985 (1986).

Name of Person Against Whose Property the Lien Is Filed:

Since mechanics' lien (now construction lien) was against the church which owned the property affected by the lien and notice of the lien was mailed to the church, the notice was served upon the proper party no matter who at the church received the mailed notice. Sheridan Ready Mix, Inc. v. First Congregational Church of Plentywood, 215 M 53, 695 P2d 456, 42 St. Rep. 175 (1985).

The mention of the record owner in the lien claim is not sufficient when he is not the person for whose use or benefit the property, building, or improvement is constructed, repaired, or altered. Blose v. Havre Oil & Gas Co., 96 M 450, 31 P2d 738 (1934); Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 M 65, 60 P 594 (1900).

The filing of a notice of lien on the property of the Yellowstone Park Railway Company and the Yellowstone Park Railroad Company will not warrant intervention in a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure against the Gallatin Railroad Company, though the complaint in intervention alleges, on information and belief, that the corporations are substantially the same. Merely a money demand in a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) foreclosure will not warrant intervention therein, even though plaintiffs have consented to the intervention. Cook v. Gallatin R.R. Co., 28 M 340, 72 P 678 (1903).

A recorded lien claim for materials furnished in the construction of a building, which fails to state the name of the owner or person whose interest is sought to be charged, is fatally defective. Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 M 65, 60 P 594 (1900).

Service on Owner — When Effective: Service of a copy of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statement upon the owner of the affected property is effective when the notice is properly addressed and mailed by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to the owner's last-known address. Sheridan Ready Mix, Inc. v. First Congregational Church of Plentywood, 215 M 53, 695 P2d 456, 42 St. Rep. 175 (1985).

Sufficient Proof of Service on Owner: Proof of service of mechanics' lien (now construction lien) statement was sufficient where the statement stated that plaintiff's attorney certified that he had served upon the property owner by certified mail, return receipt requested and postage prepaid, at the owner's last-known address. This section does not require the plaintiff or his server to give the County Clerk a return receipt or other proof of actual receipt by the property owner. Sheridan Ready Mix, Inc. v. First Congregational Church of Plentywood, 215 M 53, 695 P2d 456, 42 St. Rep. 175 (1985).

Otherwise Valid Claim Not Defeated by Minor Technical Defect: Lumber company filed a materialmen's lien (now construction lien) for unpaid amounts for materials supplied for construction of an addition to real property. The District Court ordered foreclosure of the lien even though there was a discrepancy in the certificate of notice that was attached to the lien when filed. The certificate indicated that notice had been mailed 1 day later than the lien and certificate of notice were actually filed with the County Clerk and Recorder. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court ruling and held that an otherwise valid mechanics' lien (now construction lien) should not be defeated when the lienor substantially complied with the statutory procedural requirement, notice was actually given, and no prejudice to the property holder had arisen because of the lienor's technical error. Simkins-Hallin Lumber Co. v. Simonson, 214 M 36, 692 P2d 424, 41 St. Rep. 2305 (1984).

Sale of Properties to Third Parties — Claim of Construction Lien Moot: Properties previously encumbered by a construction lien were purchased by third parties, in good faith, free of any encumbrances. The sales rendered the validity of the construction lien moot. As a result, the Supreme Court lacked jurisdiction over the matter. Mtn. W. Bank, N.A. v. Cherrad, LLC, 2013 MT 99, 369 Mont. 492, 301 P.3d 796.

Construction Lien Attaches From Date Work Commenced - Priority Over Purchase Money Mortgage: Gaston began water monitoring and percolation tests on property to be purchased by Yellowstone Bank, even though ownership of the property had not yet passed to the Bank. When payments to Gaston for its work stopped, Gaston sued to foreclose its construction lien and to establish priority of the lien. The Supreme Court held that the lien was valid against the Bank and its financing company, that the lien attached the day Gaston began work, and that Gaston's construction lien had priority over the purchase money mortgage used to finance the purchase of the property by Yellowstone Bank. Gaston Eng'r & Surveying v. Oakwood Properties, LLC, 2011 MT 44, 359 Mont. 341, 249 P.3d 75.

Waiver of Construction Lien Arguments Not Raised at Trial: Defendant argued in a posttrial motion that the property description in a lien notice was insufficient and that plaintiff failed to establish a valid construction lien. The District Court dismissed the arguments, and on appeal the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant failed to raise the issues in the pretrial order or to object to the admissibility of the property description at trial and thus waived the arguments for purposes of appeal. JTL Group, Inc. v. New Outlook, LLP, 2010 MT 1, 355 Mont. 1, 223 P.3d 912.

Construction Lien Properly Found Valid: Defendant argued that plaintiff's construction lien was defective because: (1) there was no written contract for the construction work; (2) plaintiff failed to serve the lien on the city of Three Forks as owner of record of the property in question; (3) the lien inadequately described the property that was improved; (4) the lien incorrectly named the person entering into the contract; (5) the lien incorrectly identified who requested the construction work; and (6) the lien's statement that a notice of right to claim was not required was incorrect. The Supreme Court examined the evidence related to each claim and affirmed. Defendant herself testified that a contract existed. The city abandoned its interest in the property before the lien was filed. Plaintiff's description of the property that was subject to the lien encompassed the entire footprint of defendant's property and was sufficient to identify it. Although the lien identified defendant rather than defendant's trust as the person entering the contract and requesting the work, defendant and the trust were the same entity, and the trust was not authorized to transact business in Montana, so naming defendant as the party subject to the lien was proper. Last, there was no evidence that the city owned the property, so no service to the city was necessary. The procedural requirements of the construction lien statutes are strictly construed, but once the procedure has been fulfilled, the statutes are liberally construed to give effect to their remedial purpose. In this case, the validity of the lien was supported by the evidence. Johnston v. Palmer, 2007 MT 99, 337 M 101, 158 P3d 998 (2007).

Final Work Performed to Enhance Value of Project, Not to Extend Time for Lien Filing — Lien Timely Filed: Defendant initially ceased work on plaintiffs' residence on April 6 but returned on June 11 to try to clean some tile that was stained upon installation; however, the cleaning attempt was unsuccessful. On September 7, 88 days later, defendant filed a construction lien for the balance due, plus interest. The District Court held that the filing was timely because defendant had worked on the project within the previous 90 days and that the work was performed to enhance the value of the property, not to extend the time for filing a lien. Plaintiffs contended that the lien filing was untimely because the unsuccessful work on June 11 did not render a tangible improvement to the property and that the last actual work occurred on April 6, more than 90 days prior to filing. The Supreme Court affirmed. The fact that the June 11 work was unsuccessful or insignificant in relation to the overall work performed was not conclusive with regard to extending the time for lien filing. So long as the final work was done to enhance the property value, it was sufficient to extend the time for filing a construction lien. Rossi v. Pawiroredjo, 2004 MT 39, 320 M 63, 85 P3d 776 (2004).

Failure to Assert Timeliness as Affirmative Defense in Construction Lien Case Not Constituting Waiver of Issue — Burden on Lien Claimant to Establish Validity of Lien: Keating entered an agreement with Helena Coach House Partnership (Partnership) to purchase a Helena motel. The Burnses agreed to renovate the motel for Keating. Keating left the Helena area in January 1996 after leasing the motel to another party. On April 1, 1996, the Burnses filed construction liens for $48,539.19 and $7,403.30. Keating subsequently defaulted on the agreement to purchase the motel by allowing liens to encumber the property and by failing to pay property taxes, so the Partnership repossessed the motel and posted a cash construction lien bond in order to sell a portion of the motel property. The Burnses then filed a complaint against the Partnership, asserting that the action was commenced within the time prescribed by 71-3-562 and seeking judgment against the bond pursuant to 71-3-553. The Partnership admitted that the Burnses filed notices of liens and that the action was filed within 2 years of those filings, but denied that the filings constituted a valid lien. The District Court agreed, concluding that the liens were invalid because they were not timely filed. On appeal, the Burnses contended that the Partnership waived the issue of timeliness by failing to affirmatively plead the issue, relying on Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510 (1992), for the proposition that the timeliness of a construction lien is an affirmative defense required to be pleaded affirmatively pursuant to former Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held that Brown v. Ehlert did not support the contention that the timeliness of a construction lien must be affirmatively pleaded. Rather, the defense of timeliness went to the merits of the complaint because timeliness was an element of the claim, and the Partnership's pleading of timeliness did not implicate considerations of fairness or surprise for the Burnses, who were on notice under the 90-day filing requirement in this section that they had to establish the validity of their liens. The Partnership's specific denial that the liens were valid was a negative defense that warned the Burnses that they had to prove the validity of the liens as part of their prima facie case, and the Partnership's answer appropriately underscored the Burnses' burden of proof. Thus, the Partnership did not have to affirmatively plead the timeliness issue. The District Court properly concluded that the liens were not valid because the Burnses failed to satisfy the procedural requirement that their liens be timely filed, so the Burnses could not avail themselves of the remedies in the construction lien statutes. Burns v. A Cash Constr. Lien Bond, 2000 MT 233, 301 M 304, 8 P3d 795, 57 St. Rep. 966 (2000).

Failure to Establish Validity of Lien Preclusive of Remedies: Keating entered an agreement with Helena Coach House Partnership (Partnership) to purchase a Helena motel. Burns agreed to perform heating and air conditioning maintenance and repair services at the motel for Keating. Burns testified that he last performed maintenance services for Keating at some point in December 1995, and Keating left the Helena area in January 1996 after leasing the motel to another party. On April 1, 1996, Burns filed a construction lien for $7,403.30. Keating subsequently defaulted on the agreement to purchase the motel by allowing liens to encumber the property and by failing to pay property taxes, so the Partnership repossessed the motel and posted a cash construction lien bond in order to sell a portion of the motel property. Burns then filed a complaint against the Partnership, seeking judgment against the bond pursuant to 71-3-553. The District Court found that Burns had not met his burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that he had a valid lien. Burns claimed on appeal that he had last performed services on March 31, 1996, at the behest of the motel lessee, and that the filing of the lien on April 1 was therefore timely. The Partnership responded that Burns only claimed a lien for work performed on behalf of Keating prior to December 31, 1995, and that the claim did not extend to work performed for the motel lessee in 1996. The Supreme Court agreed with the Partnership and affirmed. The District Court correctly concluded that Burns failed to meet his burden of proof that he had filed the lien within 90 days of the final furnishing of services or materials pursuant to the contract with Keating under which the lien arose. Burns v. A Cash Constr. Lien Bond, 2000 MT 233, 301 M 304, 8 P3d 795, 57 St. Rep. 966 (2000).

Invalidity of Lien Not Timely Filed: Keating entered an agreement with Helena Coach House Partnership (Partnership) to purchase a Helena motel. Burns agreed to renovate the motel swimming pool for Keating. Burns's employment was terminated December 1, 1995, and Keating left the Helena area in January 1996 after leasing the motel to another party. On April 1, 1996, Burns filed a construction lien for $48,539.19. Keating subsequently defaulted on the agreement to purchase the motel by allowing liens to encumber the property and by failing to pay property taxes, so the Partnership repossessed the motel and posted a cash construction lien bond in order to sell a portion of the motel property. Burns then filed a complaint against the Partnership, seeking judgment against the bond pursuant to 71-3-553. The District Court concluded that Burns's lien was not timely filed within 90 days of the final furnishing of services or materials, as required in this section. On appeal, Burns argued that he supplied materials to the motel after December 31, 1995, in the form of tools that he left behind that were used by the motel staff, thereby bringing him within the 90-day filing requirement. The Supreme Court noted that Burns had no agreement with Keating to be paid for the use of the tools after Burns's services were terminated and that Burns's own testimony established that he performed no additional repair or maintenance services after December 1, 1995. Therefore, substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's conclusion that Burns's lien was not timely filed, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Burns v. A Cash Constr. Lien Bond, 2000 MT 233, 301 M 304, 8 P3d 795, 57 St. Rep. 966 (2000). See also Total Indus. Plant Serv., Inc. v. Turner Indus. Group, LLC, 2013 MT 5, 368 Mont. 189, 294 P.3d 363.

Purpose of Procedural Lien Requirements to Provide Notice to and Protect Interests of Property Owners — Construction Lien Statutes Construed: The purpose of the procedural requirements in construction lien law is to impart notice to the owner of real property that a lien has been filed against the property and to protect all parties dealing with the property, including subsequent owners. The requirements will be strictly construed, but once the procedure is fulfilled, the statutes will be liberally construed so as to give effect to their remedial purpose. Failure to state on the lien statement the owner or person whose interest in property is sought to be charged is fatal to the lien. In the case at bar, Swain listed Battershell as the contracting owner, but Battershell held no interest in the property at the time that the lien was filed and was not listed as owner of record in the County Clerk's office; thus, the listing of Battershell as the contracting owner on the lien statement was fatal to the lien. Swain v. Battershell, 1999 MT 101, 294 M 282, 983 P2d 873, 56 St. Rep. 424 (1999), distinguishing Mtn. St. Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Consolidation, Rather Than Dismissal, of Lien Actions Proper: Having received no payment for installation of an elevator, Lagerquist filed a lien against Devoe's building. At the same time, DeVoe filed a complaint against Lagerquist, alleging breaches of contract and warranty, negligent or fraudulent misrepresentation, and breach of good faith and fair dealing. The following month, Lagerquist filed for lien foreclosure. DeVoe moved that either the lien foreclosure be dismissed or the actions be consolidated, and the court granted the motion to consolidate. On appeal, DeVoe argued that under the doctrine of election of remedies, Lagerquist was precluded from claiming both that the elevator was installed within the time allowed and that the lien was filed in a timely manner. However, the answer to DeVoe's action in tort did not dispose of the issue of when work was last done on the elevator; therefore, the court did not err in consolidating the actions rather than dismissing the lien foreclosure action. DeVoe v. Gust. Lagerquist & Sons, Inc., 244 M 141, 796 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 1527 (1990).

Interest Paid From Date of Filing of Construction Lien: When a construction lien was found to be enforceable, the award of prejudgment interest on the contract price was proper from the date the construction lien was filed. DeVoe v. Gust. Lagerquist & Sons, Inc., 244 M 141, 796 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 1527 (1990).

Case Notes

Construction Lien Attaches From Date Work Commenced - Priority Over Purchase Money Mortgage: Gaston began water monitoring and percolation tests on property to be purchased by Yellowstone Bank, even though ownership of the property had not yet passed to the Bank. When payments to Gaston for its work stopped, Gaston sued to foreclose its construction lien and to establish priority of the lien. The Supreme Court held that the lien was valid against the Bank and its financing company, that the lien attached the day Gaston began work, and that Gaston's construction lien had priority over the purchase money mortgage used to finance the purchase of the property by Yellowstone Bank. Gaston Eng'r & Surveying v. Oakwood Properties, LLC, 2011 MT 44, 359 Mont. 341, 249 P.3d 75.

Priority of Construction Lien — Trust Indenture Taken to Secure Loan Made to Pay for Improvements Liened — Partial Priority Not Applicable: Plaintiff company installed equipment at a casino and restaurant complex but did not receive payment, so plaintiff filed a construction lien and sought to have the lien adjudged to be prior and superior to any interest that defendant bank had in the property. The bank asserted that its trust indenture had priority over plaintiff's lien. The District Court granted summary judgment to plaintiff, holding that the lien was superior to the trust indenture because the trust indenture was taken to secure the construction loan that was made to pay for the improvements liened. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. It was undisputed that the trust indenture was executed for the exclusive purpose of securing advances for construction and that the liens attached to the construction. Therefore, under 71-3-542(4), the liens had priority over the entirety of the trust indenture. Additionally, the statute does not allow courts to parse encumbrances and then assign priority among the constituent parts. The bank loaned money for the express purpose of constructing the complex and had the opportunity when making the loan to protect itself either by not making the loan or by conditioning the loan on the ability to obtain waivers from the contractors, so the concept of partial priority was not supported. Signal Perfection, Ltd. v. Rocky Mtn. Bank—Billings, 2009 MT 365, 353 M 237, 224 P3d 604 (2009), distinguishing Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n v. Schenk, 241 M 177, 785 P2d 1024 (1990).

Trust Indenture Given Priority Over Mechanics' Lien: The plaintiff notified the defendant bank that he had contracted with the home owners to remodel their home. However, the notice was given 3 months after the bank had closed its loan with the home owners and recorded its trust indenture. The proceeds of the bank's loan were not used to remodel the home. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's ruling that the bank's lien had priority over the plaintiff's mechanics' lien. Corscadden v. Komrosky, 242 M 7, 788 P2d 321, 47 St. Rep. 493 (1990).

Priority of Recorded Trust Deed Over Mechanics' Lien for Improvements: Schenk borrowed $80,000 from American Federal Savings and Loan Association (American) to purchase a bar, executing a promissory note secured by a deed of trust in favor of American. None of the loan proceeds were used as payment for improvements. Subsequent to completion of remodeling and electrical work on the bar, an electric company perfected a mechanics' lien. American later filed a complaint seeking foreclosure of the deed of trust, and the electric company asserted as an affirmative defense the priority of the mechanics' lien. The District Court granted summary judgment to the company, citing the lien priority. The Supreme Court reversed, based on the facts that: (1) the parties entered into the loan agreement almost 1 year prior to the commencement of improvements; (2) American lacked any resource to determine that improvements would be commenced at a date far removed from the loan date; (3) American could not withhold funds intended for construction because the loan was used for purchase rather than improvements; and (4) Schenk was under no obligation to notify American of the remodeling, and even if notified, American had no legal means to further secure its lien position. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n v. Schenk, 241 M 177, 785 P2d 1024, 47 St. Rep. 177 (1990), distinguishing Beck v. Hanson, 180 M 82, 589 P2d 141 (1979), Home Interiors, Inc. v. Case Notes

Substitution of Surety Bond for Lien — Lienee Not Entitled to Attorney Fees: Although the District Court discharged a construction lien after the property owner substituted a surety bond pursuant to 71-3-551, the substitution did not mean that the subcontractor failed to establish the lien and that the property owner was entitled to attorney fees. The Legislature did not intend for the lien substitute statute to allow lienees to recover their attorney fees by securing a surety bond despite their underlying liability. AAA Constr. of Missoula, LLC v. Choice Land Corp., 2011 MT 262, 362 Mont. 264, 264 P.3d 709.

Enforcement of Construction Lien Affirmed Despite Failure to Recognize Surety as Party: Plaintiff sought to enforce a construction lien against Puffer and Puffer's surety through a show cause proceeding. The District Court enforced plaintiff's arbitration award against the surety. Puffer asserted that the surety was insulated from enforcement of the lien because of its status as surety. However, this section clearly allows recovery from the principal or the surety. Puffer also contended that the arbitration award against the surety was void because the surety was never made a party to the litigation. The Supreme Court agreed that the surety was not named as a party or served a summons or copy of the formal complaint. However, Puffer's attorney acted as counsel for both Puffer and the surety, so the District Court acquired jurisdiction over the surety through the attorney's voluntary appearance on behalf of the surety. The surety had adequate notice of the proceeding through counsel and an adequate opportunity to present itscase. Thus, the District Court did not err in allowing plaintiff to recover the arbitration award from the surety by way of a de facto judgment. The District Court was affirmed. Eisenhart v. Puffer, 2008 MT 58, 341 M 508, 178 P3d 139 (2008).

Surety Bond to Be Filed Before Lien Claimant Commences Action: Talcott Construction brought an action to foreclose on its construction lien on certain condominiums. Mountain Bank filed an irrevocable letter of credit with the District Court on behalf of the defendant, P&D Land Enterprises, 10 days after the action was initiated, and the court entered an order dissolving Talcott's lien. Talcott argued that this section requires the surety bond to be filed before the action is commenced. (See 2007 amendment.) The lower court held that this section states that the bond "may" be filed at any time before the lien claimant commences an action and that therefore the provision is not mandatory and the bond may be filed after the action is initiated. The Supreme Court held that the statute means a bond does not have to be filed but that if one is filed, it has to filed before the action is commenced. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 261 M 260, 862 P2d 395, 50 St. Rep. 1313 (1993).

Case Notes

Failure to Establish Validity of Lien Preclusive of Remedies: Keating entered an agreement with Helena Coach House Partnership (Partnership) to purchase a Helena motel. Burns agreed to perform heating and air conditioning maintenance and repair services at the motel for Keating. Burns testified that he last performed maintenance services for Keating at some point in December 1995, and Keating left the Helena area in January 1996 after leasing the motel to another party. On April 1, 1996, Burns filed a construction lien for $7,403.30. Keating subsequently defaulted on the agreement to purchase the motel by allowing liens to encumber the property and by failing to pay property taxes, so the Partnership repossessed the motel and posted a cash construction lien bond in order to sell a portion of the motel property. Burns then filed a complaint against the Partnership, seeking judgment against the bond pursuant to this section. The District Court found that Burns had not met his burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that he had a valid lien. Burns claimed on appeal that he had last performed services on March 31, 1996, at the behest of the motel lessee, and that the filing of the lien on April 1 was therefore timely. The Partnership responded that Burns only claimed a lien for work performed on behalf of Keating prior to December 31, 1995, and that the claim did not extend to work performed for the motel lessee in 1996. The Supreme Court agreed with the Partnership and affirmed. The District Court correctly concluded that Burns failed to meet his burden of proof that he had filed the lien within 90 days of the final furnishing of services or materials pursuant to the contract with Keating under which the lien arose. Burns v. A Cash Constr. Lien Bond, 2000 MT 233, 301 M 304, 8 P3d 795, 57 St. Rep. 966 (2000).

Invalidity of Lien Not Timely Filed: Keating entered an agreement with Helena Coach House Partnership (Partnership) to purchase a Helena motel. Burns agreed to renovate the motel swimming pool for Keating. Burns's employment was terminated December 1, 1995, and Keating left the Helena area in January 1996 after leasing the motel to another party. On April 1, 1996, Burns filed a construction lien for $48,539.19. Keating subsequently defaulted on the agreement to purchase the motel by allowing liens to encumber the property and by failing to pay property taxes, so the Partnership repossessed the motel and posted a cash construction lien bond in order to sell a portion of the motel property. Burns then filed a complaint against the Partnership, seeking judgment against the bond pursuant to this section. The District Court concluded that Burns's lien was not timely filed within 90 days of the final furnishing of services or materials, as required in 71-3-535. On appeal, Burns argued that he supplied materials to the motel after December 31, 1995, in the form of tools that he left behind that were used by the motel staff, thereby bringing him within the 90-day filing requirement. The Supreme Court noted that Burns had no agreement with Keating to be paid for the use of the tools after Burns's services were terminated and that Burns's own testimony established that he performed no additional repair or maintenance services after December 1, 1995. Therefore, substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's conclusion that Burns's lien was not timely filed, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Burns v. A Cash Constr. Lien Bond, 2000 MT 233, 301 M 304, 8 P3d 795, 57 St. Rep. 966 (2000). See also Total Indus. Plant Serv., Inc. v. Turner Indus. Group, LLC, 2013 MT 5, 368 Mont. 189, 294 P.3d 363.

71-3-561. Parties.

Case Notes

Counterclaim by Home Owners Allowed: The rule denying a lien claimant a personal judgment against a property owner in a lien foreclosure action, when privity of contract is absent, cannot be conversely applied to deny a property owner a personal judgment against a lien claimant for damages attributable to the lien claimant and arising out of a contract between the property owner and the prime contractor. Miller v. Melaney, 172 M 74, 560 P2d 902 (1977).

Bankrupt Party: Ordinarily, in a suit to establish a materialmen's lien (now construction lien) the principal contractor is an indispensable party. However, when plaintiff had named the contractor as a defendant, but he had not been served, and the contractor's trustee in bankruptcy was also named and relief was sought against him, the absence of the principal contractor as a party was immaterial. Monarch Lumber Co. v. Wallace, 132 M 163, 314 P2d 884 (1957).

Owner as Necessary Party: In a suit seeking to enforce or establish the validity of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien), the owner or person whose interest is sought to be charged is a necessary party to the action. Cascade Elec. Co. v. Assoc. Creditors, Inc., 124 M 370, 224 P2d 146 (1950).

Execution Creditor: An execution creditor of an oil well operator who on judicial sale had bought casing furnished by plaintiff lienholder after the lien claim had been filed was a proper party defendant in the action to foreclose the lien. Cont. Supply Co. v. White, 92 M 254, 12 P2d 569 (1932).

Complaint Naming Parties Not Within Rule: The naming of persons in the complaint to enforce the lien does not make them parties unless they are within the rule defining necessary parties. Missoula Mercantile Co. v. O'Donnell, 24 M 65, 60 P 594 (1900).

71-3-562. Limitation on actions.

Case Notes

Failure to Assert Timeliness as Affirmative Defense in Construction Lien Case Not Constituting Waiver of Issue — Burden on Lien Claimant to Establish Validity of Lien: Keating entered an agreement with Helena Coach House Partnership (Partnership) to purchase a Helena motel. The Burnses agreed to renovate the motel for Keating. Keating left the Helena area in January 1996 after leasing the motel to another party. On April 1, 1996, the Burnses filed construction liens for $48,539.19 and $7,403.30. Keating subsequently defaulted on the agreement to purchase the motel by allowing liens to encumber the property and by failing to pay property taxes, so the Partnership repossessed the motel and posted a cash construction lien bond in order to sell a portion of the motel property. The Burnses then filed a complaint against the Partnership, asserting that the action was commenced within the time prescribed by this section and seeking judgment against the bond pursuant to 71-3-553. The Partnership admitted that the Burnses filed notices of liens and that the action was filed within 2 years of those filings, but denied that the filings constituted a valid lien. The District Court agreed, concluding that the liens were invalid because they were not timely filed. On appeal, the Burnses contended that the Partnership waived the issue of timeliness by failing to affirmatively plead the issue, relying on Brown v. Ehlert, 255 M 140, 841 P2d 510 (1992), for the proposition that the timeliness of a construction lien is an affirmative defense required to be pleaded affirmatively pursuant to former Rule 8(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held that Brown v. Ehlert did not support the contention that the timeliness of a construction lien must be affirmatively pleaded. Rather, the defense of timeliness went to the merits of the complaint because timeliness was an element of the claim, and the Partnership's pleading of timeliness did not implicate considerations of fairness or surprise for the Burnses, who were on notice under the 90-day filing requirement in 71-3-535 that they had to establish the validity of their liens. The Partnership's specific denial that the liens were valid was a negative defense that warned the Burnses that they had to prove the validity of the liens as part of their prima facie case, and the Partnership's answer appropriately underscored the Burnses' burden of proof. Thus, the Partnership did not have to affirmatively plead the timeliness issue. The District Court properly concluded that the liens were not valid because the Burnses failed to satisfy the procedural requirement that their liens be timely filed, so the Burnses could not avail themselves of the remedies in the construction lien statutes. Burns v. A Cash Constr. Lien Bond, 2000 MT 233, 301 M 304, 8 P3d 795, 57 St. Rep. 966 (2000).

Logging Corporation Not a "Person": A logging corporation acting in the capacity of an independent contractor was not a "person" as set forth in this part and was not entitled to a lien thereunder. (A 1967 amendment allowed corporation to acquire a lien under this section.) Jack Long Logging Co. v. Pyramid Mtn. Lumber, Inc., 143 M 87, 387 P2d 712 (1963).

New Right Created Burden of Proof on Claimant: This section creates a new right, and therefore the claimant must show that he is within the class for whose benefit it was enacted. Billings v. Missoula White Pine Sash Co., 88 M 322, 292 P 714 (1930).

Hauler Not Entitled to Lien: One who hauled lumber from a sawmill, the owner of which manufactured it under contract with the owner of the logs, to a railroad spur (some 12 miles distant from the mill), where he delivered it on board cars for shipment to the log owner or piled it in yards, may not be said to have furnished work or labor in assisting in the manufacture of the lumber within the meaning of this section. Therefore, he was not entitled to a lien on the lumber on failure of the sawmill owner to pay for the hauling. Billings v. Missoula White Pine Sash Co., 88 M 322, 292 P 714 (1930).

Agency of Contractor: The use of the words "whether such work or labor was done at the instance of the owner of the same or his agent" in this section implies that the employment may be made only by the owner or one employed by him as agent. One who occupies toward the owner merely the relation of contractor is not his agent for any purpose unless, by the terms of the contract, authority is given him to act as such. Lane v. Lane Potter Lumber Co., 40 M 541, 107 P 898 (1910).

New Right Created — Strict Construction: This section creates a right where none existed before, and the requirements as to the steps necessary to secure that right must be strictly construed. Lane v. Lane Potter Lumber Co., 40 M 541, 107 P 898 (1910).

Persons Entitled to Lien: The loggers' lien legislation was enacted to create an equity in favor of three classes of persons: (1) those who are employed to obtain or secure rough timber and transport it to the mill for manufacture; (2) those who are employed to assist in the manufacture of it into lumber in any form; and (3) those who own the land from which the timber is taken. Lane v. Lane Potter Lumber Co., 40 M 541, 107 P 898 (1910).

Lien Distinguished: Section 71-3-501 (now repealed), providing for mechanics' liens (now construction liens), is materially different from this section, concerning loggers' liens, and cases upon the former are inapplicable to the latter. Lane v. Lane Potter Lumber Co., 40 M 541, 107 P 898 (1910).

1989 Amendment: Near beginning of (1), after "file with the", substituted "office of the secretary of state a statement of agricultural lien as provided in 71-3-125" for "county clerk of the county in which said grain or other crops were grown" and at end, after "claimed", deleted "and within 20 days thereafter shall file with the county clerk and recorder of the county in which said grain or other crops were grown a just and true account of the amount due him or them for such services or labor after allowing all just credits and offsets and containing a correct description of the grain or other crops to be charged with such lien, the price agreed upon for such threshing or cutting and harvesting, the name of the person, firm, or corporation for whom such labor and services were performed, and a description of the lands as nearly as possible upon which said grain or other crops were raised, and a description of the legal subdivision of land upon which said grain is stored and, if said grain is stored in an elevator, the locality of the elevator, which statements of facts shall be verified by affidavit of the person claiming such lien or his duly authorized agent or attorney having knowledge of the facts. Any error or mistake in the account or description of the grain or other crops or of the property upon which it was raised shall not invalidate such lien"; near beginning of (2), after "threshermen", inserted "swather"; deleted former (3) that read: "(3) Notice of the lien also must be filed in the office of the secretary of state as required by 71-3-125"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Applicability: Section 10, Ch. 529, L. 1989, provided: "[This act] applies to agricultural liens filed after September 30, 1989."

1987 Amendment: Inserted (3) requiring filing of the lien notice with the Secretary of State.

Case Notes

Conversion by Payment on Unperfected Lien: A thresher served a notice of claim of lien on a crop threshed by him, as required by this section, upon an elevator company. However, since he never initiated his right to a lien by filing an account of the amount due him with the County Clerk, he never acquired a lien. The crop was subject to a chattel mortgage. The elevator company paid the amount claimed by the supposed lienholder with the consent of the mortgagor and therefore was without defense to the mortgagee's action in conversion. Great Falls Farm Mach. Co. v. Rocky Mtn. Elev. Co., 94 M 188, 22 P2d 303 (1933).

Creation of Lien: Contention that a threshers' lien is created by the services and labor performed by him and not by the filing of the account required by this section is without merit. Great Falls Farm Mach. Co. v. Rocky Mtn. Elev. Co., 94 M 188, 22 P2d 303 (1933).

Case Notes

Applicability of Local Law When Perfecting Agricultural Liens: In a dispute over priority of an agricultural lien versus a security interest in the same profits from agricultural products, plaintiff who held a security interest asserted that defendant who held an agricultural lien did not satisfy the requirements of the Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.) regarding perfection because defendant's lien was not perfected in North Dakota where the farm products were located, as required by 30-9A-302, at the time that the dispute arose. However, agricultural liens follow the location of the farm products, not the location of the debtor, and when defendant's lien was created, the products in question were located in Montana. Therefore, Montana's local law was the local law designated by the U.C.C. to govern perfection of the lien. Defendant properly filed the lien in Montana and therefore did not violate the U.C.C. in perfecting the lien. Stockman Bank of Mont. v. Mon-Kota, Inc., 2008 MT 74, 342 M 115, 180 P3d 1125 (2008).

Continuation of Agricultural Lien of Farm Products After Sale, but Not on Sale Proceeds — Inchoate, Unperfected Agricultural Lien Interests Allowed: The Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.) leaves to other law the determination of whether an agricultural lien extends to proceeds. This section, which is Montana's agricultural lien law, does not extend to an agricultural supplier the right to a lien on the proceeds from the sale of liened farm products. However, a perfected agricultural lien remains attached to the collateral, even after its sale or transfer, until the secured party releases its lien. The right to judicially enforce or foreclose an agricultural lien is not lost upon sale or transfer of farm products. Stockman Bank of Mont. v. Mon-Kota, Inc., 2008 MT 74, 342 M 115, 180 P3d 1125 (2008).

Enforcement of Agricultural Lien Following Sale or Transfer of Farm Products — Assignment of Inchoate or Unperfected Lien Interests Allowed: A crop of sugar beets was sold, and a pesticide sprayer that held an agricultural lien sought to enforce the lien after the sale. Plaintiff bank also held a secured interest on the proceeds of the crop. The buyer issued checks made payable jointly to the bank and the sprayer, honoring the agricultural lien, and the lienholder's unconditioned negotiation of the check acknowledged satisfaction and release of its lien. The bank asserted that, not being an agricultural supplier, the sprayer had no right to file the lien and further contended that because inchoate or unperfected liens are not assignable, any argument that the supplier had assigned its lien right to the sprayer must fail as a matter of law. The sprayer argued that the supplier was clearly eligible to file an agricultural lien and that all actions taken by the sprayer were taken in an agency capacity for the supplier, as indicated in the lien filing, so the payment was not an assignment. Alternatively, the sprayer contended that the transaction was a pass-through between related entities constituting a limited assignment for collection purposes only and that even if the bank's evidence was sufficient to demonstrate that the transaction was a full assignment supported by consideration, inchoate lien interests are nonetheless assignable. The Supreme Court concluded that the dispute was best resolved on the issue of the assignability of inchoate lien interests, noting that generally property of any kind may be transferred, that a right arising out of an obligation is the property of the person to whom it is due and may be transferred, and that Montana's general policy supports the free assignability of rights and obligations stemming from contractual obligations. An agricultural lien is a security and ought to follow the debt or contract to which it pertains, and the free assignability of the right to perfect an agricultural lien comports with lien statutes as well as modern business practices. Thus, even though the supplier's lien was not yet perfected when transferred to the sprayer, it was assignable, and the sprayer validly proceeded to perfect and enforce the lien and was entitled to funds in the amount stipulated by the parties as payment for the chemicals sold by the supplier to the farm and applied by the sprayer and was entitled to the interest on the funds to be credited on that sum. Stockman Bank of Mont. v. Mon-Kota, Inc., 2008 MT 74, 342 M 115, 180 P3d 1125 (2008).

Interaction of Agricultural Lien Law and Uniform Commercial Code on Secured Transactions — Filing of Agricultural Lien Adequate to Fulfill Financing Statement Requirements of Uniform Commercial Code: Agricultural liens are not security interests, and only the parts of Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code (U.C.C.) that expressly refer to agricultural liens, rather than those that refer only to security interests, apply to agricultural liens. Merely because collateral consists of farm products does not automatically turn an agricultural lien into a security interest. The attachment rules of Article 9 do not apply to agricultural liens; rather, agricultural liens attach according to the rules in the statutes that created agricultural liens. Similarly, 71-3-902 clearly delineates the procedure for perfecting an agricultural lien. This case presented a potential conflict regarding lien priority in that 71-3-904 grants agricultural liens a superpriority status that is not dependent on being the first to file, while 30-9A-322 states that an agricultural lien has priority over a conflicting security interest on the same collateral if the lien is perfected pursuant to 30-9A-310 of the U.C.C. Thus, agricultural lienors must satisfy the perfection requirements of 30-9A-310 in addition to the perfection requirements of 71-3-902, and by doing so, the lienors will be insulated from the U.C.C. first-in-time rule and retain the superpriority status pursuant to 71-3-904. However, because agricultural liens require the same and more information as a U.C.C. filing and both filings are documented in the same database, the filing of an agricultural lien with the Secretary of State also satisfied the financing statement requirements of the U.C.C., and a duplicate filing of a U.C.C. financing statement is not required. Amount of Lien — Overstatement Not to Invalidate in Absence of Fraud: An overstatement of the amount due does not invalidate a lien, absent fraud or bad faith. Mtn. States Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Lien Statutes to Receive Liberal Construction — Exact Language Not Required in Filing: Lien statutes should receive a liberal construction to the end that the objects and purposes of the statutes may be carried out. Therefore, there is no legal requirement that parties filing liens must use the exact language of the statute relied on. Mtn. States Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Naming Undisclosed Principal in Original Lien: On September 27, 1977, plaintiff Mountain States Resources, Inc. (MSR) contracted with defendant to have him furnish and erect three steel buildings to be used in connection with the Gypsy-Highview Gathering System (GHGS) for natural gas. Monte Grand Exploration, Inc. (MGE) was an undisclosed principal of MSR. The buildings were completed, and at the request of MSR's supervisory agent, flashing was installed on two buildings, which flashing was not called for in the contract. On January 18, 1978, MSR paid the contract but refused to pay for the additional flashing. On March 8, 1978, defendant filed a lien against the proceeds of any gas MSR sold to Montana Power Company. MSR sued to set aside the lien and to recover for slander of title. Defendant joined MGE and sought to foreclose the lien. MGE contended the lien against it was invalid because it was not named in the original lien. MGE was not named in the lien as required by 71-3-1002, but the District Court found that there was an agent-undisclosed principal relationship between MSR and MGE. Defendant was unaware of this relationship until after he filed the lien. Consequently, defendant joined MGE in the suit when he filed his answer and counterclaim. The lien was valid. Mtn. States Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Oil and Gas Lien Proper for Labor and Materials on Pipeline: This section provides a lien is valid "whether or not such material is incorporated therein or becomes a part thereof". Therefore, an oil and gas lien on labor, services, and materials provided on a gas pipeline was valid. Mtn. States Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Agent or Trustee Empowered to Contract: The contract for work or materials, express or implied, which under this section forms the basis for the lien thereby created, may be with the owner of an oil and gas leasehold or with his agent or trustee. Blose v. Havre Oil & Gas Co., 96 M 450, 31 P2d 738 (1934), followed in Mtn. States Resources, Inc. v. Ehlert, 195 M 496, 636 P2d 868, 38 St. Rep. 2061 (1981).

Time of Attachment of Lien:

When a mechanic for work performed on an oil and gas leasehold perfects his lien by compliance with the provisions of Title 71, ch. 3, part 10, it takes effect as of the date of the commencement of his work on the property charged. Blose v. Havre Oil & Gas Co., 96 M 450, 31 P2d 738 (1934).

The lien of one who furnishes material for the drilling of an oil well attaches under this section when he parts with his material on credit. Cont. Supply Co. v. White, 92 M 254, 12 P2d 569 (1932).

Construction to Effect Purpose: Mechanics' and materialmen's lien (now construction lien) laws should be construed whenever possible to promote their purpose, which is to secure payment of those who by their labor or materials enhance the value of the lienee's property. Blose v. Havre Oil and Gas Co., 96 M 450, 31 P2d 738 (1934).

Third Person's Interest: The lien granted by this section to one performing labor in drilling an oil well for the owner of a leasehold on oil and gas lands attaches only to any right, title, or interest of such owner. Therefore, when casing for a well was furnished to the leaseholder by a third person under a contract that if the well should prove a nonproducer the casing should be salvaged and returned to its owner, the lien of the drillers of the well did not extend to the casing. Cheadle v. Bardwell, 95 M 299, 26 P2d 336 (1933).

Deficiency Judgment Proper: In an action under this section to foreclose a lien for labor performed about an oil well, the court may, in the event the sale of the property covered by the lien is insufficient to pay the amount due plaintiff, provide for a deficiency judgment. Hockman v. Sunhew Petroleum Corp., 92 M 174, 11 P2d 778 (1932).

Federal Lease Prohibiting Assignment: The clause in an oil and gas lease issued by the federal government under which the lessee is prohibited from assigning or subletting it without the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior under penalty of forfeiture does not bar enforcement of a decree of foreclosure of a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) granted by this section on such leasehold. Hockman v. Sunhew Petroleum Corp., 92 M 174, 11 P2d 778 (1932).

Description of Property:

Section 71-3-511 (now repealed), made applicable by this section, requires no more than a description by which the property may be identified and makes no provision for a description of the owner. Cont. Supply Co. v. White, 92 M 254, 12 P2d 569 (1932).

Courts are reluctant to set aside mechanics' liens (now construction liens) merely because of a loose description of the property. The general rule is that if there be a substantial compliance with the statutory provisions and there appears enough in the description to enable one familiar with the locality to identify the property upon which the lien is claimed, it is sufficient. Callender v. Crossfield Oil Synd., 84 M 263, 275 P 273 (1929).

Material Not Furnished by Lienor: It was immaterial that complaint in an action to foreclose an oil well materialmen's lien (now construction lien), brought under this section and 71-3-1005, and special in character, affirmatively showed upon its face that certain casing on which the lien was claimed had not been furnished by plaintiff, though perhaps fatal under the general materialmen's (now construction lien) statute, 71-3-502 (now repealed). Cont. Supply Co. v. White, 92 M 254, 12 P2d 569 (1932).

Definition of "Owner": The word "owner" as used in this section does not mean the record owner, but does mean one who has an estate in the property which may be assigned or transferred. Therefore, a notice of lien which named the transferee under an agreement of sale of a lease as the "owner" of a leasehold (the owner of an equitable interest) was not defective in not naming as owner the legal owner. Callender v. Crossfield Oil Synd., 84 M 263, 275 P 273 (1929).

Parties to Foreclosure: In a proceeding to foreclose a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) instituted by an oil well driller under 71-3-501 (now repealed) and this section, asserted against a leasehold interest, neither the lessor nor, in the case of an assigned lease, the assignor is a necessary party. Sunburst Oil & Ref. Co. v. Callender, 84 M 178, 274 P 834 (1929).

Attorney Lien Priority Over Chiropractor Lien: Under 71-3-113, other things being equal, different liens on the same property have priority according to the time of their creation. Relying on 71-3-113, the District Court concluded that, having been filed first, a chiropractor's lien had priority over an attorney's lien. However, this section specifically provides that an attorney's lien has priority over a chiropractor's lien, regardless of the time of the liens' creation, so the District Court's declaration of lien priority was reversible error. Wyant v. Kenda, 2004 MT 348, 324 M 342, 102 P3d 1260 (2004).

Common Fund Doctrine Equitable Exception to American Rule Regarding Award of Attorney Fees Applicable to Medical Services Lien — Elements of Doctrine: Kilmer suffered severe injuries as a passenger in a vehicle driven by Hall. Kilmer received medical attention from a North Dakota hospital, which subsequently perfected a lien for the value of its services in the amount of $309,000. Hall had no insurance, but the co-owner of the vehicle had a $500,000 policy with Mountain West Farm Bureau (Mountain West). The policy had a step-down provision limiting Mountain West's liability to $25,000 for passengers other than the insured or a relative of the insured, so Mountain West initially found that Kilmer was entitled to only $25,000. However, after negotiating with Kilmer's attorney, Mountain West agreed to proffer the policy limit of $500,000, plus $30,000 in no-fault coverage. Mountain West then filed a complaint for interpleader, the hospital cross-claimed against Kilmer for satisfaction of its lien, and Kilmer cross-claimed against the hospital for a reduction in the hospital's recovery for a pro rata portion of Kilmer's attorney fees incurred in negotiating the settlement with Mountain West. The District Court applied Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont. v. Nichols, 157 M 106, 483 P2d 279 (1971), and held that the hospital was not liable for a pro rata portion of Kilmer's attorney fees. Kilmer appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Under the 1999 version of this section applicable to this case, the hospital had a valid lien for its medical services; however, the statute was silent on the issue of attorney fee apportionment (see, however, 2001 amendments addressing a hospital's pro rata liability for an injured person's attorney fees). Generally, Montana follows the American rule that a party in a civil action is not entitled to attorney fees absent a specific contractual or statutory grant of those fees. There are exceptions to the American rule, one of which is the common fund doctrine authorizing the spread of fees among the individuals who benefit from the litigation that created the common fund. The three elements necessary to establish a common fund, as set out in Means v. Mont. Power Co., 191 M 395, 625 P2d 32 (1981), and Murer v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 283 M 210, 942 P2d 69 (1997), are: (1) one party, known as the active beneficiary, must create, reserve, or increase a common fund; (2) the active beneficiary must incur legal fees in establishing the common fund; and (3) the common fund must benefit ascertainable, nonparticipating beneficiaries. To the extent that there are inequities in the contributions of participating counsel, the court may then intervene to allocate fees accordingly. Because the common fund doctrine was not raised in Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont. v. Nichols, the Supreme Court held that that case did not preclude application of the doctrine in the present case. Thus, the District Court erred as a matter of law in relying on Sisters of Charity of Providence of Mont. v. Nichols to grant the hospital's partial summary judgment. Although the Supreme Court declined to rule on the applicability of the common fund doctrine here because the parties did not present arguments in District Court as to whether Kilmer could satisfy the elements of the doctrine, the case was remanded to allow Kilmer to present arguments on the applicability of the common fund doctrine. Mtn. W. Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2001 MT 314, 308 M 29, 38 P3d 825 (2001), followed in Flynn v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 2002 MT 279, 312 M 410, 60 P3d 397 (2002).

Health Service Corporations Not Subject to Physician Liens: In 1987, the Legislature amended the insurance code to include health service corporations. The plaintiff sent a lien notice to the defendant that was ignored by the defendant, and the insurance proceeds were paid directly to the patient. The lower court ruled that the 1987 amendment to the insurance code made health service corporations subject to the physician lien statutes. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that the Legislature did not specifically state that it was subjecting health service corporations to the lien statutes and that therefore the Supreme Court would not presume that intention. (See 1991 amendment to 71-3-1113.) Anesthesiology, P.C. v. Blue Cross & Blue Shield, 246 M 277, 806 P2d 16, 47 St. Rep. 2015 (1990).

Assignment of Interest in Insurance Proceeds to Chiropractor for Cost of Services — Chiropractor Properly Designated Payee: Following an automobile accident, Wyant assigned her interest in payment of insurance proceeds to her chiropractor to the extent of the cost of the chiropractor's services. The chiropractor then filed a notice of lien with the insurer. The insurer's offer of settlement was for the full sum and included the chiropractor's bill. To honor the lien, the insurer named the chiropractor as payee on the settlement check, which was an appropriate way for the insurer to satisfy its statutory obligation. Although not required, naming the chiropractor as payee was not error. Wyant v. Kenda, 2004 MT 348, 324 M 342, 102 P3d 1260 (2004).

Case Notes

No Implied Contract Agister's Lien Absent Custody or Control of Cattle: Bellanger obtained loans from the Daniels-Sheridan Federal Credit Union to finance a ranching operation, securing the loans with several promissory notes securing an interest in the cattle on the ranch. Bellanger subsequently defaulted on the loans, and the credit union initiated an action to enforce the promissory notes pursuant to the Uniform Commercial Code. The case broadened to encompass a dispute over proceeds from the sale of the cattle to include Bellanger's father Alfred, who asserted an agister's lien for having kept the cattle on his property. The cattle were subsequently seized and sold for $79,012.27, and the District Court split the proceeds, with $45,467.94 paid to the credit union and a judgment for the remainder owed on the promissory notes and $33,544.33 paid to the owner of the auction company where Bellanger customarily sold cattle, but Alfred and Bellanger were foreclosed of all interest in the proceeds. On appeal, Alfred asserted that his agister's lien should have entitled him to some of the proceeds. Alfred contended that an agister's lien was commenced via an implied contract when the credit union obtained a preliminary injunction against removal or sale of the cattle, which required Alfred to care for the cattle on his property, pursuant to 27-1-222, 45-8-211, and 70-6-206. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's finding that because Alfred never had custody or control of the cattle, allowing Bellanger to run the cattle on the property rent-free in exchange for looking after Alfred's cattle, the statutory duties upon which Alfred relied in support of an implied contract agister's lien were inapplicable. The court declined to recognize any manner for the creation of an agister's lien except as provided in this section. Daniels-Sheridan Fed. Credit Union v. Bellanger, 2001 MT 235, 307 M 22, 36 P3d 397 (2001). (See 2013 amendment deleting language pertaining to the keeping of livestock.)

Denial of Agister's Lien by Summary Judgment — Vagueness of Underlying Agreement: While acknowledging that pursuant to Heckman & Shell v. Wilson, 158 M 47, 487 P2d 1141 (1971), an agister's lien may be enforceable without further specification in the underlying agreement regarding the price for the services, at a minimum, the material elements of a contract must be present in general terms. In the present case, not only were the material terms missing, but the agreement upon which the lien was based was so vague as to create more questions about the parties' expectations than it did purported certainties about their alleged obligations to perform. Because the agreement on which the claim of an agister's lien against the estate was unenforceable, the District Court did not err in summarily denying the existence of the lien. In re Estate of Bolinger, 1998 MT 303, 292 M 97, 971 P2d 761, 55 St. Rep. 1251 (1998).

Possession by Repair Facility Not Depriving Owner of Use — No Lien: A pickup truck that had money owing for repairs and was subsequently located at the repair facility may have been in the possession of the repair facility, but that possession did not imply that there was an artisan's lien on it, nor was the owner prevented from taking possession of the truck at any time; thus, the Supreme Court held the District Court did not err in holding that the owner of the truck was not deprived of use of the vehicle. Willoughby v. Sweeny, 222 M 231, 720 P2d 1202, 43 St. Rep. 1222 (1986).

Effect of Jury Verdict: The parties entered into an oral agreement for the lease of the defendants' lands for the purpose of grazing cattle. Payments were monthly. Plaintiff claimed the lease was month-to-month. Defendants claimed the lease was a 3-year lease. After 1 ½ years, the plaintiff terminated the lease. Defendants refused to allow the plaintiff to remove his cattle, asserted an agister's lien on the cattle, and sought damages for overgrazing and rental payments for the remainder of the second year of the lease. The jury found in favor of the defendants, awarded them damages of $7,000, and directed that the plaintiff's cattle be returned to him. The Supreme Court refused to alter or amend the judgment on the limited issue of damages on the grounds that to do so would frustrate the purpose of the jury, regardless of whether the defendants' claim of an agister's lien was valid. Hill v. Turley, 218 M 511, 710 P2d 50, 42 St. Rep. 1783 (1985). (See 2013 amendment deleting language pertaining to the keeping of livestock.)

Improper Jury Instructions — Elements of Crime — Failure to Pursue Civil Lien Remedy Implying Theft — "Plain Error": The jury was not instructed on the statutory elements of the crime. The jury's instructions on the defendant's civil remedy, an agister's lien, permitted the inference from his failure to pursue the civil remedy that he was guilty of theft. In granting a new trial, the Supreme Court noted that the issue of jury instructions not offered or objected to at trial, usually a nonappealable issue, was reviewed here to determine if the jury was properly instructed. The failure to instruct on the elements of the crime constituted "plain error". Instructing the jury that each element of the crime had to be proved was insufficient if the elements were not given to the jury as well. St. v. Lundblade, 191 M 526, 625 P2d 545, 38 St. Rep. 441 (1981).

Contract Required:

Under this statute there must be a delivery of possession and a contract for the keeping before a lien is created. Engle v. Pfister, 127 M 65, 257 P2d 561 (1953).

An agisters' lien can arise only when the owner or person in lawful possession of the stock delivers it to the ranchman or farmer under a contract, express or implied, to care for the stock. Noel v. Cowan, 80 M 258, 260 P 116 (1927).

Mechanics' Lien: The fact that a machinery repair company did not assert a lien under this section does not deprive it of the right to claim a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) under 71-3-501 (now repealed). Caird Eng'r Works v. Seven-Up Gold Min. Co., Inc., 111 M 471, 111 P2d 267 (1941).

Motor Vehicle Storage: An operator of a garage who claimed to hold an automobile for storage charges was entitled to a lien on the car and, in retaining same to secure his lien for storage charges, he was not liable for wrongful conversion thereof. Bethel v. Giebel, 101 M 410, 55 P2d 1287 (1936).

Employee Claims Not Covered:

This section applies only to one entrusted with the care, custody, and control of animals under a contract of bailment, and under it a lien is not given to an employee or a herder on the livestock of his employer for wages due for herding them. Love v. Hecer, 67 M 497, 215 P 1099 (1923).

Persons employed to drive cattle are not herders and, consequently, are not entitled to a herders' lien. Before a lien is created, there must be a delivery of possession and a contract for the keeping of the cattle for the purpose of feeding, herding, ranching, or pasturing. Underwood v. Birdsell, 6 M 142, 9 P 922 (1886). See Vose v. Whitney, 7 M 385, 16 P 846 (1888).

Sheriff Appointing Agister: When cattle are taken into the possession of the Sheriff by virtue of the terms of a chattel mortgage authorizing such possession in case of default and plaintiff, by direction of a deputy of the Sheriff, took charge of the cattle and fed and pastured them, during which time the debt secured by the mortgage was settled, the plaintiff has a lien on the cattle. Vose v. Whitney, 7 M 385, 16 P 846 (1888).

1983 Amendment: In (1), increased time of giving notice to 30 days from 10 days; near end of (1) after "amount of work" deleted "or feed"; after "performed or" inserted "feed or other services"; in (3) increased time for taking possession from 10 days to 20 days in case of mailing notice and from 5 days to 10 days after personal service.

Case Notes

Notice to Secured Party: Automobile repairman's asserted agisters' lien did not have priority over bank's security interest when person authorizing repairs was not registered owner or agent of owner and notice of lien was not given to bank within 10 days of receipt of vehicle for repair. Failure to file copy of lien with Registrar of Motor Vehicles as required by 61-3-103 also rendered the asserted agisters' lien invalid. Repossession of vehicle on behalf of bank did not, under these circumstances, constitute conversion. Parker v. West, 161 M 170, 505 P2d 94 (1973).

Other Recorded Liens: The term "other recorded liens" includes conditional sales contracts. Williamson v. Skerritt, 141 M 422, 378 P2d 215 (1963).

(v) the name of the person claiming the lien.

(c) The notice may be given by personal service or by mailing by certified mail a copy of the notice to the last-known post-office address of the owner or person who contracted for the work, labor, or services performed or the feed or material furnished.

(d) If the sheriff or constable is not able to effect personal service or service by mail because the location and mailing address of the owner or the contracting person are unknown, the sheriff or constable may give notice by posting notice of the sale in three public places in the county in which the property is located"; in (5) substituted "court's lien enforcement judgment" for "affidavit", after "sheriff" deleted "or constable", and after "shall" deleted "proceed to"; deleted former (6) that read: "(6) However, before seizing any property under the provisions of this section, the sheriff may require an indemnity bond from the lienor that may not exceed double the amount of the claim against the property. The bond and the surety or sureties on the bond must be approved by the sheriff"; inserted (7) allowing a property owner to request a hearing; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective July 1, 2013.

Preamble: The preamble attached to Ch. 186, L. 2013, provided: "WHEREAS, Article II, section 17, of the Montana Constitution provides "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law" and Section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides "nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law"; and

WHEREAS, in light of these constitutional due process provisions, the United States District Court for the District of Montana in Cox v. Yellowstone County, 795 F. Supp. 2d 1128 (2011), held that the Court "can conceive of no set of circumstances under which Montana's agisters' lien statute could pass constitutional muster in view of procedural due process requirements. Particularly, the need to provide a meaningful opportunity to be heard prior to a government deprivation of property"; and

WHEREAS, the Court in Cox v. Yellowstone County further held that "the enforcement provision of Montana's agisters' lien statute, Mont. Code Ann. §71-3-1203, is unconstitutional as written"; and

WHEREAS, this Act revises Montana's agisters' lien enforcement laws to conform with the due process provisions of the Montana and United States Constitutions."

Applicability: Section 3, Ch. 186, L. 2013, provided: "[This act] applies to all proceedings and actions initiated on or after [the effective date of this act]." Effective July 1, 2013.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1987 Amendments: Chapter 87 in introduction substituted "this part" for "this section"; in (1) substituted "an affidavit" for "a statement"; in (2) substituted "affidavit" for "statement"; and inserted (4) requiring notice of the sale and stating the notice procedure and requirements. (Note: amendment to (3) concerning public notice of sale was voided by Ch. 88.)

Chapter 88 at end of (3) substituted "prescribed in 25-13-701(1)(b)" for "provided by law for the sale of mortgaged personal property by sheriffs. Such notice shall be given for not less than 5 or more than 10 days prior to the date of sale"; and in (6), before "double the amount", substituted "that may not exceed" for "in not to exceed".

Interim Study Committee Bill: Chapter 87, L. 1987, was introduced at the request of the Joint Interim Subcommittee on Lien Laws. See "Creditor's Rights vs. Debtor's Shields", A Report to the 50th Legislature, Mont. Leg. Council, Nov. 1986.

Case Notes

Actual Notice of Agisters' Lien Sale: The notice in this section must be reasonably calculated to reach the owners of the livestock. Two written notices were mailed to plaintiffs 10 days before sale. Plaintiffs also received two telephone calls 1 week before the sale. Because plaintiffs received sufficient actual notice, the Supreme Court refused to consider due process arguments and directed the attention of the Montana Legislature to the notice provisions in this section. Rose v. Myers, 223 M 13, 724 P2d 176, 43 St. Rep. 1493 (1986). See also Cox v. Yellowstone County, 795 F.Supp. 2d 1128 (2011), holding the pre-2013 amended version of 71-3-1203 unconstitutional for failing to provide an opportunity for a hearing prior to the sale of the property.

Commercial Reasonableness of Agisters' Lien Sale: Appellants claimed the sale of horses at an agisters' lien sale was not commercially reasonable because the horses were sold in lots at less than their value. Looking to 30-9-507 (now repealed) for guidance, the Supreme Court stated that the sale of horses at a low price in lots instead of individually did not make the sale commercially unreasonable. Testimony indicated that horses were often sold in this manner and could have been sold individually if a bidder had so requested. Rose v. Myers, 223 M 13, 724 P2d 176, 43 St. Rep. 1493 (1986).

Case Notes

Transaction Neither Sale nor Mortgage — No Security Interest Created: Plaintiff purchased a ranch on behalf of defendant with defendant's money but put title to the ranch in plaintiff's name and operated the ranch for defendant. The parties subsequently executed documents to settle the dispute between them concerning the ranch property, including plaintiff's quitclaim deed of the property to defendant. Since the transaction did not involve either a sale or mortgage of the property, plaintiff did not hold a security interest in the ranch. An equitable lien did not arise under this section because there was no sale or mortgage, merely a contract to settle a dispute. O'Connor v. Lewis, 238 M 270, 776 P2d 1228, 46 St. Rep. 1260 (1989).

Revival of Contract of Sale: After several years default in installments, interest, and taxes on a contract for the sale of real property, defendant vendee gave plaintiff vendor a quitclaim deed to the property. The vendor then leased the property to vendee. The lease contained a provision that the property could be sold to vendee or anyone else during the term of the lease. The Supreme Court held that the ruling by the trial court that the sales contract had not been revived by the acts of the parties was proper. Spratt v. Pfeifle, 115 M 232, 142 P2d 563 (1943).

Retention of Title by Vendor:

This section, providing for a vendors' lien for so much of the purchase price of real property as remains unpaid and unsecured, has no application to an executory contract of sale under which the vendor retains title in himself until the purchase price is fully paid. Smith v. Bunston, 72 M 535, 234 P 836 (1925).

Under a contract of sale of property, legal title was to remain in the vendor until several of the deferred payments had been made. When the vendee failed to make a payment the vendor sued, asking for cancellation of the contract and for enforcement of the contractual provision requiring forfeiture of advance payments. The Supreme Court ruled that under 28-1-104, total forfeiture was not proper. However, the court stated that neither this section nor the provision of 71-3-109 declaring void "contracts for the forfeiture of property subject to a lien" was applicable. Cook-Reynolds Co. v. Chipman, 47 M 289, 133 P 694 (1913).

Rescission Not Granted — Failure of Consideration Required to Trigger Purchaser's Lien: Plaintiffs sought restitution in a rescission case, seeking return of their downpayment, investment in improvements, and payments on certain loans. Following their default, the property was resold, and plaintiffs contended that this section allowed them a purchaser's lien on the property. However, this section only applies to a case in which there is a failure of consideration and the purchaser is entitled to recover part of the amount paid. When, as here, rescission was not granted, there was no failure of consideration; therefore, this section did not apply. Schweigert v. Fowler, 240 M 424, 784 P2d 405, 47 St. Rep. 1 (1990).

Litigation Costs and Attorney Fees of Buyer as Part of Amount Paid for Property — Effect of Seller's Mortgage of Property to His Attorney to Secure Payment of Seller's Attorney Fees: In a dispute over a contract for the sale of a resort, buyer was granted rescission. Buyer was also granted costs and attorney fees. During the trial, sellers mortgaged the property to their attorney to secure their attorney fees. The words "amount paid" in a statute stating that one who pays any part of the price of real property has a special lien on the property for the part of "the amount paid" as he may be entitled to recover back in case of failure of consideration does not include that person's litigation costs and attorney fees. The statute did not give buyer a lien for the costs and attorney fees with priority over the mortgage of sellers' attorney. However, the equities of the case favored giving payment of buyer's costs and attorney fees priority over the mortgage of sellers' attorney. Sellers and their attorney knew a possible result of the litigation might be an award of costs and attorney fees to buyer, preventing sellers and their attorney from circumventing the ultimate result of the litigation. Warner v. Peterson, 234 M 319, 762 P2d 872, 45 St. Rep. 1939 (1988).

Foreclosure of Lien Not Rescission of Sale: In an action to foreclose a vendees' lien on land independent of possession under this section, the rules governing an action for the rescission of a contract are not applicable, and therefore plaintiff was not required to show that he had placed or offered to place defendant in the position in which he was at the time the contract was entered into. Hollensteiner v. Anderson, 78 M 122, 252 P 796 (1927).

Common-Law Right to Setoff Clarified: The right of setoff exists between any mutual debtors and creditors where the debts have matured and the parties mutually are debtors and creditors of and to each other. It is a general rule that when a depositor is indebted to a bank and the debts are mutual, the bank may apply deposits to a payment of the debt due it by the depositor, provided there is no express agreement to the contrary and the deposit is not specifically applicable to some other purpose. For a bank to establish the right to setoff, the fund to be set off must be owed by the bank to the debtor, the fund must be deposited without restrictions, and the existing indebtedness must be due and owing. Victor Werlhof Aviation Ins. v. Farmers St. Bank, 237 M 51, 771 P2d 962, 46 St. Rep. 613 (1989). See also Sec. St. Bank v. First Nat'l Bank, 78 M 389, 254 P 417 (1927).

Setoff Improperly Applied Before Note Due or Default Occurs: A bank applied a setoff before any demand for payment was made or indebtedness matured under the theory of the general bank lien expressed in this section and the right to accelerate performance in good faith under 30-1-208. The argument was discounted by the Supreme Court, noting that the right of setoff does not arise simply from the lien and that under the long-established rule that when money is deposited in a bank to the credit of one of its debtors without an express agreement to the contrary or direction to apply to a specific purpose, the bank may apply the deposit only to satisfy past-due indebtedness. CHAPTER 1
UNIFORM PROBATE CODE
GENERAL PROVISIONS

Chapter Compiler's Comments

Comments for 1992 CLE Presentation on the "Montana" Uniform Probate Code:

This Comment was prepared for a CLE presentation entitled "The "Montana" Uniform Probate Code". The material was prepared and presented by Bjarne Johnson at the Uniform Law CLE in Missoula on April 25, 1992. Mr. Johnson can be considered the "father" of the Uniform Probate Code in Montana. The Code Commissioner has determined that the history and insight reflected in this material should be preserved and available to probate practitioners in Montana. The material follows:

Uniform Codes do not "just happen." After a Code is drafted and ready for submission to the various legislatures, what happens during that period of time can have a significant influence and impact on the Uniform Code that is ultimately adopted. At least this was true for the Uniform Probate Code in Montana, and many of the changes in the Code relate back to matters and events that occurred before and after the time the Code was submitted to the legislature for enactment.

BACKGROUND

Shortly after the Uniform Probate Code was approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on uniform state laws and the American Bar Association in 1969, Chief Justice Harrison and Joe McCaffery, then president of the Montana Bar Association, jointly appointed a special committee to study the Code and make recommendations back to the Bar Association and to the Court. Chief Justice Harrison had spent several years working on the Code before the final draft was submitted to the ABA for approval.

COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Committee members were Jack Dietrich and Bob Hendrickson from Billings, Sherman Lohn and Professor Lester Rusoff from Missoula, James Poore, Jr., Harold Dean and Bob Corette from Butte, James Morrow from Bozeman, Grover Schmidt from Fort Benton, Bill Baucus, Jack Stephenson, Dale Forbes and Bjarne Johnson from Great Falls, with Bjarne Johnson as chairman of the committee. The committee carefully studied the Code on a line-by-line, paragraph-by-paragraph basis. During the course of the study, the committee tried to compare the informal procedures of the new Code with the strictly supervised probate procedure in Montana, and it became more and more apparent that the Uniform Probate Code was a substantial improvement over the existing Montana law.

In the following year, the same committee approached the problem from a different direction. It endeavored to rewrite the existing Montana Code by incorporating into it what it thought were certain desirable provisions of the Uniform Probate Code. The effort was not successful. You simply cannot mix the informal procedures of the Uniform Probate Code with the formal procedures of the Montana Code.

Before the 1973 legislature convened, several legislators requested copies of the Uniform Probate Code as drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on uniform state laws. A copy was furnished to John Hall and other legislators, and John Hall was instrumental in having the bill drafted and introduced in the 1973 session. The bill was immediately referred to a Joint Committee of the House and Senate with instructions to study the bill and report back to the 1974 legislature. John Hall of Great Falls was designated as chairman of the Interim committee.

A majority of our special committee was of the opinion that the Uniform Probate Code was a substantial improvement over the existing Montana Code and that we should make every effort to have it adopted. A majority of our committee also thought that the lawyers should be in the forefront of any reform movement. The experience in Idaho, which had adopted the Code in 1972, and other states, demonstrated that opposition to the Uniform Probate Code by the organized Bar was ineffectual. A minority of the committee felt that perhaps some change was necessary, but the time was not now; that the informal provisions of the proposed code was a license for the personal representatives to steal and that we ought to wait and see what happened in other states before we took such a drastic step as to repeal our entire existing probate code and substitute something in its place. The committee was divided on the merits of the UPC from the day the committee was appointed.

A majority of the committee voted to recommend to the Bar Association at its annual meeting in Missoula in 1973 that it approve the Uniform Probate Code in principle with such changes as might be necessary to meet local conditions. By that time the Code was taking on a momentum of its own. There were at least eleven other organizations then actively urging adoption of the Code, and several on the committee were of the view that we were going to have the Uniform Probate Code in Montana regardless of any action the organized Bar might take. The Montana Bar approved the committee report.

The Legislative Interim Committee conducted a series of public hearings. The chairman and other members of our committee were invited to attend and submit testimony. One Montana lawyer, a member of our committee, appeared in opposition to the Code, both at the first public hearing and again when it was being considered by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Several years after the Code was adopted the dissident member apologized, said he was wrong - that the UPC was a good Code and he would not consider going back to the previous probate code. The Legislative Interim Committee made a number of changes in the Code and then reported the bill out favorably for passage. The bill passed both houses of the 1974 legislature without a dissenting vote and was to be effective July 1, 1975.

IMPLEMENTING THE CODE

Dick Josephson, chairman of the Montana Bar Continuing Legal Education Committee, and Diana Dowling, then executive secretary of the Montana Bar Association, thought the Bar Association should take an active part in introducing the new Code to the Montana lawyers and preparing forms for their use. With such prodding, I asked for volunteers from the Probate and Trust Section of the Montana Bar Association to help draft forms and help prepare a commentary on the Code. From the volunteers, a new committee was composed of J. C. Garlington from Missoula, Jack Dietrich and Hugh Sweeney of Billings, David Niklas, Ada Harlen and John Lane III from Helena, Bill Baucus and Bjarne Johnson from Great Falls, with Bjarne Johnson as chairman of the new committee.

Several meetings were held in Great Falls and Helena, and it was not unusual to have 100 percent attendance at these meetings. We divided the Code into several parts and asked that individual committee members prepare forms suitable for the portion of the Code for which he or she was responsible. After each lawyer drafted his set of forms (and all of them were drafted on time), we then met to critique the work of each other. The forms were published in a probate manual entitled "Montana Probate Procedure." The Procedure form book was published by the State Bar of Montana and is now being regularly updated after each session of the legislature by David N. Niklas of Helena. David N. Niklas was one of the original members of our committee.

The publication of the form book probably did more than anything else we could have done to make the probate forms uniform within the state of Montana. We believe that the use of the forms prepared by our Code committee has resulted in substantial uniformity in practice throughout all of the judicial districts of the state.

The Forms Committee spent hundreds of hours in what must have been by then the largest publishing effort in the history of the Montana Bar Association. Several committee members appeared many times in hearings before various legislative committees in Helena. The committee arranged for and sponsored in the name of the Montana Bar Association two state-wide seminars featuring Professor Dick Wellman and Professor Richard W. Effland. In addition, the committee arranged for and personally conducted at least ten intensive workshop seminars for lawyers throughout the state.

The adoption of the Code with an effective date of July 1, 1975, represented the culmination of six years of work for several of us on the two committees.

"MONTANA" UNIFORM CODE

The Uniform Probate Code adopted by Chapter 365, laws of 1974, with an effective date of July 1, 1975, was not a model of anything. The Legislative Interim Committee amended it in many particulars in what it thought was necessary to comply with "local conditions." Shortly after the Uniform Probate Code was adopted in Montana, I sent a copy of it to Dick Wellman. Dick wrote a memorandum to me April 29, 1975, preceded by the statement: "The following deviations from UPC move me to conclude that the state should not be considered a UPC state." The Allen Smith Company published the 1947 Revised Codes of Montana entitled Title 91A as the "Montana Uniform Probate Code." The designation is perhaps a contradiction in terms, but also fairly well describes what we originally came up with.

CODIFICATION

When originally enacted, the legislature followed the headings and numbering of the code sections adopted by the Joint Editorial Board. When the Code Commission recodified the Montana Uniform Probate Code, it divided some sections and renumbered others so now it is cumbersome trying to go from a Montana MCA section to the Uniform Laws Annotated.

A LOOK BACK

The Code has been in effect since July 1, 1975, and now some sixteen years later, it is time to take a look at what the legislature and the Montana Supreme Court have done to the Code since its original date of enactment. It is also time to take a look at what the practice is under the Code and if the Montana lawyer is taking full advantage of the many opportunities offered by the Uniform Probate Code.

The new Code (if a code adopted in 1975 can now be called new) makes available to us many estate planning techniques and simplification of probate procedures that were not available to us before. It is something like a very fine kit of tools that can be very useful in the hands of a skilled practitioner. The Code cannot be applied in isolation, but must be viewed in context of treatment of the Code by the Montana Supreme Court and must also be considered in the context of our tax laws. It is essential if a lawyer is going to practice successfully in the estate planning and probate field that he have a very good understanding of the tax law applicable to properly represent his client as well as to avoid claims of malpractice. When you are engaged, you represent to your client that you have a good understanding of probate law and tax law. You must have both. Estate planning is a high risk area of the practice of law.

In the materials that follow, I have commented on certain Code sections, what the Montana Supreme Court has done with reference to each, and tax laws that have a connection with the Code. The tax references are inserted simply to make you aware of some possibilities and also some pitfalls in the tax area. The tax references are very basic and represent only a small part of the tax law with which you must be familiar. Every action you take with the probate of even a simple estate has a tax consequence of some kind. There is no logic in the tax law, and frequently a general statement is followed by an exception and sometimes an exception to the exception. The tax law changes daily.

SUPREME COURT TREATMENT

Chapters 1, 2, 3 and 5 of Title 72 of the MCA have been referred to or interpreted in at least 77 cases in the Montana Supreme Court. In general, we can say that the Supreme Court fairly well carries out the purposes and intent of the Code with some decisions that can only be considered as aberrations. MCA §72-1-102 [now repealed] provides [provided]:

Purposes — liberal construction. (1) This code shall be liberally construed and applied to promote its underlying purposes and policies.

(2) The underlying purposes and policies of this code are to:

(a) simplify and clarify the law concerning the affairs of decedents, missing persons, protected persons, minors, and incapacitated persons;

(b) discover and make effective the intent of a decedent in distribution of his property;

(c) promote a speedy and efficient system for liquidating the estate of the decedent and making distribution to its successors;

(d) make uniform the law among the various jurisdictions.

In the matter of Merkel's Estate, 190 Mont. 78, 618 P.2d 872 (1980), the court held that the UPC sections which provide for a homestead allowance and exempt property contemplate estates in fee and not life estates only. The court went on to say terming these interests as a life estate would appear to undercut one of the express purposes of the UPC, that is, "to simplify . . . the law concerning the affairs of decedents."

JURISDICTION

MCA 72-1-202. Subject matter jurisdiction. (1) To the full extent permitted by the constitution, the court has jurisdiction over all subject matter relating to:

(a) estates of decedents, including construction of wills and determination of heirs and successors of decedents, and estates of protected persons; and

(b) protection of minors and incapacitated persons.

(2) The court has full power to make orders, judgments, and decrees and take all other action necessary and proper to administer justice in the matters which come before it.

The Legislative Interim Committee found the Code section quoted and MCA §72-1-203 to 209 inclusive to be straightforward and simple to understand. There was never any doubt but that we were dealing with the district court and that on any matter that might be brought before it involving probate or a related action that the court had complete and full jurisdiction to do whatever might be necessary to do in the premises. The Interim Committee did not find any limitation, but the Montana Supreme Court did.

In Re the Matter of the Estate of Alice Dullenty Thomas, Deceased, 699 P.2d 1072, 190 Mont. 78, Alice Dullenty Thomas and Albert Thomas were husband and wife. They originally had wills leaving all of their estate to the survivor and on the death of both, to the heirs of Albert Thomas. In 1980 and before her death in 1982, Alice gave a power of attorney to her nephew, Bill Bresnahan, who conveyed Alice's real property to Alice's heirs. After her death, a sister acting as conservator for the husband who was now incompetent, brought an action to set aside the conveyance and to include the real property in the inventory of the estate of the deceased wife. The District Court, Thirteenth Judicial District, Yellowstone County, Robert J. Holstrom, District Judge, held that while sitting in probate, the court lacked jurisdiction to consider propriety of pre-death transfers of real property. The heirs who would have inherited under a will appealed. The Supreme Court, through Justice Hunt, held that the district court sitting in probate did not have jurisdiction to determine title to real property. In support of its position, the court cited several cases that had been decided in Montana before the adoption of the Uniform Probate Code. Justice Sheehy, specially concurring in the result, said, "It would be my suggestion to the district court and the parties that a special administrator be appointed under MCA §72-3-701, charged with the duty to bring an action on behalf of the estate against the transferee to determine the issues of title raised by the conservator. The special administrator should be a neutral person to the contending parties here. The determination of the court in such special action would determine for the probate court whether the real property should be included as an asset of Alice's estate."

It seems to me the Supreme Court is in error. If the legislative committee had determined that the district court should be a court of limited jurisdiction on any matter dealing with probate, then it would have said so. All of the many references to the district court throughout the Code treat the court as one of general jurisdiction and not one of limitation. The decision flies in the face of MCA §72-1-102(c) [now repealed] that one of the purposes of the Code was to "promote a speedy and efficient system for liquidating the estate of the decedent and making distribution to its successors." I do not find where this case has been cited in any subsequent case by the Montana Supreme Court or any other court. It is a dangerous decision if you were relying on a district court being a court of general jurisdiction and the Supreme Court decides that if it is a matter involving probate that the district court is a court of limited jurisdiction and therefore without power to act. You may find yourself caught up in a statute of limitations.

The Supreme Court, in a number of other decisions, referred to "probate court" by way of definition to describe probate matters but not by way of limitation of the power of the court to act in a broad spectrum of cases.

FEES

The original version of the Uniform Probate Code submitted to John Hall for introduction in the 1973 legislature simply provided that a personal representative is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his services. Nothing was said about attorneys' fees. When the matter got to the Joint Committee of the House and Senate, all of the members were aware that in one jurisdiction in Montana, the court generally and consistently allowed an attorney's fee of 9 percent of the estate. If any outsider went into that jurisdiction to probate an estate and asked for a lesser fee than 9 percent, he was considered as committing malpractice against the local bar. The Joint Committee was determined to put a stop to what it considered to be excessive fee allowances in the one jurisdiction. From that point of departure, the Committee decided that the maximum personal representative's fee would be 3 percent of the first $40,000 and 2 percent for everything beyond that, and that the attorney's fee should not exceed one and one-half times the personal representative's fee. I have correspondence from an attorney in the offending jurisdiction that the fee schedule proposed by the Interim Committee was much too low and that I should use my best efforts to increase the maximum attorney's fee allowable.

I replied that I could not in good conscience ask the committee to do this, but that we would try to get an additional provision to the effect that the parties could agree on what a reasonable fee would be under the circumstances and which would not necessarily be the maximum fee established by the Code. The Joint Committee would have none of it, and as a result, we have MCA §§72-3-631 and 72-3-633. It was intended that a personal representative was entitled to reasonable compensation for his services and that the fee quoted was simply a maximum which could not be exceeded without approval of the court. What was quoted as the maximum has frequently become the minimum with many attorneys and can make probate much more expensive than was contemplated by the Uniform Probate Code. In many instances, there is not much relationship between the maximum fee and the services performed to probate a simple estate and particularly so if the attorney has no understanding or little understanding of tax implications in the estate. If there are significant tax implications or problems in an estate, then a qualified attorney is entitled to compensation accordingly. I find that as the consumer becomes more knowledgeable that more and more fees are negotiated in advance, and all parties are much happier.

The matter of fees has been before the Montana Supreme Court on more than one occasion. In the Estate of William Magelssen, 182 Mont 372, 597 P.2d 90 (1979). William Magelssen died in 1976, leaving an estate valued in excess of $3.5 million. After the estate was opened, the attorney and personal representative discussed fees, and the attorney advised the personal representative by letter that his firm would charge the full 3 percent of the value of the estate as valued for federal estate tax purposes for the ordinary services to the estate. The court referred to MCA §72-3-633 entitled "Compensation of Attorney," which the Court said merely places a ceiling on the amount of compensation payable to an attorney for ordinary services. These provisions establish the boundaries of the personal representative's authority to contract for the services of an attorney. The fee involved in the instant case fits within these limits. Accordingly, the fee contract was valid under the applicable provisions of the Montana Uniform Probate Code.

The court went on to say:

Though the fee contract is open to review under MCA §72-3-634, the amount of the fee is not automatically converted into a quantum meruit measure of compensation. Indeed, quantum meruit compensation is normally appropriate only where a valid contract does not exist.

The court also noted:

Considering the principal purpose of §91A-3-722 and the exceptional circumstances surrounding its invocation in this case, the district court did not err in refusing quantum meruit as the measure of compensation. The court's threshold determination of reasonableness, followed by an apportionment of the agreed fee to the percentage of the job completed, was proper.

The court further stated:

Based on these factors, we see no error in the exclusion of evidence as to the attorney's actual time expended in probate. We note in this regard that the time factor has, generally speaking, played a relatively minor role in determination by a court of a reasonable attorney's fee in probate.

IN A DIFFERENT CASE

The Montana Supreme Court has concluded that our fee statutes require that the fee charts for legal services be reasonable and, further, In the Matter of the Estate of Robert E. Stone, 236 Mont 1, 768 P.2d 334 (1989), the court held that reasonableness is to be ascertained by considering the time spent, the nature of the service, and the skill and experience required. In the same case, the court expressly rejected the argument that the percentages set forth in MCA §§72-3-631 and 72-3-633 are "standard fees."

It appears that if the personal representative and the attorney enter into a written agreement providing for the maximum statutory fee that such agreement is reasonable and the fees are fair. In Re the Estate of Magelssen. The manner in which the Montana Supreme Court has treated fees compels the attorney to enter into a written agreement with the personal representative for the basis of his fees. Not only is it legally sound to do so, but in most cases will remove any disagreement between the personal representative and the attorney as to the reasonableness of the fee. Such agreement, however, does not preclude some other interested party from bringing the matter to the court as provided by MCA §72-3-634.

HOMESTEAD, EXEMPT PROPERTY AND FAMILY ALLOWANCE

When drafting a will or advising your client on the rights of the parties in an intestacy you must keep in mind MCA 72-2-801 [72-2-412] providing for Homestead Allowance and MCA 72-2-802 [72-2-413] providing for exempt property. The statutes are simple to read but not always easy to apply.

MCA §72-2-801 [now 72-2-412 and substantially revised] provides [provided] for a $20,000 homestead allowance and further provides [provided] "(3) Homestead allowance is in addition to any share passing to the surviving spouse or minor or dependent child by the will of decedent unless otherwise provided, by intestate succession, or by way of elective share." (Emphasis added.)

MCA §72-2-802 [now 72-2-413 and substantially revised] provides [provided] for $3500 of exempt property and further provides "(3) These rights are in addition to any benefit or share passing to the surviving spouse or children by the will of the decedent unless otherwise provided, by intestate succession, or by way of elective share." (Emphasis added.)

There have been several Supreme Court decisions on the rights of the parties, and we can expect more. Matter of Merkel's Estate, 190 Mont. 78, 618 P.2d 872 (1980). Herman Merkel died in December 1978, having executed a will earlier which left nothing to his wife. The guardian for Celia Merkel, on June 4, 1979, filed a claim for elective share, exempt property and homestead allowance. Celia died nine days later on June 13, 1979. Despite the will that gave Celia nothing, the court held that the wife's estate was entitled to the homestead allowance and the exempt property, that such interests were in fee and by surviving the decedent by 120 hours, Celia Merkel and her estate became entitled to those benefits absolutely.

In the Matter of the Estate of Florence I. Heiser, 207 Mont. 126, 672 P.2d 1124 (1983), the facts were Florence Heiser had five children by a previous husband. She married Frank Heiser, then died intestate on September 6, 1980. Frank Heiser executed a new will September 16, 1980, leaving his entire estate to a former wife. Frank Heiser made no claim against the estate of Florence Heiser during his lifetime. On his death, his estate filed a claim against the Florence Heiser estate for homestead allowance and exempt property, the sum of which exceeded the total assets in the estate. The district court ordered that the petition of the Estate of Frank Heiser, for the homestead allowance in the Florence Heiser Estate, be granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court said: "The sole issue on appeal is whether the homestead allowance vests as a matter of law in the surviving spouse upon outliving the deceased for 120 hours, or whether a surviving spouse personally must first make a claim for the homestead allowance."

The Court said they could find no statutory, claim-filing requirement for the homestead allowance to vest, and declined to create such requirement. Notwithstanding the laws of intestate succession, the entire estate went to satisfy the homestead allowance. The homestead allowance vests without notice or claim.

In the Matter of the Estate of Bessie Eva Dunlap, 199 Mont. 488, 649 P.2d 1303, the court held that a child specifically disinherited by will was entitled to take $3,500 exempt property allowance under statute governing exemption of property for certain heirs. The Court said: "The family protection provisions of the Uniform Code were intended by the drafters to protect a surviving spouse and children from disinheritance by a decedent."

In all cases when there is a surviving spouse or children entitled to take, we are dealing with a fee interest that vests automatically 120 hours after death. Once vested, we must specifically deal with it whether any claim is made or not. It appears we cannot rely on a will or the law of intestacy to divest the fee interest. I find the language underlined in the statute quoted above confusing.

LEGISLATIVE TREATMENT

The original forms drafting committee became aware in drafting forms that the 1974 legislature had added some new provisions to the code that were contradictory and in conflict with other provisions already in the Code. Even before the Code became effective, we submitted some amendments that were readily accepted by the legislature. Since then the Montana Bar, Trust and Probate Committee, has sponsored several amendments which took out changes made by the Interim Committee and replaced the changes with provisions of the Uniform Probate Code. The Trust and Probate Committee in 1989, with Professor Ed Eck as chairman, made an extensive revision of the Montana Code and bringing our code more in line with the Uniform Probate Code. The Interim Committee - and I share the blame - did not realize that changing a single word in an integrated code could completely change the meaning of a code section and make it unworkable. An example of this is when we changed "allowance" to "disallowance" in what is now MCA §72-3-804(1). Fortunately, Professor Eck and his committee have corrected this. I understand the Montana Bar, Trust and Probate Committee, along with a representative of the Uniform Laws Commission and the Joint Editorial Board, will review the entire probate code and make its recommendations to the next legislative session.

RENUNCIATION

MCA §72-2-101 [72-2-811] provides [provided] for renunciation of succession [replaced by disclaimer]. This was something new for the Montana practitioner. There were no provisions in the prior Code pertaining to renunciation. Under the common law, Montana would permit renunciation of a devise by will. However, the common law did not permit renunciation of an intestate share. There is no valid reason for this distinction, and the Uniform Probate Code simply provided that in a proper case, the devisee under a will or the beneficiary of an intestate estate could renounce his or her share. Under this rule, renounced property passes as if the renouncing person had failed to survive the decedent, and in the case of intestate property, the heir who would be the next in line in succession would take. Often this would be the issue of the renouncing person taking by representation.

A few years after the adoption of the Uniform Probate Code, a Montana lawyer probated the will of a fairly wealthy rancher. The testator had a simple will leaving all of his estate to his surviving wife, and if she should predecease, then to his two surviving adult children. The widow wanted to make a gift of some land she was inheriting to her children as she was concerned about the size of her estate for federal estate tax purposes. Carrying out the widow's request, the attorney prepared a deed from the widow to her children and then filed a gift tax return. The Internal Revenue Service would not accept the valuation placed on the property by the parties and significantly raised the value and also the gift tax. The attorney must not have read the Uniform Probate Code nor could he have been familiar with gift taxes. If he had, he simply would have advised the widow early on to file a disclaimer with respect to the property that she wanted to gift to her children, and the property would have passed to her children without gift tax consequences or transfer taxes of any kind. Is this malpractice? It should be standard practice at the outset to advise the heirs of their right to disclaim.

It must be remembered that a disclaimer or renunciation is an option available to a beneficiary and can only be exercised by a beneficiary. The availability of the option is something frequently we consider in estate planning and will drafting. To use it in this fashion, you must notify the client in writing what the disclaimer is, when it can be used, and what the results would be with or without the disclaimer. The use of a disclaimer is a device that should be used in estate planning and will drafting much more often than many of us are prone to do. Let me illustrate. You are drafting wills for a young couple who now have very little by way of assets, but who you think have the potential for acquiring a great deal more. The common practice is to draft a simple will and tell the clients when their assets reach $600,00.00 [sic], they should come back to rewrite their wills and do some tax planning. Wouldn't it be much better to put a by-pass trust in the will with a provision that any disclaimer made by the surviving spouse, the property disclaimed would fall into the by-pass trust? The surviving spouse would have the income and the remainder would go into a credit shelter trust. IRC §2518(b)(4) specifically permits a spouse to retain the income interest and disclaim the remainder.

Even in cases where you haven't contemplated the use of a disclaimer in the will, it can still be a useful device in post mortem estate planning. For example, a disclaimer can be used to prevent an estate from "over qualifying" for the marital deduction. In other cases it can be used to increase the marital deduction.

EARLY PLANNING FOR PROBATE

Planning for a probate begins before you file the application or petition for appointment of a personal representative. You must ascertain early on if there appears to be any problem with the will or determination of heirs in an intestacy. I think in either case, it is an acceptable practice to file an informal application for probate of a will, if there is one, and for the appointment of a personal representative. If you perceive a possible problem, you would have the personal representative first publish notice to creditors, then file a petition in a formal testacy proceeding requesting the court to take whatever action appears to be appropriate. The advantage is that the probate can proceed while the court makes whatever formal adjudication it deems appropriate. MCA §72-3-304 specifically authorizes this procedure.

SELECTION OF A PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE

If you have a family that is friendly with each other, you may want to consider who should act as personal representative. I found this particularly useful when all of the family were gainfully employed and self-sufficient except a divorced daughter with two small children and who had been living for some time on gifts from her parents. The daughter would be entitled to the personal representative's fee, and in a proper case, her duties might be expanded by separate contract with approval of the court for additional payment of fees.

UPC IN CONTEXT OF FEDERAL TAX CODE

It is a fundamental principle that the operation of federal tax law is itself dependent on local law. This concept was clearly stated by the U.S. Supreme Court in Morgan v. Comr., 309 U.S. 78, 80 (1940), wherein the court stated: "State law creates legal interest and rights. The federal revenue acts designate what interests or rights, so created, shall be taxed."

With the Uniform Probate Code as the basic local law, the personal representative is required to consider the consequences of many alternative courses of action, and he must also keep in mind the interaction of the law governing estate, gift and income taxation. In addition to the tax considerations, he must always keep in mind that he is a fiduciary, and he is required to observe the standards of care applicable to trustees under the laws of the state of Montana. At the time of the adoption of the Uniform Probate Code in 1974, our trust provisions were somewhat like the Montana Probate Code prior to the Uniform Probate Code in the sense that they simply grew whenever the legislature perceived there was a problem that needed a solution. It was something of a hodgepodge of laws, but not any more. In 1989, Professor Ed Eck, as chairman of a committee, succeeded in having the legislature adopt the "Trust Code."

POTENTIAL CONFLICT IN FIDUCIARY TAX ELECTIONS

The fiduciary is required to deal fairly among beneficiaries and classes of beneficiaries and all other persons with whom he may deal. Any steps the fiduciary may take that save taxes for all beneficiaries, of course, will be welcome. Many tax options not only save taxes but shift tax burdens from one beneficiary to another or even alter the manner in which the estate is ultimately distributed. Any tax option that shifts the burden of tax must necessarily, or certainly should be, approved specifically by the parties affected.

ESTATE AS SEPARATE ENTITY

For taxable purposes, the estate is a separate taxable entity with income to be computed generally in the same fashion as for an individual, and unlike a corporation, the income is taxed only once, either to the estate or to the beneficiaries. If the gross income exceeds $600, the estate must file a fiduciary income tax return. Failure to file carries with it the same penalties as apply to an individual failing to file when required to do so. Life is much simpler if you start at the outset with a separate account to reflect income and expense of the estate. Unless a fiduciary tax return is filed, there is no conduit to carry any losses or expenses to the beneficiaries and they are lost for all purposes. The Uniform Probate Code offers many options and choices for the personal representative to take with respect to taxes. However, he must exercise caution because frequently options elected cannot be undone, and also the personal representative must determine who benefits and who hurts from the election.

FLEXIBILITY OF UPC

One of the best features of the UPC is the flexibility of the code. The attorney decides if the estate is to be probated formally or informally and proceeds accordingly. If he discovers a problem, he simply petitions the district court for a judicial determination, and once that is completed, he can continue to probate the estate informally. It is sometimes described as an "in and out" procedure. There are some things that the Code requires, other things that are specifically permitted, and a large area of circumstances that do not fit in either category. In the latter area, the attorney must use his best judgment on what is in the best interest of the estate and the heirs.

SOME TAX OPTIONS

The Internal Revenue Code §661(a) provides:

(a) DEDUCTION - In any taxable year, there shall be allowed as a deduction in computing the taxable income of an estate or trust . . ., the sum of - (1) any amount of income for such taxable year required to be distributed currently . . .; and (2) any other amounts properly paid or credited or required to be distributed for such taxable year; but such deduction shall not exceed the distributable net income of the estate or trust.

The Uniform Probate Code does not specifically authorize a partial distribution out of an estate at any time nor does it prohibit it. The Montana Code makes a backhanded reference to partial distributions. MCA §72-3-1006 requires that before any distribution is made, the state inheritance tax must be paid or arrangements made for an extension. However, sub-section (2) provides: "This section shall not prohibit such partial distributions as may become necessary in the course of administration."

If there is distributable net income in the estate, any partial distribution could very well carry the distributable net income out to the taxpayer who receives the distribution, and he in turn must report it as income on his tax return. There are times, of course, simply for tax considerations you want to make a distribution during the taxable year of the estate. Because of the compression of tax rates for estates and trusts - the 28 percent rate starts at $5,000, and the 33 percent rate starts at $13,000, it may be advantageous to distribute some of the income to a lower bracket taxpayer. Although the Uniform Probate Code does not require a court order or formal order to distribute property, I think it would be advisable to secure a court order for partial distribution to try to comply with IRC §661A that "any other amounts properly paid or credited" would be an income tax deduction to the estate. The attorney must determine what the income tax consequences are to the estate as well as the individual beneficiaries.

FEES AS DEDUCTIONS

Attorney fees and personal representative fees are deductible either against estate or income taxes. To the extent that the attorneys' fees and costs exceed distributable net income, the excess will be lost unless they are paid in the last taxable year of the estate. In the first year, the personal representative can select either a fiscal year or calendar year, whichever may best suit the purposes of the estate. With the Uniform Probate Code, the estate can be closed at any time after the period of notice to creditors has expired and the state inheritance taxes determined and paid without prior notice and without a court hearing. The ability to close on short notice can be extremely valuable for purposes of controlling when taxes will be paid and by whom.

POSSESSION OF ESTATE PROPERTY

The personal representative should take into consideration MCA §72-3-606 which provides that every "personal representative has a right to and shall take possession or control of the decedent's property except that any real property or tangible personal property may be left with or surrendered to the person presumptively entitled thereto unless or until, in the judgment of the personal representative, possession of the property by him would be necessary for purposes of administration." If the beneficiary receives the income, it should be reportable by him as income, and it should not be reportable as estate income. I have found this Code section useful for other purposes. Besides tax considerations, the options available in MCA §72-3-606 can greatly simplify the handling of some estates. I can think of nothing better than leaving an old apartment house or other real estate rentals in the hands of the ultimate beneficiary. In other words, there may be very practical reasons for not taking possession of certain property in an estate in addition to tax considerations.

FINAL TAX RETURNS FOR THE DECEDENT

The Uniform Probate Code does not require the filing of final tax returns, but our tax laws do. It is the responsibility of the personal representative to file the final income tax return for the decedent and also take into account any income that is deemed to be income in respect of a decedent.

INVENTORY AND APPRAISEMENT

MCA §72-3-607 requires that within the time required for the filing of a U.S. estate tax return (nine months), plus any extensions granted by the Internal Revenue Service, a personal representative shall prepare and file or mail an inventory which inventory shall include listing of all the property which the decedent owned and also its value. For some reason or other, probate practitioners have a habit of waiting until a document is due before they prepare it. If the inventory is not required for a period of nine months, why hurry? There are lots of reasons.

If you are representing a larger estate that clearly is going to be subject to federal estate tax or be in a bracket where a federal estate tax return is required to be filed, then you should, immediately after appointment, make a general survey of what all of the assets are in the estate and how the values relate to each other. You may find some of decedent's ranch holdings in his individual name, some as joint tenants with the right of survivorship, some held in a partnership, and some may be held in one or more corporate entities. When you have a good idea of what the total estate consists of, then hire a qualified appraiser who should not be permitted to operate blindly. The appraiser should know, and you should know, what the tax consequences are that flow from the appraisal of each of the various assets in the estate.

CORPORATE STOCK REDEMPTION

IRC §303 permits a closely-held corporation to redeem shares of its stock held by the estate without dividend consequences in an amount not exceeding the sum of the estate taxes, plus funeral and administration expenses. The 303 election is available if the value of the stock of the closely-held corporation included in the gross estate constitutes more than 35 percent of the gross estate reduced by debts, funeral and administration expenses and losses.

DEFERRED PAYMENT OF ESTATE TAXES

IRC §6166 permits an executor to pay estate tax on specified business interests in two or more (but not exceeding ten) equal installments, the first of which is due five years after the normal due date. The 6166 election is available if the interest in the closely-held business exceeds 35 percent of the adjusted gross estate. It results in deferral of the estate tax attributable to the closely-held business with interest only for the first five years. The interest rate is 4 percent on the first $1,000,000 of value (approximately $190,000 of tax considering the $600,000 exemption) and the current federal deficiency rate on the balance. The interest can be claimed as an estate tax deduction (at a more favorable rate than for income taxes), but the deduction cannot be claimed until the interest payment is made, resulting in periodic amendments to the entire return.

SPECIAL USE ELECTION

In dealing with a ranch estate, we must always take into consideration whether IRC §2032(A) is available and if the benefits provided by that section should be elected. As a threshold requirement, (a) 50 percent or more of the adjusted value of the gross estate consists of the adjusted value of real or personal property which _; and (b) 25 percent or more of the adjusted value of the gross estate consists of the adjusted value of real property which meets the requirements of subparagraphs (A)(ii) and (C). It is said by many that IRC §2032(A) is the most complicated section of the entire Federal Tax Code. Many Montana lawyers have paid substantial malpractice claims for ineffective election and, in some cases, for failure to elect. It is dangerous to elect and dangerous not to elect. If you have a farm or ranch in your probate, you must take the statute into consideration and take action one way or the other. The Code has many tax implications that are not readily apparent. Good luck.

VALUATION OF ASSETS

Some practitioners, when they find that there is no federal estate tax because of the marital deduction or other reasons, are inclined to inflate the value of some assets in order to obtain a higher cost basis. Before you do this, I think you should take a look at IRC §6662 which imposes a rather severe penalty for over-valuation of assets for income tax purposes. Appraising is not an exact science, and there is always some leeway in fixing an evaluation. Within reasonable and non-fraudulent parameters for assets where value is not readily ascertainable, it would be beneficial to under-value assets passing to the credit shelter trust and over-value assets passing to the marital deduction trust. However, an under-valuation of assets passing into the credit shelter trust could result in assertion by the IRS that the surviving spouse had made an adjusted taxable gift and/or that some of the credit shelter assets were, in fact, included in the surviving spouse's estate.

PARTNERSHIP TAXATION-ADJUSTMENT TO BASIS

There isn't anything simple about partnership taxation, and it gets worse when you have a partnership interest in an estate. A partnership, unlike a trust or estate, is not taxed as a separate entity; it is nevertheless recognized by federal tax laws as a separate entity for certain purposes. The partners are deemed for tax purposes to own an interest in the partnership rather than an interest in the underlying assets. A partner's basis for his partnership interest is separate and distinct from the partnership's own basis in the underlying assets.

When a partner dies, his partnership interest receives a stepped-up basis, but there is no stepped-up basis for the partnership assets.

Assume for our purposes that the decedent owned a 50 percent interest in a cattle partnership where all of the animals are raised and for income tax purposes have no cost basis. If an animal is sold by the partnership for $1,000, the partnership has $1,000 of ordinary income, and the estate reports a gain of $500 on its return.

Partnership law under certain specified conditions will permit an adjustment to basis of property in the partnership. Under IRC §§734, 743, and 754, a partnership can elect to have the basis of all partnership assets adjusted when (1) there is a distribution to a partner; or (2) a partnership interest is sold or a partner dies. The election has to be made on the partnership level, and if made on or before the due date for the partnership return for the year in which the partner died, the basis of the partnership assets, as far as the partner's estate is concerned, will be their estate tax value.

What does this all mean? Let us assume all of the facts in the above cattle example, and you have now had the partnership make the necessary elections. Then on the sale of an animal for $1,000, the estate would have a cost basis of $500 and no income tax.

In some cases, the window of opportunity is a short one, and if you wait nine months to prepare the inventory, the opportunity may be gone.

SOME VESTIGES OF THE OLD PROBATE CODE REMAIN

The Uniform Probate Code is not the only probate code in Montana. When Ch. 365, L 1974, the Uniform Probate Code, was being drafted by the Legislative Council, it had the problem of determining what code sections should be repealed and what to do with other probate code sections that were not necessarily in conflict with the UPC. The code sections that were in direct conflict were repealed, and the others were allowed to remain as part of our probate code and are still there. These laws are found in MCA Chapters 10 through 13, Title 72, and are designated as "supplementary." [These provisions were repealed in large part by the 1993 revision of the Uniform Probate Code.] On any research of the UPC, you must also keep in mind that one or more "supplementary" laws may also apply.

WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

An estate can neither be planned nor administered adequately by reference to the Uniform Probate Code alone. As comprehensive and flexible as it is, the Code cannot be applied in isolation.

With this flexibility comes the responsibility to anticipate all of the non-Code consequences of any decision made.

The practice of law under these circumstances brings a number of demands, few of them easily reconcilable. An understanding of the law, no matter how thorough, is not enough. An understanding of how to martial all of that knowledge efficiently toward the solution of a client's problems is becoming increasingly critical. In the future, a few will have mastered the ability to produce the right document or solution the first time with the fewest resources, and do so in a timely and cost-efficient fashion. They will be called survivors.

The essence of a skilled lawyer is the ability to apply a comprehensive legal knowledge and the lawyer's intellectual capital to the timely and correct resolution of a client's matters. This has remained an inexact process for a number of reasons.

For one, assuming this intellectual capital exists within an office, its consistent application has been difficult. Knowledge levels among members of a firm tend to vary widely, and even the most knowledgeable are subject to such pressures of time and billing that a consistent, methodical examination of every possibility is likely more aspiration than fact.

Once this knowledge exists, it still must be translated into documents or other work product. Simple in concept, this process alone consumes much of an office's most expensive resources, people. Lawyers commonly seem to take a perverse pride in the number of staff they can keep occupied. It is true that the use of staff is less expensive than the use of lawyers. It is also true, however, that the use of fewer staff is less expensive than the use of many. Pride would more justifiably be placed in devising ways to produce better documents with fewer people.

Finally, knowledge possessed by any particular lawyer cannot be readily transmitted to others. In other words, a younger associate may have access to a senior lawyer to ask questions, but the more senior lawyer's work and thinking cannot be directly and immediately applied by that associate to current projects.

Imagine, then, a law office that had the ability to do the following things:

capture the knowledge of the best lawyer or lawyers in the office, and make it directly available to everyone, resulting in a uniformly high level of quality;

insure that, in the preparation of documents, only the most current language is available to a lawyer, rather than depend upon a system where the best language is used only if the lawyer happens to pick the most current form to use as a guide or was not on vacation when the latest changes were discussed; automatically convert legal decisions made by a lawyer, such as whether to use a QTIP or outright marital devise, into an essentially complete draft, and do so in under a minute.

These capabilities are now within reach for any law firm willing to take the step. Some already have.

This is now possible using the latest generation of document assembly software. No longer limited to simply filling in the blanks or requiring a lawyer to use someone else's rigidly programmed forms, the new document assembly software is now a very powerful and flexible programming tool which allows lawyers to convert their own work product into a complete practice system, and do so in a manner tailored to their own needs and style of practice.

According to one of the developers of such software, "document processing" represents the same leap beyond work processing as word processing did to the typewriter. In other words, we are probably looking at the new standard. The advantage will be to those who implement it first.

Probate Court's Jurisdiction Over Wrongful Death Action in Another District: Estate was being probated in one District Court, and personal representative's wrongful death action was being considered in another district. The probate court exceeded its jurisdiction when it assumed jurisdiction over the settlement of the wrongful death action, approved it, and ordered dismissal of the action. The Supreme Court stated that whether the proceeds of the settlement or award in the wrongful death action belonged to the estate or to the heirs was pertinent to the issue of the probate court's jurisdiction over the wrongful death action and that the probate court had jurisdiction only if the proceeds belonged to the estate. The Supreme Court did not appear to definitively decide the underlying issue, though it leaned toward the traditional rule that the proceeds belong to the heirs, are personal to them, and constitute no part of the estate. The court stated that it was for the Legislature to decide whether a District Court acting as a probate court should have some jurisdiction over a wrongful death claim filed in another District Court. Joint Tenancy in Certificate and Account Upheld by Contract and Gift Theories — Single Signature on Bank Card Sufficient: The deceased sister of the plaintiff had purchased certificates of deposit and opened a checking account, all made payable to the decedent or the defendant husband, but only the decedent signed the bank's signature cards and the defendant was never told of the certificates and the account. After the decedent was declared to have died intestate, the plaintiff brought an action to recover the amount of the account and certificates. The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for the defendant, holding that the decedent had established a valid joint tenancy, under either a gift or contract legal theory, in both the account and certificates. The decedent's signature alone on the bank card is sufficient donative intent to make a gift under the rationale of St. Bd. of Equalization v. Cole, 122 M 9, 195 P2d 989 (1943), and there was sufficient evidence to hold that a contract existed to constitute a gift to the defendant. Malek v. Patten, 208 M 237, 678 P2d 201, 41 St. Rep. 305 (1984).

Mortmain Statute Impliedly Repealed as Contrary to MUPC: The MUPC clearly requires that the intent of the testator control the passing of his property. The mortmain statute, 72-11-334 (repealed 1981), restricting charitable devises, prevents implementation of the intent expressed in a will and was impliedly repealed by the adoption of the MUPC. Case Notes

Standing of Any Interested Third Party to Petition for Appointment of Conservator: An attorney for an adverse party in a related case discovered that 97-year-old widow Kloss's estate had been significantly depleted under the management of her 71-year-old nephew and petitioned for a conservatorship for Kloss. Kloss objected on grounds that the attorney could not be considered to be interested in Kloss's welfare under 72-5-401 and thus lacked standing to petition for a conservatorship on her behalf. The District Court concluded that the attorney's representation of Kloss's adversary in a separate action did not preclude the attorney from acting in Kloss's best interests and dismissed Kloss's objection to the appointment. On appeal, Kloss contended that "any person who is interested" in 72-5-401 be interpreted as "interested person" as used in the general definitions of the Uniform Probate Code, which would limit persons who may petition for a conservatorship to those who have a property right in or claim against the estate. The Supreme Court declined Kloss's interpretation, noting the Legislature's intent to broadly define those who have standing to petition on behalf of another under the statute. Kloss failed to demonstrate that the attorney had a conflict of interest or would benefit from the appointment. Rather, the attorney was requesting that Kloss and her estate be protected from further alleged exploitation. The District Court was affirmed. In re Conservatorship of Kloss, 2005 MT 39, 326 M 117, 109 P3d 205 (2005).

No Error When Probate Estate Not Defined Between Probate and Nonprobate Assets: The District Court found that "Stukey's estate which is subject to estate tax, meaning assets of the decedent which are required to be probated, was less than the amount of $1,250,000". Stukey's daughter Evon contended that the court's finding incorrectly equated estate subject to tax with assets required to be probated, which was a flawed definition that was not supported by substantial evidence. The Supreme Court disagreed. Given that the division of property was based on Evon's final inventory and that the District Court made no attempt to define the estate or to divide the assets between probate and nonprobate, any error attributable to the court's finding was immaterial in light of the fact that Evon made no attempt to inform anyone that the amount to be divided was an amount other than $1,250,000. Grandparents Properly Included as Parties to Future Matters Involving Grandchildren's Conservatorships: The grandparents were court-appointed guardians for their three grandchildren. Following a train derailment and chlorine spill, the grandparents negotiated settlements with two railroads for personal injuries and damages to the children and then sought appointment of a guardian ad litem to manage and protect the settlements. The children's mother did not object to the settlement amounts but opposed a proposed plan for administering the trust and asked to be substituted for the grandparents as petitioner. Just prior to a hearing approving the settlements, the grandparents' guardianships were dissolved and the children began living with their mother. The settlements were approved, and the District Court appointed an attorney as conservator of the estates. The court also included the grandparents as parties to future matters involving the conservatorship of the children, including requiring the grandparents' consent to stipulations for disbursement of settlement money. The mother appealed on grounds that the grandparents' interest terminated with the dissolution of their guardianships. The Supreme Court disagreed. By definition, the grandparents remained interested persons in terms of the conservatorships, and they were properly included as parties to future matters involving the conservatorship of the children, including disbursement of settlement money. Property Right in or Claim Against Estate Required to Be Considered Interested Person: When claimant's only claim against the estate was to the extent to which they were entitled to one-half of any insurance proceeds payable to the estate and there were no insurance proceeds, the claimants had no right in or claim against the estate, were not "interested persons", and had no standing to contest fees or to argue reasonableness of the fees of the personal representative or the estate's attorneys. An annuity contract did not constitute insurance proceeds. In re Estate of Miles v. Miles, 2000 MT 41, 298 M 312, 994 P2d 1139, 57 St. Rep. 191 (2000).

Conservator as Interested Person: A conservator is an "interested person", under the definition in 72-1-103, and has the right to oppose or contest the probate of a will. In re Tennant, 220 M 78, 714 P2d 122, 43 St. Rep. 189 (1986).

Proper "Heir" to Bring Wrongful Death Action — Daughter Survived by Mother and Sister: When decedent was killed in an auto accident, her only surviving relatives of any degree of kinship mentioned in the intestate succession statute were her mother and a sister, who filed a joint petition for a declaratory judgment as to who could maintain an action for decedent's wrongful death. The District Court correctly ruled that the mother was the sole heir for purposes of bringing the action. The court applied the intestate succession statutory definition of "heirs" in effect at the time the wrongful death act was amended to allow only the "heirs and personal representatives" of the decedent to recover. "Heirs" means those who take upon decedent's death under the intestacy statute. In re Norwest Capital Management & Trust Co., 215 M 399, 697 P2d 930, 42 St. Rep. 493 (1985).

Right of Minor Children to Bring Wrongful Death Action Though Spouse Survives: The issue of a decedent who is survived by his spouse may maintain an action for damages under 27-1-513, even though the Uniform Probate Code (UPC) now defines "heirs" as those who are entitled to the property of the decedent under intestate succession and, under the intestate succession statutes, a surviving spouse is entitled to all of the estate. Prior to enactment of the UPC, minor children could bring a wrongful death action. That right was not repealed by adoption of the UPC. Section 72-1-106 does not obviate a minor's right since the UPC provisions control only if other statutory provisions conflict with probate, guardianship, and estate matters. Wrongful death is not within these subjects. Johnson v. Marias River Elec. Co-op, Inc., 211 M 518, 687 P2d 668, 41 St. Rep. 1528 (1984).

Named Devisees Entitled to Notice of Entry of Order in a Formal Probate Proceeding: Named devisees are "interested persons" under 72-1-103 and must be given notice of the initiation of formal probate proceedings under 72-3-305, which indicates that the Legislature intended named devisees to be parties to formal probate proceedings, and as such they are entitled to notice of the entry of an order in the proceeding as required by former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). In re Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Probate Court's Jurisdiction Over Wrongful Death Action in Another District: Estate was being probated in one District Court, and personal representative's wrongful death action was being considered in another district. The probate court exceeded its jurisdiction when it assumed jurisdiction over the settlement of the wrongful death action, approved it, and ordered dismissal of the action. The Supreme Court stated that whether the proceeds of the settlement or award in the wrongful death action belonged to the estate or to the heirs was pertinent to the issue of the probate court's jurisdiction over the wrongful death action and that the probate court had jurisdiction only if the proceeds belonged to the estate. The Supreme Court did not appear to definitively decide the underlying issue, though it leaned toward the traditional rule that the proceeds belong to the heirs, are personal to them, and constitute no part of the estate. The court stated that it was for the Legislature to decide whether a District Court acting as a probate court should have some jurisdiction over a wrongful death claim filed in another District Court. Statute of Limitations Barring Probate Based on Equitable Estoppel: Where the decedent had executed a will leaving most of his estate to the petitioner but had died allegedly intestate, the District Court did not err in holding that a petition for the probate of the decedent's will filed 7 years after his death was barred by the Statute of Limitations, even though the decedent's wife had made oral representations to the petitioner leading the petitioner to wrongly assume that his share of the estate had not been changed. The Statute of Limitations is clear and unambiguous, and the comments to the Uniform Probate Code from which the statute is taken also show that there are to be no exceptions for late filings of petitions based on facts constituting collateral estoppel. Neither the cases cited by the petitioner, which applied to general statutes of limitations, nor the principles of law and equity contained in 72-1-104 convince the court otherwise. Impairment of Rights Accrued Prior to Effective Date of Code — Statute of Limitations — Application: Where the District Court held that the 3-year Statute of Limitations of the Uniform Probate Code would bar an attempt, based upon equitable estoppel, to probate a will 7 years after the death of a decedent who died prior to the effective date of the Code, the Supreme Court refused to rule on the argument that the Code in fact impaired rights (accrued prior to July 1, 1975) of the petitioner seeking to probate the will, since that argument had been raised for the first time on appeal. The court noted in passing, however, that the only right that had accrued by July 1, 1975, was the right to offer the purported will for probate under the prior probate code in effect until that date. In re the Estate of Taylor, 207 M 400, 675 P2d 944, 41 St. Rep. 34 (1984).

Official Comments

Paragraph (1) defines death by reference to the Uniform Determination of Death Act (UDDA) [50-22-101]. States that have adopted the UDDA should use the first set of bracketed language. States that have not adopted the UDDA should use the second set of bracketed language.

Note that paragraph (6) is made desirable by the fact that Sections 2-104 [72-2-114] and 2-702 [72-2-712] require that survival by 120 hours must be established by clear and convincing evidence.

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1989 Amendment: Inserted (2)(c) relating to establishment of death by clear and convincing evidence; and in (2)(d) inserted "whose death is not established under subsections (2)(a) through (2)(c)" and reduced period for presumption of death from 7 years to 5 years.

1989 Editorial Comment: This change results from an amendment proposed by the Joint Editorial Board of the national Uniform Probate Code in 1987. Apparently some lawyers and judges read the section so narrowly as to permit proof of death only by evidence specified in subsections (2)(a) and (2)(b) and former subsection (2)(c). So read, proof of disappearance under circumstances tending to establish death, such as disappearance following departure by airplane or boat in an area hit shortly thereafter by hurricane-force winds, has been ruled inadmissible prior to 5 years following the disappearance.

72-1-111. Remedies for fraud — statute of limitations.

Official Comments

This is an overriding provision that provides an exception to the procedures and limitations provided in the code. The remedy of a party wronged by fraud is intended to be supplementary to other protections provided in the code and can be maintained outside the process of settlement of the estate. Thus, if a will which is known to be forgery is probated informally, and the forgery is not discovered until after the period for contest has run, the defrauded heirs still could bring a fraud action under this section. Or if a will is fraudulently concealed after the testator's death and its existence not discovered until after the basic three-year period [72-3-122] has elapsed, there still may be an action under this section. Similarly, a closing statement normally provides binding protection for the personal representative after six months from filing [72-3-1011]. However, if there is fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment in the preparation of the claim, a later suit may be brought under this section against the personal representative for damages; or restitution may be obtained from those distributees who benefit by the fraud. In any case innocent purchasers for value are protected.

Any action under this section is subject to usual rules of res judicata; thus, if a forged will has been informally probated, an heir discovers the forgery, and then there is a formal proceeding under [72-3-1001 and 72-3-1002] of which the heir is given notice, followed by an order of complete settlement of the estate, the heir could not bring a subsequent action under [72-1-111] but would be bound by the litigation in which the issue could have been raised.

The usual rules for securing relief for fraud on a court would govern, however.

The final limitation in this section is designed to protect innocent distributees after a reasonable period of time. There is no limit (other than the two years from discovery of the fraud) against the wrongdoer. But there ought to be some limit after which innocent persons who have built up expectations in good faith cannot be deprived of the property by a restitution action.

The time of "discovery" of a fraud is a fact question to be determined in the individual case. In some situations persons may not actually know that a fraud has been perpetrated but have such strong suspicion and evidence that a court may conclude there has been a discovery of the fraud at that stage. On the other hand there is no duty to exercise reasonable care to discover fraud; the burden should not be on the heirs and devisees to check on the honesty of the other interested persons or the fiduciary.

Analysis for Jurisdiction of District Court Over Tribal Member and Tribal Property: The correct analysis in both regulatory and adjudicatory actions involving tribal members or lands is whether the exercise of jurisdiction by a state court or regulatory body is preempted by federal law or, if not, whether it infringes on tribal self-government. If either element is met, a state may not assume civil jurisdiction or take regulatory action over Indian people or their territories within the boundaries of their reservations. No Subject Matter Jurisdiction for District Court in Probate for Tribal Member — Jurisdiction Presumptively With Tribal Court — Proceedings Before District Court Void: The District Court erred when it assumed subject matter jurisdiction over the probate of an enrolled Blackfeet Tribal member's estate when all of the decedent's estate property was located within the exterior boundaries of the Blackfeet Reservation. The Supreme Court overruled Iron Bear and held that civil jurisdiction over non-Indians and Indians on reservation lands presumptively lies in the tribal court. Absent express congressional limitation, the tribe maintained sovereign power and exclusive jurisdiction over the probate of the decedent. A state court has an independent obligation to determine whether it has jurisdiction in a case involving an Indian person and Indian Country. The court declared void the 7 years of proceedings before the District Court with reference to the decedent's estate. No Requirement That Decedent's Montana Property Have Significant Connection to Montana — Venue in Montana County Proper: Strange died in Arizona and never resided in Montana but had periodically visited his son in Billings and had left a small amount of property of little value with the son. The son also managed a small investment account in Strange's name with a company in Massachusetts. When Strange died, the son applied for informal probate and for appointment as personal representative in Montana, having been named as a corepresentative with his brother. Strange's wife moved to dismiss the application, arguing that the District Court lacked both venue and jurisdiction. The court concluded that it had jurisdiction over the son, but that venue in Montana was not proper because Strange's Montana assets did not establish a significant connection to Montana, so the motion to dismiss the application was granted. The son appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. There is no "single forum" requirement under the Uniform Probate Code (UPC). Rather, the UPC allows for an initial filing in Montana if a decedent owned property here, followed by ancillary probate proceedings in other jurisdictions when necessary. The probate venue statutes do not require that a decedent have a certain type or amount of property in Montana, but rather provide that venue is proper in any county where the decedent had assets. Regardless of whether Strange's property was de minimis, the District Court should have concluded that venue was proper in Yellowstone County because there was no evidence that Strange had property elsewhere in Montana, so dismissal of the son's application on venue grounds was reversible error. In re Estate of Strange, 2008 MT 158, 343 M 296, 184 P3d 1029 (2008).

Land Below High-Water Mark of Flathead Lake Tribal Property Not Subject to Distribution by Estate: When she died, Hobbs owned property on the south shore of Flathead Lake. Her will designated that three nieces divide one parcel of about 1 acre above the high-water mark and that a fourth niece and her husband, the Conrads, receive an adjacent 1.9-acre parcel from the high-water mark inland. A survey established the boundary between the parcels, but did not include any land below the high-water mark to the meander line of the lake. The District Court approved the survey, distributed the property, and closed the estate. The parties later became involved in a dispute over zoning and building regulations. The personal representative petitioned to reopen the estate for the purpose of filing a corrected survey and to distribute the portion of land lying below the high-water mark to the meander line, thereby increasing the acreage of both lots. The personal representative presented exhibits and affidavits verifying that Hobbs had paid taxes on the land out to the meander line. The Conrads objected on grounds that Hobbs's will specifically left land above the high-water mark and that because the estate did not own the land below the high-water mark, it could not be distributed to anyone. Nevertheless, the District Court approved the corrected survey and distributed the land below the high-water mark to the meander line between the heirs. The Supreme Court noted that the bed and banks of Flathead Lake within Indian reservation boundaries are held by the United States in trust for the tribes, and that any private title to Flathead Lake shore property extends only to the high-water mark. The District Court erroneously distributed the land below the high-water mark to the meander line, because the court did not have jurisdiction to distribute the tribal trust property. The estate could not distribute property that it did not own. In re Estate of Hobbs, 2002 MT 85, 309 M 308, 46 P3d 594 (2002), following Mont. Power Co. v. No In Rem Jurisdiction Over Trust Property Located Out of State: The deceased resided in Montana for several years before her death, and her will was placed in probate in Montana. She established a trust in Nevada when she was a resident of that state. The administrator of the will petitioned the Montana court for an order to have the proceeds of the Nevada trust transferred to Montana for distribution under Montana's probate proceedings. Probate Court's Jurisdiction Over Wrongful Death Action in Another District: Estate was being probated in one District Court, and personal representative's wrongful death action was being considered in another district. The probate court exceeded its jurisdiction when it assumed jurisdiction over the settlement of the wrongful death action, approved it, and ordered dismissal of the action. The Supreme Court stated that whether the proceeds of the settlement or award in the wrongful death action belonged to the estate or to the heirs was pertinent to the issue of the probate court's jurisdiction over the wrongful death action and that the probate court had jurisdiction only if the proceeds belonged to the estate. The Supreme Court did not appear to definitively decide the underlying issue, though it leaned toward the traditional rule that the proceeds belong to the heirs, are personal to them, and constitute no part of the estate. The court stated that it was for the Legislature to decide whether a District Court acting as a probate court should have some jurisdiction over a wrongful death claim filed in another District Court. District Court Assuming Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Estate When Tribal Council Unequivocally Declined to Assert Subject Matter Jurisdiction — No Error: A court may take judicial notice of records of any court of this state or of any court of record of the United States or any court of record of any state of the United States. A tribal court order, though not expressly listed in the rule, is a record analogous to those listed in Rule 202(b)(6), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), and is thus law of which the Supreme Court may take judicial notice. In re Estate of Gopher, 2013 MT 264, 372 Mont. 9, 310 P.3d 521.

Analysis for Jurisdiction of District Court Over Tribal Member and Tribal Property: The correct analysis in both regulatory and adjudicatory actions involving tribal members or lands is whether the exercise of jurisdiction by a state court or regulatory body is preempted by federal law or, if not, whether it infringes on tribal self-government. If either element is met, a state may not assume civil jurisdiction or take regulatory action over Indian people or their territories within the boundaries of their reservations. In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121, overruling Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 Mont. 335, 512 P.2d 1292 (1973), in its entirety and In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 Mont. 399, 956 P.2d 1, in part and overruling numerous cases to the extent they followed the principles of Iron Bear or Skillen.

No Subject Matter Jurisdiction for District Court in Probate for Tribal Member — Jurisdiction Presumptively With Tribal Court — Proceedings Before District Court Void: The District Court erred when it assumed subject matter jurisdiction over the probate of an enrolled Blackfeet Tribal member's estate when all of the decedent's estate property was located within the exterior boundaries of the Blackfeet Reservation. The Supreme Court overruled Iron Bear and held that civil jurisdiction over non-Indians and Indians on reservation lands presumptively lies in the tribal court. Absent express congressional limitation, the tribe maintained sovereign power and exclusive jurisdiction over the probate of the decedent. A state court has an independent obligation to determine whether it has jurisdiction in a case involving an Indian person and Indian Country. The court declared void the 7 years of proceedings before the District Court with reference to the decedent's estate. In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121, overruling Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 Mont. 335, 512 P.2d 1292 (1973), in its entirety and In re Marriage of Skillen, 1998 MT 43, 287 Mont. 399, 956 P.2d 1, in part and overruling numerous cases to the extent they followed the principles of Iron Bear or Skillen.

District Court Sitting in Probate — Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Trust Code Issue: Two daughters sought to have the wife, Audrey, removed as trustee of their father's estate because of alleged mismanagement of the family trust. Before that action was addressed, Audrey petitioned the District Court under the closed probate proceedings to have herself removed as trustee and requested appointment of a corporate trustee successor. The two sisters moved to dismiss the petition on grounds that the court lacked subject matter jurisdiction. Without formally ruling on the motion to dismiss, the court concluded that Audrey's motion was properly filed under the original probate and proceeded to rule on other matters, including a motion for substitution of the judge. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because Audrey was not attempting to reopen the probate proceedings or to relitigate any probate matter, Audrey's petition was a trust proceeding rather than a proceeding over the closed probate, and as such the District Court did not have subject matter jurisdiction to entertain Audrey's petition. The daughters' motion to dismiss should have been granted because a District Court sitting in probate has no jurisdiction over testamentary trusts that arise after probate is closed, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. No Standing of One Parent to Assert Due Process Rights of Another Parent — No Eradication of Court Jurisdiction Based on Lack of Notice to Purported Fathers: A mother asserted that guardianship proceedings regarding her children were invalid because the purported fathers, whose identities or whereabouts were unknown, were not notified, in violation of the fathers' due process rights. The Supreme Court disagreed. Regardless of whether the notice statute was fully complied with, the mother's rights were not compromised, nor was she injured by the statutory violation; thus, the mother had no standing to assert a violation of the purported fathers' due process rights. Further, the District Court had statutory subject matter jurisdiction over the guardianship proceedings, and any failure of the court to comply with the notice requirements would have resulted in lack of personal jurisdiction over the fathers, but not eradication of the court's jurisdiction over the subject matter. In re B.F. & A.W., 2004 MT 61, 320 M 261, 87 P3d 427 (2004).

Lack of Probate Court Jurisdiction in Deciding Attorney Fee Related to Tort Claim: A probate attorney requested that the District Court stay proceedings on a claim that the attorney had wrongfully converted estate property until the probate court finally determined applicable attorney fees. The probate court had jurisdiction over and decided the amount of the attorney fees for probate of the estate but had no jurisdiction to decide the attorney fee related to the tort claim. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to delay trial of the conversion claim until the probate court determined the amount of the attorney fee. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

No In Rem Jurisdiction Over Trust Property Located Out of State: The deceased resided in Montana for several years before her death, and her will was placed in probate in Montana. She established a trust in Nevada when she was a resident of that state. The administrator of the will petitioned the Montana court for an order to have the proceeds of the Nevada trust transferred to Montana for distribution under Montana's probate proceedings. The Supreme Court ruled that the fact that the deceased lived in Montana was not a sufficient affiliation with the property upon which to base in rem jurisdiction. In re Estate of Ducey, 241 M 419, 787 P2d 749, 47 St. Rep. 232 (1990).

State Probate Jurisdiction of Federal Claim — Homestead Exemption — Priority of Liens: Creditor obtained a default judgment in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York against an Alaska resident and attempted to execute on property in Montana that had subsequently come under Montana's exclusive probate jurisdiction. While the federal court retained jurisdiction over claims impacting the estate, the court could not seize and control property in the possession of the state probate court. It was within the jurisdiction of the state court to determine that the real property was subject to family protection allowances and exempt from execution. Although the lien was attached prior to debtor's death, the lien was extinguished upon the exercise of the family protection allowances, and the homestead allowance was exempt from and had priority over all other claims against the estate. In re Estate of Wilhelm, 233 M 255, 760 P2d 718, 45 St. Rep. 1468 (1988).

Probate Court Jurisdiction — Settlement of Survival and Wrongful Death Actions in Same District: The probate court in the Eleventh Judicial District had jurisdiction to settle both a survival and wrongful death action filed there by the mother, who was personal representative, despite the fact that a separate wrongful death action was filed in the Thirteenth Judicial District by the father, who was never appointed personal representative. The wrongful death settlement was inextricably linked to the survival action, and jurisdiction of the estate was in the Eleventh Judicial District. In re Estate of Farnum, 224 M 304, 730 P2d 391, 43 St. Rep. 2205 (1986).

Misrepresentation of Value of Estate — Estoppel Applicable to Prevent Advantage From Misrepresentation: A conservator knew, but failed to mention, that an estate included annuities and jointly held property that was not included in the final estate inventory. Other parties, to their detriment, relied on the inventory as an accurate representation of the value of the estate. The District Court properly held that it would not be equitable for the conservator to take advantage of the misrepresentation of the value of the estate by reducing the distribution to the other parties. The Supreme Court held that the elements of equitable estoppel were met, and the District Court was affirmed. In re Estate of Stukey, 2004 MT 279, 323 M 241, 100 P3d 114 (2004). Conversion of Probate Proceeding From Informal to Formal Proceeding and Effect of Failure to Give Proper Notices: When the personal representative of an estate in informal proceedings petitioned for judicial approval of his final account and for the settlement and distribution of the estate, the proceeding was converted into a formal proceeding for those purposes. The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to formal proceedings. The bank, which was a creditor of the estate and filed a claim against the estate, was entitled to notice of the hearing on the petition and entitled to an opportunity to appear and contest. Because the notice was not given, the court's decree was void and reversed as to the bank. The bank was also entitled to notice of the entry of the formal estate decree, and because that notice was not given, the 30-day time period for the bank to appeal did not run and the bank's appeal, filed after that period, was timely. In re Estate of Spencer, 2002 MT 304, 313 M 40, 59 P3d 1160 (2002).

No Estate Inventory and Inventory Discovery Required Prior to Grant of Statutory Homestead, Exempt Property, and Family Allowances to Surviving Spouse: No estate inventory or scheduling order was filed prior to the District Court award of a homestead allowance, an exempt property allowance, and a family allowance to the surviving spouse. The decedent's son and sister contested the award, relying on former Rule 16(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), for the proposition that they were entitled to an inventory and related discovery before the allowances were granted. The Supreme Court found that application of the rule to probate proceedings would be administratively inefficient and contrary to the purposes of the rule. The District Court properly found that the surviving spouse was entitled to the allowances as a matter of law, and because these were legal issues, it was within the court's discretion to decide them prior to a scheduling order or estate inventory. Question Whether Holographic Document Intended as Codicil or List of Property to Be Dispensed — Testamentary Intent Question of Fact to Be Determined by Judge or Jury — Summary Judgment Improper: Johnson executed a formal will and also executed and signed a holographic document consisting of a handwritten list of possessions and names. The District Court concluded that the holographic document was a personal property list made pursuant to 72-2-533, rather than a codicil, and applied 72-2-523 in ordering distribution of the property because there was no intent by Johnson that the holographic document should constitute the complete will. The Supreme Court held that the District Court should have applied 72-2-522, which deals with holographic wills, rather than 72-2-523. The three requirements for a valid holographic will are: (1) individuals must be at least 18 years old and of sound mind; (2) the material provisions of the will must be in the handwriting of the testator and signed by the testator; and (3) the individual must have testamentary intent that the document will dispose of the individual's property after death. Here, the first two elements were met, but a question of fact remained concerning Johnson's intent, precluding summary judgment. The case was remanded to give the parties an opportunity to present evidence concerning Johnson's intent so that the trier of fact could decide the issue under the correct standard. Appellate Review — Substantial Evidence to Support District Court's Findings of Fact: On appeal, the plaintiff asserted that conflicting evidence presented at trial undermined the District Court's findings. The Supreme Court disagreed and held that neither the factfinder's determination of witness credibility nor the weight assigned by the factfinder to the testimony of each witness would be disturbed on appeal. Substantial evidence supported the District Court's findings and the Supreme Court upheld the findings. Shephard v. Widhalm, 2012 MT 276, 367 Mont. 166, 290 P.3d 712.

Late Appeal — New Grounds for Argument Below — Failure to Argue on Appeal: The merits of appellants' arguments in support of removal of personal representative of an estate could not be considered on appeal from denial of final order denying motion to remove when: (1) since the order was final and appealable, it had to be appealed within 30 days of notice of its entry; (2) appeal was filed 34 days after notice of entry of the order; and (3) though appellants had, within the 30 days prior to their notice of appeal, filed a second petition for removal that raised a new ground for removal, appellants did not argue that failure to raise the ground earlier was excusable because of inadvertence, excusable neglect, or newly discovered evidence, and the lower court found appellants had earlier been in possession of all the facts. The order was conclusive as to all matters that could have been raised under the issues raised in the original petition for removal. Appointment of Mother Married to Manager of Ranch That Might Be Sued for Her Children's Injuries — No Conflict of Interest: The mother's four children were injured in a one-vehicle accident while an employee of the ranch that her husband managed was, at the mother's request, driving the children home to the ranch after school. The parties agreed that the employee was acting in the course and scope of his employment, that the ranch owned the pickup, that the ranch had about $800,000 of available insurance coverage, that the damages could exceed the limits of the insurance, and that a suit against the ranch was a possibility. The mother's ex-husband petitioned for his appointment as the children's guardian ad litem and conservator. The mother cross-petitioned that she be appointed. The District Court did not err in appointing the mother and deciding that she did not suffer from a conflict of interest that precluded her from serving as guardian ad litem and conservator of the children. The District Court found that she "would fulfill her fiduciary duties to her children tenaciously", that she would consider their emotional needs and future financial security, and that the evidence showed that she was an extremely involved and protective mother who gave much time, love, and attention to the children. CHAPTER 2
UPC — INTESTACY, WILLS, AND DONATIVE TRANSFERS

Chapter Official Comments

PREFATORY NOTE

The Uniform Probate Code was promulgated in 1969. In 1990, Article II of the Code underwent significant revision. The 1990 revisions are the culmination of a systematic study of the Code conducted by the Joint Editorial Board for the Uniform Probate Code (JEB-UPC) and a special Drafting Committee to Revise Article II. The 1990 revisions concentrate on Article II, which is the article that covers the substantive law of intestate succession; spouse's elective share; omitted spouse and children; probate exemptions and allowances; execution and revocation of wills; will contracts; rules of construction; disclaimers; the effect of homicide and divorce on succession rights; and the rule against perpetuities and honor trusts.

In the twenty or so years between the original promulgation of the Code and the 1990 revisions, several developments occurred that prompted the systematic round of review. Three themes were sounded: (1) the decline of formalism in favor of intent-serving policies; (2) the recognition that will substitutes and other inter-vivos transfers have so proliferated that they now constitute a major, if not the major, form of wealth transmission; (3) the advent of the multiple-marriage society, resulting in a significant fraction of the population being married more than once and having stepchildren and children by previous marriages and in the acceptance of a partnership or marital-sharing theory of marriage.

The 1990 revisions respond to these themes. The multiple-marriage society and the partnership/marital-sharing theory are reflected in the revised elective-share provisions of Part 2. As the General Comment to Part 2 explains, the revised elective share grants the surviving spouse a right of election that implements the partnership/marital-sharing theory by adjusting the elective share to the length of the marriage.

The children-of-previous-marriages and stepchildren phenomena are reflected most prominently in the revised rules on the spouse's share in intestacy.

The proliferation of will substitutes and other inter-vivos transfers is recognized, mainly, in measures tending to bring the law of probate and nonprobate transfers into greater unison. One aspect of this tendency is reflected in the restructuring of the rules of construction. Rules of construction are rules that supply presumptive meaning to dispositive and similar provisions of governing instruments. Part 6 of the pre-1990 Code contained several rules of construction that applied only to wills. Some of those rules of construction appropriately applied only to wills; provisions relating to lapse, testamentary exercise of a power of appointment, and ademption of a devise by satisfaction exemplify such rules of construction. Other rules of construction, however, properly apply to all governing instruments, not just wills; the provision relating to inclusion of adopted persons in class gift language exemplifies this type of rule of construction. The 1990 revisions divide pre-1990 Part 6 into two parts — Part 6, containing rules of construction for wills only; and Part 7, containing rules of construction for wills and other governing instruments. A few new rules of construction are also added.

In addition to separating the rules of construction into two parts, and adding new rules of construction, the revocation-upon-divorce provision (Section 2-804 [72-2-814]) is substantially revised so that divorce not only revokes devises, but also nonprobate beneficiary designations, in favor of the former spouse. Another feature of the 1990 revisions is a new section (Section 2-503) [72-2-523] that brings the execution formalities for wills more into line with those for nonprobate transfers.

The 1990 Article II revisions also respond to other modern trends. During the period from 1969 to 1990, many developments occurred in the case law and statutory law. Also, many specific topics in probate, estate, and future-interests law were examined in the scholarly literature. The influence of many of these developments is seen in the 1990 revisions of Article II.

Part 1
Intestate Succession

Part Official Comments

GENERAL COMMENT

The pre-1990 Code's basic pattern of intestate succession, contained in Part 1, was designed to provide suitable rules for the person of modest means who relies on the estate plan provided by law. The 1990 revisions are intended to further that purpose, by fine tuning the various sections and bringing them into line with developing public policy.

The principal features of the 1990 revisions are:

1. So-called negative wills are authorized, under which the decedent who dies intestate, in whole or in part, can by will disinherit a particular heir.

2. A surviving spouse receives the whole of the intestate estate, if the decedent left no surviving descendants and no parents or if the decedent's surviving descendants are also descendants of the surviving spouse and the surviving spouse has no descendants who are not descendants of the decedent. The surviving spouse receives the first $200,000 plus three-fourths of the balance if the decedent left no surviving descendants but a surviving parent. The surviving spouse receives the first $150,000 plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate, if the decedent's surviving descendants are also descendants of the surviving spouse but the surviving spouse has one or more other descendants. The surviving spouse receives the first $100,000 plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate, if the decedent has one or more surviving descendants who are not descendants of the surviving spouse.

3. A system of representation called per capita at each generation is adopted as a means of more faithfully carrying out the underlying premise of the pre-1990 UPC system of representation. Under the per-capita-at-each-generation system, all grandchildren (whose parent has predeceased the intestate) receive equal shares.

4. Although only a modest revision of the section dealing with the status of adopted children and children born of unmarried parents is made at this time, the question is under continuing review and further revisions may be presented in the future.

5. The section on advancements is revised so that it applies to partially intestate estates as well as to wholly intestate estates.

Part Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Application of Half-Blood Statute: Upon appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that the District Court properly interpreted provisions of Title 72, ch. 2, part 2, (now part) in determining that half-aunts and half-uncles are entitled to equal one-third shares of the intestate residue by per capita and not by right of representation. Dahood v. Frankovich, 229 M 287, 746 P2d 115, 44 St. Rep. 1972 (1987).

Allocation of Award for Wrongful Death of Child to One Parent Only: While generally both parents are entitled to share any award for the wrongful death of a child, where evidence demonstrated that only the mother could reasonably be expected to suffer damages, including loss of consortium, mental anguish, and loss of future support, it was not error for the District Court to allocate all proceeds of the wrongful death action to the mother. In re Estate of Farnum, 224 M 304, 730 P2d 391, 43 St. Rep. 2205 (1986).

One-Action Rule Not Applicable to Death of Minor — Action for Wrongful Death of Child Settled by Personal Representative — Allocation of Proceeds: The one-action rule applied to wrongful death of an adult under 27-1-513, providing that only one action may be brought by the personal representative, does not apply to the wrongful death of a child in 27-1-512, under which either parent may bring an action. However, where the mother was properly appointed personal representative, it was not error for the probate court to authorize her to settle both the wrongful death action and the survival action, which could only be settled by the personal representative, and to approve allocation of the proceeds of the settlement between the two actions. In re Estate of Farnum, 224 M 304, 730 P2d 391, 43 St. Rep. 2205 (1986).

Proper "Heir" to Bring Wrongful Death Action — Daughter Survived by Mother and Sister: When decedent was killed in an auto accident, her only surviving relatives of any degree of kinship mentioned in the intestate succession statute were her mother and a sister, who filed a joint petition for a declaratory judgment as to who could maintain an action for decedent's wrongful death. The District Court correctly ruled that the mother was the sole heir for purposes of bringing the action. The court applied the intestate succession statutory definition of "heirs" in effect at the time the wrongful death act was amended to allow only the "heirs and personal representatives" of the decedent to recover. "Heirs" means those who take upon decedent's death under the intestacy statute. In re Norwest Capital Management & Trust Co., 215 M 399, 697 P2d 930, 42 St. Rep. 493 (1985).

District Court Jurisdiction Over Probate of and Claim and Delivery Action by Estate of Enrolled Tribal Indian: Following the death of an enrolled member of an Indian tribe, the decedent's wife petitioned the District Court to probate her deceased husband's estate. A road grader which was property of the estate was unlawfully sold by the deceased's wife to her brother. The District Court erred in holding that it did not have jurisdiction over the claim and delivery action instituted on behalf of the estate to recover the road grader or its value. The fact that there is no federal treaty or statute preempting the jurisdiction of the District Court and the fact that the tribal court has not had and is not exercising jurisdiction over the case properly resulted in the District Court's taking jurisdiction of the probate of the estate. Because the action for claim and delivery is the enforcement process to recover property within the jurisdiction of the probate court, the District Court should have exercised subject matter jurisdiction over the claim and delivery action as well. Estate of Standing Bear v. Belcourt, 193 M 174, 631 P2d 285, 38 St. Rep. 1064 (1981), overruled in part in In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121.

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Unsuccessful Proponents of Will: Under 72-10-111 (now repealed) unsuccessful proponents of a will were allowed their costs as a charge against the estate involved in the discretion of the Court. (See 72-12-206, allowing proponent's costs in a contest after admission of the will to probate.) In re Mickich's Estate, 114 M 258, 136 P2d 223 (1943), overruled on another point, Williams v. Swords, 129 M 165, 284 P2d 674 (1955).

Attorneys' Fees:

Attorneys' fees were not allowable out of the assets of the decedent's estate to the unsuccessful proponents of a will to probate. In re Mickich's Estate, 114 M 258, 136 P2d 223 (1943), overruled on another point, Williams v. Swords, 129 M 165, 284 P2d 674 (1955).

Attorneys' fees incurred by a devisee under a will to defend a contest thereof were not allowable as costs and disbursements out of the assets of the estate within the purview of 25-10-301 or under 72-10-111 (now repealed) and 72-12-206. In re Baxter's Estate, 94 M 257, 22 P2d 182 (1933), explained in In re Mickich's Estate, 114 M 258, 136 P2d 223 (1943).

Under the rule that reasonable attorneys' fees are proper charges against an estate as costs where a will contest is initiated and defended in good faith, and under authority lodged in it in that behalf by 72-10-111 (now repealed), the Supreme Court could, in a proper case, fix the amounts the attorneys, for such sides were entitled to for their services on appeal. to be paid out of the assets of the estate. In re Bielenberg's Estate, 86 M 521, 284 P 546 (1930), explained in In re Baxter's Estate, 94 M 257, 22 P2d 182 (1933), and In re Mickich's Estate, 114 M 258, 136 P2d 223 (1943).

Interested Person: Section 72-10-105 (now repealed) in substance and effect disqualified a judge when he was interested in the estate or had served as attorney for an interested party. It had nothing to do with disqualification for imputed bias or prejudice. State ex rel. O'Sullivan v. District Court, 127 M 32, 256 P2d 1076 (1953).

Strict Compliance:

The provisions of 72-10-113 (now repealed) were mandatory and jurisdictional. State ex rel. Reid v. District Court, 126 M 489, 255 P2d 693 (1953).

The notice of appeal, being jurisdictional, must be filed and served within the time prescribed, and the Courts cannot lawfully extend the time nor excuse a failure to comply with the statute. Where, as here, an application for a new trial is not prerequisite to review by appeal, the filing of a motion for a new trial did not have the effect of extending the statutory period prescribed for the giving of notice of appeal. Neither was such time extended by a motion for relief from the judgment on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. State ex rel. Reid v. District Court, 126 M 489, 255 P2d 693 (1953).

Time Required No Reason for Issuance of Writ: Since under 72-10-113 (now repealed) an appeal from a judgment in a will contest was required to be taken within 60 days after its entry, contention of petitioner for a Writ of Supervisory Control to review action of Probate Court in rejecting a special finding of the jury, that appeal would not afford adequate relief because of the time required to take it, was held not meritorious. State ex rel. Furshong v. District Court, 105 M 37, 69 P2d 119 (1937), distinguished in State ex rel. Nelson v. District Court, 107 M 167, 81 P2d 699 (1938).

Time for Taking Appeal: In a proceeding to set aside a testamentary trust brought under 72-12-101 (now repealed), an appeal from an order or decree made therein was required to be taken within 60 days after its making under 72-10-113 (now repealed). In re Roberts' Estate, 102 M 240, 58 P2d 495 (1936), overruled on another point, Hardy v. Hardy, 133 M 536, 326 P2d 692 (1958).

Determination of Heirship: When it appeared that in a proceeding to determine heirship the appeal of unsuccessful claimants was prosecuted in good faith, the District Court (as well as the Supreme Court on appeal) could in its discretion, under 72-10-111 (now repealed), order all costs including reasonable attorneys' fees to be paid from the corpus of the estate; counsel for the executor of the estate was entitled to additional compensation for increased labor because of the appeal. In re Hauge's Estate, 92 M 36, 9 P2d 1065 (1932), explained in In re Baxter's Estate, 94 M 257, 22 P2d 182 (1933), and In re Mickich's Estate, 114 M 258, 136 P2d 223 (1943).

Personal Liability of Administrator:

Where the Supreme Court in the disposition of an appeal from an order settling an administrator's account remanded the cause with directions to require that officer to file a further account and orders, as it could do under 72-10-111 (now repealed), that the costs incident to the appeal shall be paid by the administrator personally, the jurisdiction of the District Court was limited to the enforcement of the order, except that it could determine disputed questions of costs or on final settlement of the account allow such portions of the costs incurred as a charge against the estate as justice required. In re Jennings' Estate, 79 M 73, 254 P 1067 (1927).

Speaking generally, costs in probate proceedings were governed by 72-10-111 (now repealed). When it was sought to have costs taxed against an administrator personally, the controlling inquiry was whether he acted in good faith; if so, justice required that they be paid out of the funds of the estate. In re Williams' Estate, 55 M 63, 173 P 790, 1 ALR 1639 (1918).

Citation Served as a Summons: The notice required by section 91-4701, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), to be served upon a person sought to be placed under guardianship as an incompetent must be served as a citation, which in turn must be served as a summons; therefore, since a summons cannot be served by a party to the proceeding, service made by petitioner for letters of guardianship was void. State ex rel. Kelly v. District Court, 73 M 84, 235 P 751 (1925).

Order to Show Cause: Where the Clerk enters at length in the minute book an order to show cause why real estate should not be sold, though the order purports to have been signed by the judge, such entry was sufficient evidence of the fact that the order was duly made, as the signature may be treated as surplusage; and there is no requirement that the Clerk shall recite that the order was made. Plains Land & Improvement Co. v. Lynch, 38 M 271, 99 P 847 (1909).

Time of Disqualification: The provision of 72-10-106 (now repealed) declared that the judge, whenever any of the grounds of disqualification were made to appear of record, was required to call in another judge, who from time to time presided in the place of the disqualified judge, and implied that any of the disqualifications enumerated could be made to appear at any time. State ex rel. Nissler v. Donlan, 32 M 256, 80 P 244 (1905).

72-2-111. Intestate estate.

Official Comments

Purpose of Revision. The amendments to subsection (a) [72-2-111(1)] are stylistic, not substantive.

New subsection (b) [72-2-111(2)] authorizes the decedent, by will, to exclude or limit the right of an individual or class to share in the decedent's intestate estate, in effect disinheriting that individual or class. By specifically authorizing so-called negative wills, subsection (b) [72-2-111(2)] reverses the usually accepted common-law rule, which defeats a testator's intent for no sufficient reason. See Note, "The Intestate Claims of Heirs Excluded by Will: Should 'Negative Wills' Be Enforced?," 52 U. Chi. L. Rev. 177 (1985).

Whether or not in an individual case the decedent's will has excluded or limited the right of an individual or class to take a share of the decedent's intestate estate is a question of construction. A clear case would be one in which the decedent's will expressly states that an individual is to receive none of the decedent's estate. Examples would be testamentary language such as "my brother, Hector, is not to receive any of my property" or "Brother Hector is disinherited."

Another rather clear case would be one in which the will states that an individual is to receive only a nominal devise, such as "I devise $50.00 to my brother, Hector, and no more."

An individual need not be identified by name to be excluded. Thus, if brother Hector is the decedent's only brother, Hector could be identified by a term such as "my brother." A group or class of relatives (such as "my brothers and sisters") can also be excluded under this provision.

Subsection (b) [72-2-111(2)] establishes the consequence of a disinheritance — the share of the decedent's intestate estate to which the disinherited individual or class would have succeeded passes as if that individual or class had disclaimed the intestate share. Thus, if the decedent's will provides that brother Hector is to receive $50.00 and no more, Hector is entitled to the $50.00 devise (because Hector is not treated as having predeceased the decedent for purposes of testate succession), but the portion of the decedent's intestate estate to which Hector would have succeeded passes as if Hector had disclaimed his intestate share. The consequence of a disclaimer by Hector of his intestate share is governed by Section 2-801(d)(1) [72-2-811(4)(a)], which provides that Hector's intestate share passes to Hector's descendants by representation.

Example: G died partially intestate. G is survived by brother Hector, Hector's 3 children (X, Y, and Z), and the child (V) of a deceased sister. G's will excluded Hector from sharing in G's intestate estate.

Solution: V takes half of G's intestate estate. X, Y, and Z split the other half, i.e., they take 1/6 each. Sections 2-103(3) [72-2-113(3)]; 2-106 [72-2-116]; 2-801(d)(1) [72-2-811(4)(a)]. Had Hector not been excluded by G's will, the share to which Hector would have succeeded would have been 1/2. Under Section 2-801(d)(1) [72-2-811(4)(a)], that half, not the whole of G's intestate estate, is what passes to Hector's descendants by representation as if Hector had disclaimed his intestate share.

Note that if brother Hector had actually predeceased G, or was treated as if he predeceased G by reason of not surviving G by 120 hours (see Section 2-104) [72-2-114], then no consequence flows from Hector's disinheritance: V, X, Y, and Z would each take 1/4 of G's intestate estate under Sections 2-103(3) [72-2-113(3)] and 2-106 [72-2-116].

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 in (1), after "passes", inserted "by intestate succession" and at end substituted "chapters 1 through 5, except as modified by the decedent's will" for "the following sections of this code"; inserted (2) concerning an express exclusion or limitation by will; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 2-101.

Case Notes

No Error in Applying Intestate Succession Absent Valid Devise of Real Property in Will or in Conclusion That Probate Needs to Halt After Prolonged Litigation: Ayers left property valued at about $100,000 to her daughters, but the will was not clear regarding how the daughters' ownership interests would be divided, and the daughters proceeded to litigate their respective rights to the property for 8 years. The District Court determined that Ayers mistakenly stated one daughter's ownership interest and that because the will made no valid devise of the estate's 50% ownership in the property, the estate's share should pass subject to the laws of intestate succession. The court also noted that the prolonged litigation had dissipated one-third of the estate's value in attorney fees and expenses and that probate should come to a halt before more of the estate's value was gone. One daughter appealed the distribution pursuant to intestate succession, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Ayers' misstatement of one daughter's interests in the property was not evidence of Ayers' intent to devise the property. Thus, the District Court's conclusion that the will made no valid devise of the property and that the property should pass subject to the laws of intestate succession was not erroneous. Under the circumstances, the District Court did not abuse its discretion or commit clear error when it determined that probate needed to come to a halt and that distribution of the property subject to the laws of intestate succession would help move probate along. In re Estate of Ayers, 2007 MT 155, 338 M 12, 161 P3d 833 (2007).

Intent Construed From Four Corners of Will: The testatrix, on a form will, crossed out the "and" in a bequest to two heirs and substituted the word "or". The Supreme Court held that in examining the entire will and interpreting the language in its ordinary sense, the court still could not ascertain the intent of the testatrix and therefore the property passed by intestacy. Drabant v. DeLong, 242 M 15, 788 P2d 889, 47 St. Rep. 496 (1990).

Determination of Resulting Trust on Intestate Succession: In this case it was possible for the District Court to have declared a resulting trust on behalf of defendants and/or plaintiffs. An intent to create a trust could have been implied from the circumstances surrounding the conveyances. Hubbard's statement that he wanted the property to go to his "children" could also have been regarded as sufficiently definite to include his children as a class or his children at the time of the conveyances. However, the Trial Court held instead that it was immaterial whether a trust was created because, under a resulting trust, the property would vest in the estate. The result would be the same regardless of whether a trust was found, so that it was not an abuse of discretion to pass the property by intestacy. Eckart v. Hubbard, 184 M 320, 602 P2d 988 (1979).

72-2-112. Share of spouse.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. This section is revised to give the surviving spouse a larger share than the pre-1990 UPC. If the decedent leaves no surviving descendants and no surviving parent or if the decedent does leave surviving descendants but neither the decedent nor the surviving spouse has other descendants, the surviving spouse is entitled to all of the decedent's intestate estate.

If the decedent leaves no surviving descendants but does leave a surviving parent, the decedent's surviving spouse receives the first $200,000 plus three-fourths of the balance of the intestate estate.

If the decedent leaves surviving descendants and if the surviving spouse (but not the decedent) has other descendants, and thus the decedent's descendants are unlikely to be the exclusive beneficiaries of the surviving spouse's estate, the surviving spouse receives the first $150,000 plus one-half of the balance of the intestate estate. The purpose is to assure the decedent's own descendants of a share in the decedent's intestate estate when the estate exceeds $150,000.

If the decedent has other descendants, the surviving spouse receives $100,000 plus one half of the balance. In this type of case, the decedent's descendants who are not descendants of the surviving spouse are not natural objects of the bounty of the surviving spouse.

Note that in all the cases where the surviving spouse receives a lump sum plus a fraction of the balance, the lump sums must be understood to be in addition to the probate exemptions and allowances to which the surviving spouse is entitled under Part 4. These can add up to a minimum of $43,000.

Under the pre-1990 Code, the decedent's surviving spouse received the entire intestate estate only if there were neither surviving descendants nor parents. If there were surviving descendants, the descendants took one-half of the balance of the estate in excess of $50,000 (for example, $25,000 in a $100,000 estate). If there were no surviving descendants, but there was a surviving parent or parents, the parent or parents took that one-half of the balance in excess of $50,000.

References. The theory of this section is discussed in Waggoner, "The Multiple-Marriage Society and Spousal Rights Under the Revised Uniform Probate Code," 76 Iowa L. Rev. 223, 229-35 (1991).

Empirical studies support the increase in the surviving spouse's intestate share, reflected in the revisions of this section. The studies have shown that testators in smaller estates (which intestate estates overwhelmingly tend to be) tend to devise their entire estates to their surviving spouses, even when the couple has children. 1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning the intestate share of a decedent's surviving spouse for former text that read: "The intestate share of the surviving spouse is:

(1) if there is no surviving issue or if there are surviving issue all of whom are issue of the surviving spouse also, the entire remaining estate;

(2) if there are surviving issue one or more of whom are not issue of the surviving spouse, as follows:

(a) if there is surviving only one child or the issue of one child, one-half of the intestate estate;

(b) if there are surviving two or more children, the issue of two or more deceased children, or one or more children and the issue of one or more deceased children, one-third of the intestate estate."

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1989 Amendment: In (2)(b) substituted "two or more children, the issue of two or more deceased children, or one or more children" for "more than one such child or one such child".

1989 Editorial Comment: Subsection (2)(b) was ambiguous. The subsection provided that the surviving spouse should receive one-third of the intestate estate when there are living issue of the decedent who ar not issue of the surviving spouse in two situations: (1) two or more children survived the decedent; and (2) at least one child and at least one issue of a deceased child survived the decedent. However, the subsection did not expressly deal with the situation where there are issue of two or more deceased children. As amended, the statute expressly includes this latter situation.

Further, some attorneys disagreed about another application of the one-third distribution of subsection (2)(b). Some argued that in order for the one-third distribution of subsection (2)(b) to apply, it was necessary that there be two children both of whom were not issue of the surviving spouse (or some combination of such children and issue of such children. Other attorneys took a second position that the one-third distribution applied if there was only one child (or the issue of one child) who was not the issue of the surviving spouse, plus another child, children, or issue of a child or children who were issue of the surviving spouse. As amended, the statute adopts this second position. If the decedent is survived by one child (or the issue of one child) which child is not the issue of the surviving spouse and the decedent is survived by another child, children, or issue who are also issue of the surviving spouse, the one-third distribution applies.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 2-102.

Case Notes

Right of Minor Children to Bring Wrongful Death Action Though Spouse Survives: The issue of a decedent who is survived by his spouse may maintain an action for damages under 27-1-513, even though the Uniform Probate Code (UPC) now defines "heirs" as those who are entitled to the property of the decedent under intestate succession and, under the intestate succession statutes, a surviving spouse is entitled to all of the estate. Prior to enactment of the UPC, minor children could bring a wrongful death action. That right was not repealed by adoption of the UPC. Section 72-1-106 does not obviate a minor's right since the UPC provisions control only if other statutory provisions conflict with probate, guardianship, and estate matters. Wrongful death is not within these subjects. Johnson v. Marias River Elec. Co-op, Inc., 211 M 518, 687 P2d 668, 41 St. Rep. 1528 (1984).

Personal Representative's Right to Pursue Wrongful Death Action Instead of Survivorship Action: A decedent's personal representative clearly has a prior right to pursue a wrongful death action on behalf of the heirs in order to avoid the diseconomies and confusion caused by a plethora of lawsuits. Decedent's wife could thus, as his personal representative, pursue a wrongful death action. Decedent's ex-wives claimed that the personal representative had improperly failed to file a survivorship action instead of a wrongful death action in the hopes that she could (unfairly) increase her portion of any recovery. In re Pegg's Estate, 209 M 71, 680 P2d 316, 41 St. Rep. 558 (1984).

72-2-113. Share of heirs other than surviving spouse.

Official Comments

This section provides for inheritance by descendants of the decedent, parents and their descendants, and grandparents and collateral relatives descended from grandparents; in line with modern policy, it eliminates more remote relatives tracing through great-grandparents.

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. The revisions are stylistic and clarifying, not substantive. The pre-1990 version of this section contained the phrase "if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent they take equally (etc.)." That language has been removed. It was unnecessary and confusing because the system of representation in Section 2-106 [72-2-116] gives equal shares if the decedent's descendants are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent.

The word "descendants" replaces the word "issue" in this section and throughout the revisions of Article II. The term issue is a term of art having a biological connotation. Now that inheritance rights, in certain cases, are extended to adopted children, the term descendants is a more appropriate term.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 18 adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning the share of the intestate estate of heirs other than the surviving spouse for former text that read: "The part of the intestate estate not passing to the surviving spouse under 72-2-202, or the entire intestate estate if there is no surviving spouse, passes as follows:

(1) to the issue of the decedent; if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the decedent, they take equally, but if of unequal degree, then those of more remote degree take by representation;

(2) if there is no surviving issue, to his parent or parents equally;

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Determination That Decedent Died Intestate Not Erroneous: Bradshaw's mother contended that Bradshaw executed a valid holographic will in 1988 and introduced the document into evidence. Pursuant to the document, Bradshaw left his vehicle to a nephew and the rest of his estate to be equally divided among his mother, father, brother, and sister. The District Court held that the document was not submitted into evidence as a holographic will and that Bradshaw died intestate. Bradshaw's two sons were born in 1992 and 1995. Under 72-2-332, children born after the making of a will who are not provided for in the will take as if the decedent died intestate. Therefore, even if the document had been properly submitted as a holographic will, the children, in the absence of a surviving spouse, were entitled to Bradshaw's estate. In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001).

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Division Between Nieces and Nephews and Their Surviving Children: Decedent died intestate with no surviving spouse, parents, or children. He had 3 brothers and a sister, all of whom predeceased him, who had a total of 11 nieces and nephews, 3 of whom were dead. The only surviving heirs were the eight surviving nieces and nephews and the children of the three deceased nieces and nephews. It was proper for the lower court to divide the estate into 11 equal shares and give a share to each of the 8 surviving nieces and nephews and equally divide the share of each of the three deceased nieces and nephews among that person's children. In re Estate of Mebust, 255 M 287, 843 P2d 310, 49 St. Rep. 1019 (1992).

Right of Minor Children to Bring Wrongful Death Action Though Spouse Survives: The issue of a decedent who is survived by his spouse may maintain an action for damages under 27-1-513, even though the Uniform Probate Code (UPC) now defines "heirs" as those who are entitled to the property of the decedent under intestate succession and, under the intestate succession statutes, a surviving spouse is entitled to all of the estate. Prior to enactment of the UPC, minor children could bring a wrongful death action. That right was not repealed by adoption of the UPC. Section 72-1-106 does not obviate a minor's right since the UPC provisions control only if other statutory provisions conflict with probate, guardianship, and estate matters. Wrongful death is not within these subjects. Johnson v. Marias River Elec. Co-op, Inc., 211 M 518, 687 P2d 668, 41 St. Rep. 1528 (1984).

Determination of Resulting Trust on Intestate Succession: In this case it was possible for the District Court to have declared a resulting trust on behalf of defendants and/or plaintiffs. An intent to create a trust could have been implied from the circumstances surrounding the conveyances. Hubbard's statement that he wanted the property to go to his "children" could also have been regarded as sufficiently definite to include his children as a class or his children at the time of the conveyances. However, the Trial Court held instead that it was immaterial whether a trust was created because, under a resulting trust, the property would vest in the estate. The result would be the same regardless of whether a trust was found, so that it was not an abuse of discretion to pass the property by intestacy. Eckart v. Hubbard, 184 M 320, 602 P2d 988 (1979).

Next of Kin: Blood relatives of a predeceased spouse are not next of kin of or "related" to the spouse last to die. In re Brewington, 173 M 458, 568 P2d 133 (1977).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Undevised Remainder: Holographic will, which devised a life estate to the surviving spouse and which provided that if it became necessary to liquidate the estate it should be divided equally between testator's wife and son and daughter, did not make a testamentary disposition of the remainder after the life estate, and therefore remainder would be distributed according to intestate succession. In re Hetland's Estate, 166 M 122, 531 P2d 367 (1975).

Nieces and Nephews: When decedent was survived only by nieces and nephews and children of deceased nephews, the nieces and nephews took per capita, and the children of the deceased nephews took per stirpes, the share that their fathers would have taken. In re Estate of Brown, 158 M 413, 492 P2d 914 (1972).

Surviving Parent: When decedent left no surviving wife or children and his father was dead, his mother was the sole beneficiary of his estate. Cowan v. Pac. Gamble Robinson Co., 232 F. Supp. 403 (D.C. Mont. 1964).

72-2-114. Requirement that heir survive decedent for 120 hours.

Official Comments

This section is a limited version of the type of clause frequently found in wills to take care of the common accident situation, in which several members of the same family are injured and die within a few days of one another. The Uniform Simultaneous Death Act provides only a partial solution, since it applies only if there is no proof that the parties died otherwise than simultaneously. (Section 2-702 [72-2-712] recommends revision of the Uniform Simultaneous Death Act.)

This section requires an heir to survive by five days in order to succeed to the decedent's intestate property; for a comparable provision as to wills and other governing instruments, see Section 2-702 [72-2-712]. This section avoids multiple administrations and in some instances prevents the property from passing to persons not desired by the decedent. The 120-hour period will not delay the administration of a decedent's estate because Sections 3-302 [72-3-215] and 3-307 [72-3-225] prevent informal issuance of letters for a period of five days from death. The last sentence prevents the survivorship requirement from defeating inheritance by the last eligible relative of the intestate who survives him or her for any period.

In the case of a surviving spouse who survives the 120-hour period, the 120-hour requirement of survivorship does not disqualify the spouse's intestate share for the federal estate-tax marital deduction. See Int. Rev. Code § 2056(b)(3).

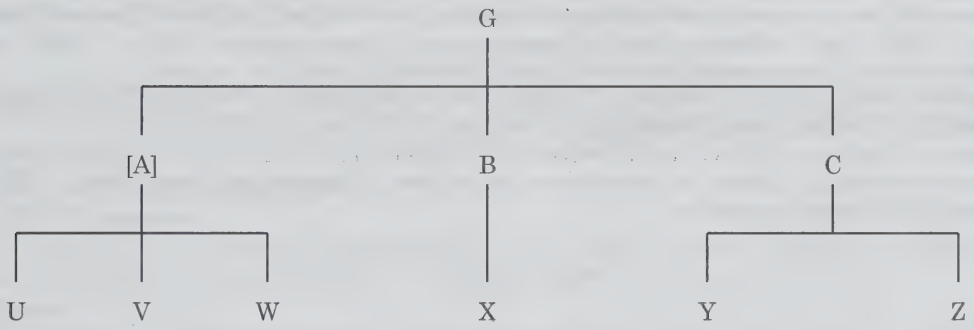
72-2-116. Representation.

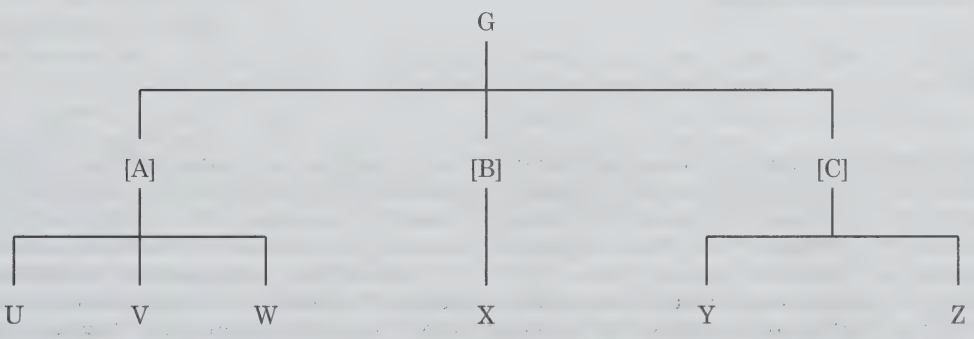
Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. This section is revised to adopt the system of representation called per capita at each generation. The per-capita-at-each-generation system is more responsive to the underlying premise of the original UPC system, in that it always provides equal shares to those equally related; the pre-1990 UPC achieved this objective in most but not all cases. (See Variation 4, below, for an illustration of this point.) In addition, a recent survey of client preferences, conducted by Fellows of the American College of Trust and Estate Counsel, suggests that the per-capita-at-each-generation system of representation is preferred by most clients. See Young, "Meaning of 'Issue' and 'Descendants,'" 13 ACTEC Probate Notes 225 (1988). The survey results were striking: Of 761 responses, 541 (71.1%) chose the per-capita-at-each-generation system; 145 (19.1%) chose the per-stirpes system, and 70 (9.2%) chose the pre-1990 UPC system.



To illustrate the differences among the three systems, consider a family, in which G is the intestate. G has 3 children, A, B, and C. Child A has 3 children, U, V, and W. Child B has 1 child, X. Child C has 2 children, Y and Z. Consider four variations.

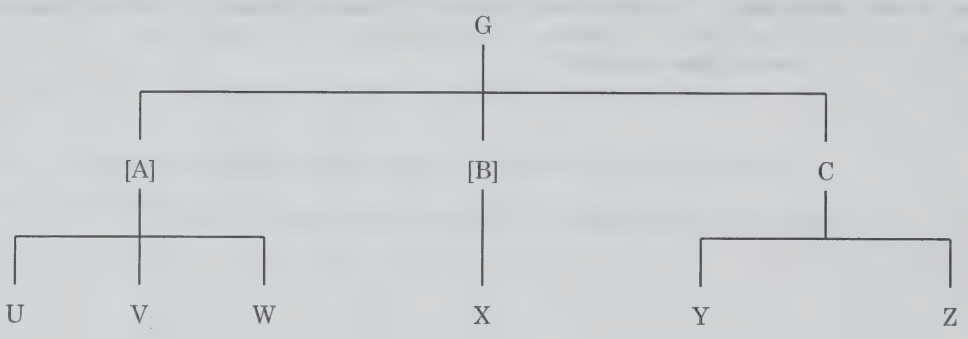
Variation 1: All three children survive G.



Solution: All three systems reach the same result: A, B, and C take 1/3 each.

Variation 2: One child, A, predeceases G; the other two survive G.

Solution: Again, all three systems reach the same result: B and C take 1/3 each; U, V, and W take 1/9 each.

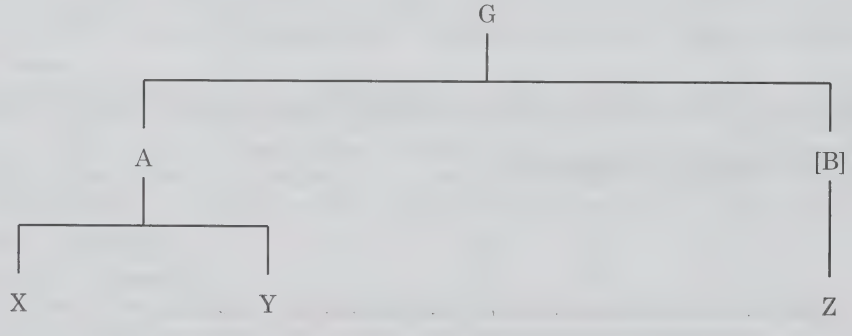


Variation 3: All three children predecease G.

Solution: The pre-1990 UPC and the 1990 UPC systems reach the same result: U, V, W, X, Y, and Z take 1/6 each.

The per-stirpes system gives a different result: U, V, and W take 1/9 each; X takes 1/3; and Y and Z take 1/6 each.

Variation 4: Two of the three children, A and B, predecease G; C survives G.



Solution: In this instance, the 1990 UPC system (per capita at each generation) departs from the pre-1990 UPC system. Under the 1990 UPC system, C takes 1/3 and the other two 1/3 shares are combined into a single share (amounting to 2/3 of the estate) and distributed as if C, Y and Z had predeceased G; the result is that U, V, W, and X take 1/6 each.

Although the pre-1990 UPC rejected the per-stirpes system, the result reached under the pre-1990 UPC was aligned with the per-stirpes system in this instance: C would have taken 1/3, X would have taken 1/3, and U, V, and W would have taken 1/9 each.

The 1990 UPC system furthers the purpose of the pre-1990 UPC. The pre-1990 UPC system was premised on a desire to provide equality among those equally related. The pre-1990 UPC system failed to achieve that objective in this instance. The 1990 system (per-capita-at-each-generation) remedies that defect in the pre-1990 system.

Effect of Disclaimer. By virtue of Section 2-801(d)(1) [72-2-811(4)(a)], an heir cannot use a disclaimer to effect a change in the division of an intestate's estate. To illustrate this point, consider the following example:

As it stands, G's intestate estate is divided into two equal parts: A takes half and B's child, Z, takes the other half. Suppose, however, that A files a disclaimer under Section 2-801 [72-2-811]. A cannot affect the basic division of G's intestate estate by this maneuver. Section 2-801(d)(1) [72-2-811(4)(a)] provides that "the disclaimed interest devolves as if the disclaimant had predeceased the decedent, except that if by law or under the testamentary instrument the disclaimant's descendants would take the disclaimant's share by representation if the disclaimant actually predeceased the decedent, and if the disclaimant left descendants who survive the decedent, the disclaimed interest passes by representation to the disclaimant's descendants who survive the decedent." In this example, the "disclaimed interest" is A's share (1/2) of G's estate; thus the 1/2 interest renounced by A devolves to A's children, X and Y, who take 1/4 each.

If Section 2-801(d) [72-2-811(4)] had provided that G's "estate" is to be divided as if A predeceased G, A could have used his disclaimer to increase the share going to his children from 1/2 to 2/3 (1/3 for each child) and to decrease Z's share to 1/3. The careful wording of Section 2-801(d)(1) [72-2-811(4)(a)], however, prevents A from manipulating the result by this method.

72-2-119. Advancements.

Official Comments

Purpose of the Revisions. This section is revised so that an advancement can be taken into account with respect to the intestate portion of a partially intestate estate.

Other than these revisions, and a few stylistic and clarifying amendments, the original content of the section is maintained, under which the common law relating to advancements is altered by requiring written evidence of the intent that an inter-vivos gift be an advancement.

The statute is phrased in terms of the donee being an heir "at the decedent's death." The donee need not be a prospective heir at the time of the gift. For example, if the intestate, G, made an inter-vivos gift intended to be an advancement to a grandchild at a time when the intestate's child who is the grandchild's parent is alive, the grandchild would not then be a prospective heir. Nevertheless, if G's intent that the gift be an advancement is contained in a written declaration or acknowledgment as provided in subsection (a), the gift is regarded as an advancement if G's child (who is the grandchild's parent) predeceases G, making the grandchild an heir.

To be an advancement, the gift need not be an outright gift; it can be in the form of a will substitute, such as designating the donee as the beneficiary of the intestate's life-insurance policy or the beneficiary of the remainder interest in a revocable inter-vivos trust.

Most inter-vivos transfers today are intended to be absolute gifts or are carefully integrated into a total estate plan. If the donor intends that any transfer during the donor's lifetime be deducted from the donee's share of his estate, the donor may either execute a will so providing or, if he or she intends to die intestate, charge the gift as an advance by a writing within the present section.

This section applies to advances to the decedent's spouse and collaterals (such as nephews and nieces) as well as to descendants.

Computation of Shares — Hotchpot Method. This section does not specify the method of taking an advancement into account in distributing the decedent's intestate estate. That process, called the hotchpot method, is provided by the common law. The hotchpot method is illustrated by the following example.

Example: G died intestate, survived by his wife (W) and his three children (A, B, and C) by a prior marriage. G's probate estate is valued at $190,000. During his lifetime, G had advanced A $50,000 and B $10,000. G memorialized both gifts in a writing declaring his intent that they be advancements.

Solution. The first step in the hotchpot method is to add the value of the advancements to the value of G's probate estate. This combined figure is called the hotchpot estate.

In this case, G's hotchpot estate preliminarily comes to $250,000 ($190,000 + $50,000 + $10,000). W's intestate share of a $250,000 estate under Section 2-102(4) [72-2-112(4)] is $175,000 ($100,000+ 1/2 of $150,000). The remaining $75,000 is divided equally among A, B, and C, or $25,000 each. This calculation reveals that A has received an advancement greater than the share to which he is entitled; A can retain the $50,000 advancement, but is not entitled to any additional amount. A and A's $50,000 advancement are therefore disregarded and the process is begun over.

Once A and A's $50,000 advancement are disregarded, G's revised hotchpot estate is $200,000 ($190,000 + $10,000). W's intestate share is $150,000 ($100,000 + 1/2 of $100,000). The remaining $50,000 is divided equally between B and C, or $25,000 each. From G's intestate estate, B receives $15,000 (B already having received $10,000 of his ultimate $25,000 share as an advancement); and C receives $25,000. The final division of G's probate estate is $150,000 to W, zero to A, $15,000 to B, and $25,000 to C.

Effect if Advancee Predeceases the Decedent; Disclaimer. If a decedent had made an advancement to a person who predeceased the decedent, the last sentence of Section 2-109 [72-2-119] provides that the advancement is not taken into account in computing the intestate share of the recipient's descendants (unless the decedent's declaration provides otherwise). The rationale is that there is no guarantee that the recipient's descendants received the advanced property or its value from the recipient's estate.

To illustrate the application of the last sentence of Section 2-109 [72-2-119], consider this case: During her lifetime, G had advanced $10,000 to her son, A. G died intestate, leaving a probate estate of $50,000. G was survived by her daughter, B, and by A's child, X. A predeceased G.

G's advancement to A is disregarded. G's $50,000 intestate estate is divided into two equal shares, half ($25,000) going to B and the other half ($25,000) going to A's child, X.

Now, suppose that A survived G. In this situation, of course, the advancement to A is taken into account in the division of G's intestate estate. Under the hotchpot method, illustrated above, G's hotchpot estate is $60,000 (probate estate of $50,000 plus advancement to A of $10,000). A takes half of this $60,000 amount, or $30,000, but is charged with already having received $10,000 of it. Consequently, A takes only a 2/5 share ($20,000) of G's intestate estate, and B takes the remaining 3/5 share ($30,000).

Note that A cannot use a disclaimer under Section 2-801 [72-2-811] in effect to give his child, X, a larger share than A was entitled to. Under Section 2-801(d)(1) [72-2-811(4)(a)], the effect of a disclaimer by A is that the disclaimant's "interest" devolves to A's descendants as if the disclaimant had predeceased the decedent. The "interest" that A renounced was a right to a 2/5 share of G's estate, not a 1/2 share. Consequently, A's 2/5 share ($20,000) passes to A's child, X.

72-2-120. Debts to decedent.

Official Comments

Section 2-110 [72-2-120] supplements Section 3-903 [72-3-912], Right of Retainer.

Effect of Disclaimer. Section 2-801(d)(1) [72-2-811(4)(a)] prevents a living debtor from using the combined effects of the last sentence of Section 2-110 [72-2-120] and a disclaimer to avoid a set-off. Although Section 2-110 [72-2-120] provides that, if the debtor actually fails to survive the decedent, the debt is not taken into account in computing the intestate share of the debtor's descendants, the same result is not produced when a living debtor disclaims. Section 2-801(d) [72-2-811(4)] provides that the "interest" disclaimed, not the decedent's estate as a whole, devolves as though the disclaimant predeceased the decedent. The "interest" disclaimed by a living debtor is the share the debtor would have taken had he or she not disclaimed — his or her intestate share minus the debt.

Reciprocity: Pursuant to former Rule 44.1, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the trial court had power to fashion procedures for determination of whether reciprocity of transfer and reciprocity of inheritance existed between citizens of state and citizens of foreign country. Injunction: Residents of Romania could not enjoin enforcement of statutes while probate case was at intermediate stage since state was free to fashion procedure for applying statute in manner not offensive to Constitution. 72-2-122. Dower and curtesy abolished.

Official Comments

The provisions of this Code replace the common-law concepts of dower and curtesy and their statutory counterparts. Those estates provided both a share in intestacy and a protection against disinheritance.

In states that have previously abolished dower and curtesy, or where those estates have never existed, the above section should be omitted.

72-2-124. Parent and child relationship.

Official Comments

Subsection (a) [72-2-124(1)]. Subsection (a) [72-2-124(1)] sets forth the general rule: For purposes of intestate succession, a child is the child of his or her natural parents, regardless of their marital status. In states that have enacted the Uniform Parentage Act (UPA), the parent and child relationship may be established under the UPA. Non-UPA states should insert a reference to its own statute or, if it has no statute on the question, should insert the phrase "applicable state law."

Subsection (b) [72-2-124(2)]. Subsection (b) [72-2-124(2)] contains exceptions to the general rule of subsection (a) [(1)]. Subsection (b) [72-2-124(2)] states the rule that, for inheritance purposes, an adopted individual becomes part of the adopting family and is no longer part of the natural family.

The revision of subsection (b) [72-2-124(2)] affects only the exception from the rule pertaining to the adoption of an individual by that individual's stepparent. As revised, an individual who is adopted by his or her stepparent (the spouse of the custodial natural parent) becomes part of the adopting stepparent's family for inheritance purposes but also continues to be part of the family of the custodial natural parent. With respect to the noncustodial natural parent and that parent's family, however, a different rule is promulgated. The adopted individual and the adopted individual's descendants continue to have a right of inheritance from and through that noncustodial natural parent, but that noncustodial natural parent and that noncustodial natural parent's family do not have a right to inherit from or through the adopted individual.

Subsection (c) [72-2-124(3)]. Subsection (c) [72-2-124(3)] is revised to provide that neither natural parent (nor that natural parent's kindred) can inherit from or through a child unless that natural parent, mother or father, has openly treated the child as his or hers and has not refused to support the child. Prior to the revision, that rule was applied only to the father. The phrase "has not refused to support the child" refers to the time period during which the parent has a legal obligation to support the child.

Part 2
Elective Share of Surviving Spouse

Part Official Comments

GENERAL COMMENT

The elective share of the surviving spouse is substantially revised. The revised elective share has been endorsed by the Assembly of the National Association of Women Lawyers (NAWL), on the unanimous recommendation of NAWL's Executive Board.

The main purpose of the revisions is to bring elective-share law into line with the contemporary view of marriage as an economic partnership. The economic partnership theory of marriage is already implemented under the equitable-distribution system applied in both the common-law and community-property states when a marriage ends in divorce. When a marriage ends in death, that theory is also already implemented under the community-property system and under the system promulgated in the Uniform Marital Property Act. In the common-law states, however, elective-share law has not caught up to the partnership theory of marriage.

The general effect of implementing the partnership theory in elective-share law is to increase the entitlement of a surviving spouse in a long-term marriage in cases in which the marital assets were disproportionately titled in the decedent's name; and to decrease or even eliminate the entitlement of a surviving spouse in a long-term marriage in cases in which the marital assets were more or less equally titled or disproportionately titled in the surviving spouse's name. A further general effect is to decrease or even eliminate the entitlement of a surviving spouse in a short-term, later-in-life marriage in which neither spouse contributed much, if anything, to the acquisition of the other's wealth, except that a special supplemental elective-share amount is provided in cases in which the surviving spouse would otherwise be left without sufficient funds for support.

The Partnership Theory of Marriage

The partnership theory of marriage, sometimes also called the marital-sharing theory, is stated in various ways. Sometimes it is thought of "as an expression of the presumed intent of husbands and wives to pool their fortunes on an equal basis, share and share alike." M. Glendon, The Transformation of Family Law 131 (1989). Under this approach, the economic rights of each spouse are seen as deriving from an unspoken marital bargain under which the partners agree that each is to enjoy a half interest in the fruits of the marriage, i.e., in the property nominally acquired by and titled in the sole name of either partner during the marriage (other than in property acquired by gift or inheritance). A decedent who disinherits his or her surviving spouse is seen as having reneged on the bargain. Sometimes the theory is expressed in restitutionary terms, a return-of-contribution notion. Under this approach, the law grants each spouse an entitlement to compensation for non-monetary contributions to the marital enterprise, as "a recognition of the activity of one spouse in the home and to compensate not only for this activity but for opportunities lost." Id.

No matter how the rationale is expressed, it is sometimes thought that the community-property system, including that version of community law promulgated in the Uniform Marital Property Act, recognizes the partnership theory, but that the common-law system denies it. In the ongoing marriage, it is true that the basic principle in the common-law (title-based) states is that marital status does not affect the ownership of property. The regime is one of separate property. Each spouse owns all that he or she earns. By contrast, in the community-property states, each spouse acquires an ownership interest in half the property the other earns during the marriage. By granting each spouse upon acquisition an immediate half interest in the earnings of the other, the community-property regimes directly recognize that the couple's enterprise is in essence collaborative.

The common-law states, however, also give effect or purport to give effect to the partnership theory when a marriage is dissolved by divorce. If the marriage ends in divorce, a spouse who sacrificed his or her financial-earning opportunities to contribute so-called domestic services to the marital enterprise (such as child-rearing and homemaking) stands to be recompensed. All states now follow the equitable-distribution system upon divorce, under which "broad discretion [is given to] trial courts to assign to either spouse property acquired during the marriage, irrespective of title, taking into account the circumstances of the particular case and recognizing the value of the contributions of a nonworking spouse or homemaker to the acquisition of that property. Simply stated, the system of equitable distribution views marriage as essentially a shared enterprise or joint undertaking in the nature of a partnership to which both spouses contribute — directly and indirectly, financially and nonfinancially — the fruits of which are distributable at divorce." J. Gregory, The Law of Equitable Distribution ¶ 1.03, at p. 1-6 (1989).

The other situation in which spousal property rights figure prominently is disinheritance at death. The pre-1990 Uniform Probate Code, along with almost all other non-UPC common-law states, treats this as one of the few instances in American law where the decedent's testamentary freedom with respect to his or her title-based ownership interests must be curtailed. No matter what the decedent's intent, the pre-1990 Uniform Probate Code and almost all of the non-UPC common-law states recognize that the surviving spouse does have some claim to a portion of the decedent's estate. These statutes provide the spouse a so-called forced share. The forced share is expressed as an option that the survivor can elect or let lapse during the administration of the decedent's estate, hence in the UPC the forced share is termed the "elective" share.

Elective-share law in the common-law states, however, has not caught up to the partnership theory of marriage. Under typical American elective-share law, including the elective share provided by the pre-1990 Uniform Probate Code, a surviving spouse may claim a one-third share of the decedent's estate — not the 50 percent share of the couple's combined assets that the partnership theory would imply.

Long-term Marriages. To illustrate the discrepancy between the partnership theory and conventional elective-share law, consider first a long-term marriage, in which the couple's combined assets were accumulated mostly during the course of the marriage. The pre-1990 elective-share fraction of one-third of the decedent's estate plainly does not implement a partnership principle. The actual result depends on which spouse happens to die first and on how the property accumulated during the marriage was nominally titled.

Example 1 — Long-term Marriage under Conventional Forced-share Law. Consider A and B, who were married in their twenties or early thirties; they never divorced, and A died at age, say, 70, survived by B. For whatever reason, A left a will entirely disinheriting B.

Throughout their long life together, the couple managed to accumulate assets worth $600,000, marking them as a somewhat affluent but hardly wealthy couple.

Under conventional elective-share law, B's ultimate entitlement depends on the manner in which these $600,000 in assets were nominally titled as between them. B could end up much poorer or much richer than a 50/50 partnership principle would suggest. The reason is that under conventional elective-share law, B has a claim to one-third of A's "estate."

Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Decedent's Name; Conventional Elective-share Law Frequently Entitles Survivor to Less Than Equal Share of Marital Assets. If all the marital assets were titled in A's name, B's claim against A's estate would only be for $200,000 — well below B's $300,000 entitlement produced by the partnership/marital-sharing principle.

If $500,000 of the marital assets were titled in A's name, B's claim against A's estate would still only be for $166,500 (1/3 of $500,000), which when combined with B's "own" $100,000 yields a $266,500 cut for B — still below the $300,000 figure produced by the partnership/marital-sharing principle.

Marital Assets Equally Titled; Conventional Elective-share Law Entitles Survivor to Disproportionately Large Share. If $300,000 of the marital assets were titled in A's name, B would still have a claim against A's estate for $100,000, which when combined with B's "own" $300,000 yields a $400,000 cut for B — well above the $300,000 amount to which the partnership/marital-sharing principle would lead.

Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Survivor's Name; Conventional Elective-share Law Entitles Survivor to Magnify the Disproportion. If only $200,000 were titled in A's name, B would still have a claim against A's estate for $66,667 (1/3 of $200,000), even though B was already overcompensated as judged by the partnership/marital-sharing theory.

Short-term, Later-in-Life Marriages. Short-term marriages, particularly the short-term marriage later in life, present different considerations. Because each spouse in this type of marriage typically comes into the marriage owning assets derived from a former marriage, the one-third fraction of the decedent's estate far exceeds a 50/50 division of assets acquired during the marriage.

Example 2 — Short-term, Later-in-Life Marriage under Conventional Elective-share Law. Consider B and C. A year or so after A's death, B married C. Both B and C are in their seventies, and after five years of marriage, B dies survived by C. Both B and C have adult children and a few grandchildren by their prior marriages, and each naturally would prefer to leave most or all of his or her property to those children.

The value of the couple's combined assets is $600,000, $300,000 of which is titled in B's name (the decedent) and $300,000 of which is titled in C's name (the survivor).

For reasons that are not immediately apparent, conventional elective-share law gives the survivor, C, a right to claim one-third of B's estate, thereby shrinking B's estate (and hence the share of B's children by B's prior marriage to A) by $100,000 (reducing it to $200,000) while supplementing C's assets (which will likely go to C's children by C's prior marriage) by $100,000 (increasing their value to $400,000).

Conventional elective-share law, in other words, basically rewards the children of the remarried spouse who manages to outlive the other, arranging for those children a windfall share of one third of the "loser's" estate. The "winning" spouse who chanced to survive gains a windfall, for this "winner" is unlikely to have made a contribution, monetary or otherwise, to the "loser's" wealth remotely worth one-third.

The Redesigned Elective Share

The redesigned elective share is intended to bring elective-share law into line with the partnership theory of marriage.

In the long-term marriage illustrated in Example 1, the effect of implementing a partnership theory is to increase the entitlement of the surviving spouse when the marital assets were disproportionately titled in the decedent's name; and to decrease or even eliminate the entitlement of the surviving spouse when the marital assets were more or less equally titled or disproportionately titled in the surviving spouse's name. Put differently, the effect is both to reward the surviving spouse who sacrificed his or her financial-earning opportunities in order to contribute so-called domestic services to the marital enterprise and to deny an additional windfall to the surviving spouse in whose name the fruits of a long-term marriage were mostly titled.

In the short-term, later-in-life marriage illustrated in Example 2, the effect of implementing a partnership theory is to decrease or even eliminate the entitlement of the surviving spouse because in such a marriage neither spouse is likely to have contributed much, if anything, to the acquisition of the other's wealth. Put differently, the effect is to deny a windfall to the survivor who contributed little to the decedent's wealth, and ultimately to deny a windfall to the survivor's children by a prior marriage at the expense of the decedent's children by a prior marriage. Bear in mind that in such a marriage, which produces no children, a decedent who disinherits or largely disinherits the surviving spouse may not be acting so much from malice or spite toward the surviving spouse, but from a natural instinct to want to leave most or all of his or her property to the children of his or her former, long-term marriage. In hardship cases, however, as explained later, a special supplemental elective-share amount is provided when the surviving spouse would otherwise be left without sufficient funds for support.

Specific Features of the Redesigned Elective Share

Because ease of administration and predictability of result are prized features of the probate system, the redesigned elective share implements the marital-partnership theory by means of a mechanically determined approximation system, which can be called an accrual-type elective share. Under the accrual-type elective share, there is no need to identify which of the couple's property was earned during the marriage and which was acquired prior to the marriage or acquired during the marriage by gift or inheritance. For further discussion of the reasons for choosing this method, see Waggoner, "The Multiple-Marriage Society and Spousal Rights Under the Revised Uniform Probate Code," 76 Iowa L. Rev. 223, 235-53 (1991).

Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)] — The "Elective-share Percentage." Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)] establishes the first step in the overall redesign of the elective share. Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)] implements the accrual-type elective share by adjusting the surviving spouse's ultimate entitlement to the length of the marriage. The longer the marriage, the larger the "elective-share percentage." The sliding scale adjusts for the correspondingly greater contribution to the acquisition of the couple's marital property in a marriage of 15 years than in a marriage of 15 days. Specifically, the "elective-share percentage" starts low and increases annually according to a graduated schedule until it levels off at fifty percent. The schedule established in Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)] starts by providing the surviving spouse, during the first year of marriage, a right to elect the "supplemental elective-share amount" only. (The supplemental-elective share amount is explained later.) After one year of marriage, the surviving spouse's "elective-share percentage" is three percent of the augmented estate and it increases with each additional year of marriage until it reaches the maximum 50 percent level after 15 years of marriage.

Section 2-202(b) [72-2-222(2)] — the "Augmented Estate." The elective-share percentage determined under Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)] is applied to the value of the "augmented estate." As defined in Section 2-202(b) [72-2-222(2)], the "augmented estate" equals the value of the couple's combined assets, not merely to the value of the assets nominally titled in the decedent's name.

More specifically, the "augmented estate" is composed of the sum of four elements:

Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-222(2)(a)] — the value of the decedent's net probate estate;

Subsection (b)(2) [72-2-222(2)(b)] — the value of the decedent's "reclaimable estate," composed of will-substitute-type inter-vivos transfers made by the decedent to others than the surviving spouse during the marriage and property subject to a presently exercisable general power of appointment held by the decedent;

Subsection (b)(3) [72-2-222(2)(c)] — the value of property shifting to the surviving spouse by reason of the decedent's death, such as life insurance on the decedent's life payable to the surviving spouse as the beneficiary; and Subsection (b)(4) [72-2-222(2)(d)] — the value of the surviving spouse's assets at the decedent's death, plus any property that would have been in the surviving spouse's reclaimable estate under subsection (b)(2) [72-2-222(2)(b)] had the surviving spouse predeceased the decedent.

Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)] — the "Elective-share Amount." Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)] requires the elective-share percentage to be applied to the augmented estate. This calculation yields the "elective-share amount" — the amount to which the surviving spouse is entitled. If the elective-share percentage were to be applied only to the decedent's assets, a surviving spouse who has already been overcompensated in terms of the way the couple's marital assets have been nominally titled would receive a further windfall under the elective-share system. The couple's marital assets, in other words, would not be equalized. By applying the elective-share percentage to the augmented estate (the couple's combined assets), the redesigned system denies any significance to the possibly fortuitous factor of how the spouses happened to have taken title to particular assets.

Section 2-207 [72-2-227] — Satisfying the Elective-share Amount. Section 2-207 [72-2-227] determines how the elective-share amount is to be satisfied. Under Section 2-207 [72-2-227], the decedent's net probate and reclaimable estates are liable to contribute to the satisfaction of the elective-share amount only to the extent the elective-share amount is not fully satisfied by the sum of the following amounts:

Subsection (a)(1) [72-2-227(1)(a)] — amounts that pass or have passed from the decedent to the surviving spouse by testate or intestate succession;

Subsection (a)(2) [72-2-227(1)(b)] — amounts included in the augmented estate under Section 2-202(b)(3) [72-2-222(2)(c)], i.e., the value of property to which the surviving spouse succeeds by reason of the decedent's death;

Subsection (a)(3) [72-2-227(1)(c)] — amounts that would have passed to the spouse but were disclaimed; and Subsection (a)(4) [72-2-227(1)(d)] — twice the elective-share percentage, under Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)], of the survivor's owned or reclaimable assets as determined under Section 2-202(b)(4) [72-2-222(2)(d)].

If the combined value of these amounts equals or exceeds the elective-share amount, the surviving spouse is not entitled to any further amount from the decedent's probate estate or recipients of the decedent's reclaimable estate, unless the surviving spouse is entitled to a supplemental elective-share amount under Section 2-201(b) [72-2-221(2)].

Note that under Section 2-207(a)(4) [72-2-227(1)(d)], the portion of the surviving spouse's assets that counts toward making up the elective-share amount is derived by applying a percentage to the survivor's assets equal to double the elective-share percentage. In a long-term marriage, the elective-share percentage will be 50%; thus, in such a marriage, all of the survivor's assets are counted toward making up the spouse's elective-share amount.

Example 3 — 15-Year or Longer Marriage under Redesigned Elective Share; Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Decedent's Name. A and B were married to each other more than 15 years. A died, survived by B. A's will left nothing to B, and no amounts shifted to B by reason of A's death. A made no transfers to others during the marriage and held no presently exercisable general power of appointment at death.

The augmented estate is the sum of the amounts described in Section 2-202(b) [72-2-222(2)]:

(1)	(A's net probate estate)	$400,000
(2)	(A's reclaimable estate)	0
(3)	(amounts shifting to B)	0
(4)	(B's assets and reclaimables)	$200,000
Augmented Estate		$600,000

The elective-share percentage for a 15-year or longer marriage is 50%. This means that B's elective-share amount is $300,000 (50% of $600,000).

Under Section 2-207(a)(4) [72-2-227(1)(d)], the percentage of B's assets that counts first toward making up B's entitlement is 100% (twice the elective-share percentage of 50%), or $200,000. B, therefore, is treated as already having received $200,000 of B's ultimate entitlement of $300,000. Section 2-207(b) [72-2-227(2)] makes A's net probate estate liable for the unsatisfied balance of the elective-share amount, $100,000, which is the amount needed to bring B's own $200,000 up to the $300,000 level.

Example 4 — 15-Year or Longer Marriage under Redesigned Elective Share; Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Survivor's Name. As in Example 3, A and B were married to each other more than 15 years. A died, survived by B. A's will left nothing to B, and no amounts shifted to B by reason of A's death. A made no transfers to others during the marriage and held no presently exercisable general power of appointment at death.

The augmented estate is the sum of the amounts described in Section 2-202(b) [72-2-222(2)]:

(1)	(A's net probate estate)	$200,000
(2)	(A's reclaimable estate)	0
(3)	(amounts shifting to B)	0
(4)	(B's assets and reclaimables)	$400,000
Augmented Estate		$600,000

The elective-share percentage for a 15-year or longer marriage is 50%. This means that B's elective-share amount is $300,000 (50% of $600,000).

Under Section 2-207(a)(4) [72-2-227(1)(d)], the percentage of B's assets that counts first toward making up B's entitlement is 100% (twice the elective-share percentage of 50%), or $400,000. B, therefore, is treated as already having received more than B's ultimate entitlement of $300,000. B has no claim on A's net probate estate.

In a marriage that has lasted less than 15 years, only a portion of the survivor's assets — not all — count toward making up the elective-share amount. This is because the elective-share percentage in these shorter-term marriages is less than 50% and, under Section 2-207(a)(4) [72-2-227(1)(d)], the portion of the survivor's assets that count toward making up the elective-share amount is double the elective-share percentage.

To explain why this is appropriate requires further elaboration of the underlying theory of the redesigned system. The system avoids the tracing-to-source problem by applying an ever-increasing percentage to the couple's combined assets without regard to when or how those assets were acquired, rather than applying a constant percentage (50%) to an ever-growing accumulation of assets. By approximation, the redesigned system equates the elective-share percentage of the couple's combined assets with 50% of the couple's marital assets — assets subject to equalization under the partnership/marital-sharing theory. Thus, in a marriage that has endured long enough for the elective-share percentage to be 30%, Section 2-207(a)(4) [72-2-227(1)(d)] in effect equates 30% of the couple's combined assets with 50% of those assets that were acquired during the marriage (other than by gift or inheritance). In the aggregate, Section 2-207(a)(4) [72-2-227(1)(d)] equates 60% of the couple's combined assets with the assets acquired during the marriage (other than by gift or inheritance).

Example 5 — Under 15-Year Marriage under the Redesigned Elective Share; Marital Assets Disproportionately Titled in Decedent's Name. A and B were married to each other more than 5 but less than 6 years. A died, survived by B. A's will left nothing to B, and no amounts shifted to B by reason of A's death. A made no transfers to others during the marriage and held no presently exercisable general power of appointment at death.

The augmented estate is the sum of the amounts described in Section 2-202(b) [72-2-222(2)]:

(1)	(A's net probate estate)	$400,000
(2)	(A's reclaimable estate)	0
(3)	(amounts shifting to B)	0
(4)	(B's assets and reclaimables)	$200,000
Augmented Estate		$600,000

Under Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)], the elective-share percentage for a 5-year marriage is 15%. This means that B's elective-share amount is $90,000 (15% of $600,000).

To say that B's entitlement is $90,000 presupposes (by approximation) that $180,000 of their $600,000 are marital assets — assets subject to equalization. Hence, B's entitlement is half of that amount, or $90,000. Exempted from equalization is the other $420,000 of their combined assets, some of which would have been A's individual or exempted property and the rest of which would have been B's individual or exempted property.

The redesigned system applies the same ratio to the asset mix of each spouse as it does to the couple's combined assets. To say that the elective-share percentage is 15% means that the combined assets are treated as being in a 30/70 ratio (30% marital, subject to equalization; 70% individual, exempted from equalization). This same ratio, in turn, governs the approximation of each spouse's mix of marital and individual property. Consequently, the redesigned system attributes 30% of A's $400,000 ($120,000) to marital property and the other 70% ($280,000) to individual property. And, the system does the same for B's $200,000, i.e., it treats 30% ($60,000) as marital property and 70% ($140,000) as individual property.

Accordingly, B is treated as already owning $60,000 of the $180,000 of marital property. Under Section 2-207(a)(4) [72-2-227(1)(d)], $60,000 of B's $90,000 elective-share amount comes from B's own assets. Section 2-207(b) [72-2-227(2)] makes A's net probate estate liable for the unsatisfied balance — $30,000. (Remember that $120,000 of A's assets are attributed to marital property; thus, removing $30,000 of those $120,000 from A and adding that $30,000 to B's $60,000 in marital assets equalizes the aggregate $180,000 marital assets in a 50/50 split — $90,000 for A and $90,000 for B.)

The Support Theory

The partnership/marital-sharing theory is not the only driving force behind elective-share law. Another theoretical basis for elective-share law is that the spouses' mutual duties of support during their joint lifetimes should be continued in some form after death in favor of the survivor, as a claim on the decedent's estate. Current elective-share law implements this theory poorly. The fixed fraction, whether it is the typical one-third or some other fraction, disregards the survivor's actual need. A one-third share may be inadequate to the surviving spouse's needs, especially in a modest estate. On the other hand, in a very large estate, it may go far beyond the survivor's needs. In either a modest or a large estate, the survivor may or may not have ample independent means, and this factor, too, is disregarded in conventional elective-share law.

The redesigned elective share system implements the support theory by granting the survivor a supplemental elective-share amount related to the survivor's actual needs. In implementing a support rationale, the length of the marriage is quite irrelevant. Because the duty of support is founded upon status, it arises at the time of the marriage.

Section 2-201(b) [72-2-221(2)] — the "Supplemental Elective-share Amount." Section 2-201(b) [72-2-221(2)] is the provision that implements the support theory by providing a supplemental elective-share amount of $50,000. The $50,000 figure is bracketed to indicate that individual states may wish to select a higher or lower amount.

In making up this $50,000 amount, the surviving spouse's own titled-based ownership interests count first toward making up this supplemental amount; included in the survivor's assets for this purpose are amounts shifting to the survivor at the decedent's death and amounts owing to the survivor from the decedent's estate under the accrual-type elective-share apparatus discussed above, but excluded are (1) amounts going to the survivor under the Code's probate exemptions and allowances and (2) the survivor's Social Security benefits (and other governmental benefits, such as Medicare insurance coverage). If the survivor's assets are less than the $50,000 minimum, then the survivor is entitled to whatever additional portion of the decedent's estate is necessary, up to 100 percent of it, to bring the survivor's assets up to that minimum level. In the case of a late marriage, in which the survivor is perhaps aged in the mid-seventies, the minimum figure plus the probate exemptions and allowances (which under the Code amounts to a minimum of another $43,000) is pretty much on target — in conjunction with Social Security payments and other governmental benefits — to provide the survivor with a fairly adequate means of support.

Example 6 — Supplemental Elective-share Amount. After A's death in Example 1, B married C. Five years later, B died, survived by C. B's will left nothing to C, and no amounts shifted to C by reason of B's death. B made no transfers to others during the marriage and held no presently exercisable general power of appointment at death.

The augmented estate is the sum of the amounts described in Section 2-202(b) [72-2-222(2)]:

(1)	(B's net probate estate)	$90,000
(2)	(B's reclaimable estate)	0
(3)	(amounts shifting to C)	0
(4)	(C's assets and reclaimables)	$10,000
Augmented Estate		$100,000

The elective-share percentage for a 5-year marriage is 15%. This means that C's elective-share amount is $15,000 (15% of $100,000).

Solution under Redesigned Elective Share. Under Section 2-207(a)(4) [72-2-227(1)(d)], $3,000 (30%) of C's assets count first toward making up C's elective-share amount; under Section 2-207(b) [72-2-227(2)], the remaining $12,000 elective-share amount would come from B's net probate estate.

Application of Section 2-201(b) [72-2-221(2)] shows that C is entitled to a supplemental elective-share amount. The sum of the amounts described in sections:

2-202(b)(3) [72-2-222(2)(c)]	0
2-202(b)(4) [72-2-222(2)(d)]	$10,000
2-207(a)(1) [72-2-227(1)(a)]	0
Elective-share amount payable from decedent's probate estate under Section 2-207(b) [72-2-227(2)]	$12,000
Total	$22,000

The above calculation shows that C is entitled to a supplemental elective-share amount under Section 2-201(b) [72-2-221(2)] of $28,000 ($50,000 minus $22,000). The supplemental elective-share amount is payable entirely from B's net probate estate, as prescribed in Section 2-207(b) [72-2-227(2)].

The end result is that C is entitled to $40,000 ($12,000 + $28,000) by way of elective share from B's net probate estate (and reclaimable estate, had there been any). Forty thousand dollars is the amount necessary to bring C's $10,000 in assets up to $50,000.

Decedent's Reclaimable Estate

The pre-1990 Code made great strides toward preventing "fraud on the spouse's share." The problem of "fraud on the spouse's share" arises when the decedent seeks to evade the spouse's elective share by engaging in various kinds of nominal inter-vivos transfers. To render that type of behavior ineffective, the pre-1990 Code adopted the augmented-estate concept, which extended the elective-share entitlement to property that was the subject of specified types of inter-vivos transfer, such as revocable inter-vivos trusts.

In the redesign of the elective share, the augmented-estate concept has been strengthened. The pre-1990 Code left several loopholes ajar in the augmented estate — a notable one being life insurance the decedent buys, naming someone other than his or her surviving spouse as the beneficiary. With appropriate protection for the insurance company that pays off before receiving notice of an elective-share claim, the redesigned elective-share system includes these types of insurance policies in the augmented estate as part of the decedent's reclaimable estate under Section 2-202(b)(2) [72-2-222(2)(b)].

72-2-221. Elective share.

Official Comments

Pre-1990 Provision. The pre-1990 provisions granted the surviving spouse a one-third share of the augmented estate. The one-third fraction was largely a carry over from common-law dower, under which a surviving widow had a one-third interest for life in her deceased husband's land.

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. The revision of this section is the first step in the overall plan of implementing a partnership or marital-sharing theory of marriage, with a support theory back-up.

Subsection (a) [72-2-221(1)]. Subsection (a) [72-2-221(1)] implements the partnership theory by increasing the maximum elective-share percentage of the augmented estate to fifty percent, but by phasing that ultimate entitlement in so that it does not reach the maximum fifty-percent level until the marriage has lasted at least 15 years. If the decedent and the surviving spouse were married to each other more than once, all periods of marriage to each other are added together for purposes of subsection (a) [72-2-221(1)]; periods between marriages are not counted.

Subsection (b) [72-2-221(2)]. Subsection (b) [72-2-221(2)] implements the support theory of the elective share by providing a [$50,000] supplemental elective-share amount, in case the surviving spouse's assets and other entitlements are below this figure.

Cross Reference. To have the right to an elective share under subsection (a) [72-2-221(1)], the decedent's spouse must survive the decedent. Under Section 2-702(a) [72-2-712(1)], the requirement of survivorship is satisfied only if it can be established that the spouse survived the decedent by 120 hours.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 290 in (2) near beginning after "72-2-227(1)(a)" inserted "through (1)(c)". Amendment effective April 9, 1999.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 in (2), in first sentence near beginning, deleted references to 72-2-222(2)(c) and 72-2-227(1)(c) and near middle substituted "probate estate and nonprobate transfers to others" for "probate and reclaimable estates" and in second sentence substituted "nonprobate transfers to others" for "reclaimable estate"; and inserted (3) concerning homestead allowance, exempt property, and family allowance being in addition to elective-share and supplemental elective-share amounts.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning elective share based on duration of marriage for former text that read: "(1) If a married person domiciled in this state dies, the surviving spouse has a right of election to take an elective share of one-third of the augmented estate under the limitations and conditions hereinafter stated.

(2) If a married person not domiciled in this state dies, the right, if any, of the surviving spouse to take an elective share in property in this state is governed by the law of the decedent's domicile at death."

Federal Estate Taxes: Where a widow renounced the will and elected to take her dower and intestate share pursuant to section 22-107, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and her intestate share was one-third of the decedent's net estate in accordance with section 91-403(1), R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), such elected statutory share, which qualified for the marital deduction and generated no federal estate tax liability, was nonetheless chargeable with a proportionate share of the estate's total estate tax liability. In re Estate of Mosby, 170 M 463, 554 P2d 1341 (1976).

Constitutionality of Former Statute Restricting Terms of Married Women's Wills: In determining the constitutionality of a statute, all statutes should be read together to fully understand the meaning of any individual statute. Section 91-102, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), which operated to limit to two-thirds the amount a wife could deprive her husband of by will, did not impose a discriminatory restriction on a wife solely because of her sex as section 22-107, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), regarding statutory dower allowing the wife two-thirds of her husband's estate, provided the wife with a greater potential if she chose to elect to take against her husband's will. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Federal Estate Taxes: Where a will does not otherwise provide for the payment of federal estate taxes, the payment must be equitably apportioned among residuary interests so that a residuary interest not generating any estate taxes does not bear any burden for their payment. Robinson v. U.S., 518 F2d 1105 (9th Cir. 1975), reversing 369 F. Supp. 925 (D.C. Mont. 1974).

Invalid Renunciation: Widow's renunciation of her husband's will was not valid, even though widow purchased family home from executor and executed a deed quitclaiming all interest in real and personal property of the estate, and even though there may have been no fraud, misrepresentation or breach of confidential relationship, in view of evidence that widow did not know her rights, did not understand terms of will and did not understand the significance of signing the quitclaim deed. Ericksen v. Ericksen, 152 M 179, 448 P2d 144 (1968).

72-2-222. Augmented estate.

Official Comments

Under the pre-1990 and 1990 Code, the decedent's probate estate is first reduced by funeral and administration expenses, homestead allowance, family allowances and exemptions, and enforceable claims. The term "claims" is defined in Section 1-201 [72-1-103] as including "liabilities of the decedent or protected person whether arising in contract, in tort, or otherwise, and liabilities of the estate which arise at or after the death of the decedent or after the appointment of a conservator, including funeral expenses and expenses of administration. The term does not include estate or inheritance taxes, or demands or disputes regarding title of a decedent or protected person to specific assets alleged to be included in the estate."

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. The revisions of this section implement a key component of the overall plan for redesigning the elective share, as described in the General Comment to Part 2. The elective-share percentage, determined by the length of the marriage under Section 2-201 [72-2-221], is applied to the augmented estate. Under Section 2-202(b)(4) [72-2-222(2)(d)], the augmented estate includes the value of property owned by the surviving spouse at the decedent's death plus the value of amounts that would have been includible in the surviving spouse's reclaimable estate had the spouse predeceased the decedent, reduced by enforceable claims against that property or that spouse. (Note that amounts that would have been includible in the surviving spouse's reclaimable estate under subsection (b)(2)(iii) [72-2-222(2)(b)(iii)] are not valued as if he [or she] were deceased. Thus, if, at the decedent's death, the surviving spouse owns a $1 million life-insurance policy on his or her life, payable to his or her sister, that policy would not be valued at its face value of $1 million, but rather could be valued under the method used in the federal estate tax under Treas. Reg. § 20.2031-8.)

The purpose of combining the estates and reclaimables of both spouses is to implement a partnership or marital-sharing theory. Under that theory, there is a fifty/fifty split of the property acquired by both spouses. Hence the redesigned elective share includes the survivor's net assets in the augmented-estate entity. (Under a different rationale, no longer appropriate under the redesigned system, the pre-1990 version of Section 2-202 [72-2-222] also added the value of property owned by the surviving spouse, but only to the extent the owned property had been derived from the decedent. An incidental benefit of the redesigned system is that this tracing-to-source feature of the pre-1990 version is eliminated.)

Under the pre-1990 Code, the decedent's probate estate was also augmented by adding the value of specified inter-vivos transfers made by the decedent during the marriage. The purpose was to protect the surviving spouse against so-called "fraud on the spouse's share." The revisions of Section 2-202 [72-2-222] not only continue but strengthen this feature of the pre-1990 Code by extending the spouse's elective-share entitlement to property the decedent owned in substance as well as in form. The general theory of revised Section 2-202(b)(2)(i) [72-2-222(2)(b)(i)] is that a decedent who, during life, alone had a power to make himself or herself the full technical owner of property was in substance the owner of that property for purposes of the elective share. Whether the decedent created that power or it was created by another, and whether that power was created before or after the marriage, are irrelevant. The only relevant criteria are whether the decedent held that power at (or immediately before) death or (while married and during the two-year period prior to the decedent's death) irrevocably exercised or released it. If the decedent (during marriage) released or allowed such a power to lapse at death, the decedent in effect transferred the property subject to the power to the persons who benefit from a nonexercise of the power.

If the decedent and the surviving spouse were married to each more than once, transactions that took place during any of their marriages to each other are treated as having taken place "while married to his [or her] surviving spouse" and "during the decedent's marriage to the surviving spouse."

Although the pre-1990 Code did not include life insurance, annuities, etc., payable to other persons in the augmented estate, the revisions do include their value; this move recognizes that such arrangements could, under the pre-1990 Code, have been used to deplete the estate and reduce the spouse's elective-share entitlement. Subsection (e) [72-2-222(5)] provides protection to "payors" and other third parties who made payments or took any other action before receiving written notice of the spouse's intention to make an election under this Part or that an election has been made. The term "payor" is defined in Section 1-201 [72-1-103] as meaning "a trustee, insurer, business entity, employer, government, governmental agency or subdivision, or any other person authorized or obligated by law or a governing instrument to make payments."

1999 Amendment: Chapter 290 in (2)(b)(iii)(B) at end substituted "the amount excluded from federal taxable gifts pursuant to section 2503(b) of the Internal Revenue Code in effect in the year of transfer" for "$10,000"; and in (4) at end inserted sentence concerning commuted value of life and term interests in income, annuity, or unitrust amount being determined in accordance with U.S. treasury regulations for internal revenue purposes. Amendment effective April 9, 1999.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 deleted definition of bona fide purchaser that read: ""Bona fide purchaser" means a purchaser for value in good faith and without notice of an adverse claim"; inserted definitions of decedent's nonprobate transfers to others, fractional interest in property held in joint tenancy with the right of survivorship, marriage, power, property, and transfer; in definition of presently exercisable general power of appointment, after "decedent", substituted "whether or not the decedent then had the capacity to exercise the power, held a power to create a present or future interest in the decedent" for "by an exercise of the power could have created an interest, present or future, in the decedent" and at end, after "creditors", inserted "the decedent's estate, or the creditors of the decedent's estate and includes a power to revoke or invade the principal of a trust or other property arrangement"; in definition of right to income, after "under", substituted "a commercial or private annuity, an annuity trust, a unitrust, or a similar arrangement" for "an annuity or similar contractual arrangement"; deleted definition of value of property that read: ""Value of property owned by the surviving spouse at the decedent's death" and "value of property to which the surviving spouse succeeds by reason of the decedent's death" include the commuted value of any present or future interest then held by the surviving spouse and the commuted value of amounts payable to the surviving spouse after the decedent's death under any trust, life insurance settlement option, annuity contract, public or private pension, disability compensation, death benefit or retirement plan, or any similar arrangement, exclusive of the federal social security system"; substituted (1)(b) concerning termination for former (1)(b) that read: "(b) As used in subsections (2)(b)(iii) and (2)(b)(iv), "transfer" includes an exercise or release of a power of appointment but does not include a lapse of a power of appointment"; substituted (2) concerning what augmented estate consists of for former text that read: "(2) The augmented estate consists of the sum of:

(a) the value of the decedent's probate estate, reduced by funeral and administration expenses, homestead allowance, family allowances and exemptions, and enforceable claims;

(b) the value of the decedent's reclaimable estate, which is composed of all property, whether real or personal, movable or immovable, wherever situated, not included in the decedent's probate estate, of any of the following types:

(i) property, to the extent the passing of the principal thereof to or for the benefit of any person, other than the decedent's surviving spouse, was subject to a presently exercisable general power of appointment held by the decedent alone, if the decedent held that power immediately before death or if and to the extent the decedent, while married to the surviving spouse and during the 2-year period preceding the decedent's death, released that power or exercised that power in favor of any person other than the decedent or the decedent's estate, spouse, or surviving spouse;

(ii) property, to the extent of the decedent's unilaterally severable interest therein, held by the decedent and any other person, except the decedent's surviving spouse, with right of survivorship, if the decedent held that interest immediately before death or if and to the extent the decedent, while married to the surviving spouse and during the 2-year period preceding the decedent's death, transferred that interest to any person other than the decedent's surviving spouse;

(iii) proceeds of insurance, including accidental death benefits, on the life of the decedent payable to any person other than the decedent's surviving spouse, if the decedent owned the insurance policy and had the power to change the beneficiary of the insurance policy or if the insurance policy was subject to a presently exercisable general power of appointment held by the decedent alone immediately before death or if and to the extent the decedent, while married to the surviving spouse and during the 2-year period preceding the decedent's death, transferred that policy to any person other than the decedent's surviving spouse; and

(iv) property transferred by the decedent to any person other than a bona fide purchaser at any time during the decedent's marriage to the surviving spouse, to or for the benefit of any person other than the surviving spouse, if the transfer is of any of the following types:

(A) any transfer to the extent that the decedent retained at the time of or during the 2-year period preceding death the possession or enjoyment of or right to income from the property;

(B) any transfer to the extent that at the time of or during the 2-year period preceding the decedent's death, the income or principal was subject to a power, exercisable by the decedent alone or in conjunction with any other person or exercisable by a nonadverse party for the benefit of the decedent or the decedent's estate;

(C) any transfer of property to the extent the decedent's contribution to it, as a percentage of the whole, was made during the 2-year period preceding the decedent's death, by which the property is held at the time of or during the 2-year period preceding the decedent's death by the decedent and another, other than the decedent's surviving spouse, with right of survivorship; or

(D) any transfer made to a donee during the 2-year period preceding the decedent's death to the extent that the aggregate transfers to any one donee in either of the years exceed $10,000;

(c) the value of property to which the surviving spouse succeeds by reason of the decedent's death, other than by homestead allowance, exempt property, family allowance, testate succession, or intestate succession, including the proceeds of insurance, including accidental death benefits, on the life of the decedent and including benefits payable under a retirement plan in which the decedent was a participant, exclusive of the federal social security system; and

(d) the value of property owned by the surviving spouse at the decedent's death, reduced by enforceable claims against that property or that spouse, plus the value of amounts that would have been includable in the surviving spouse's reclaimable estate had the spouse predeceased the decedent. However, amounts that would have been includable in the surviving spouse's reclaimable estate under subsection (2)(b)(iii) are not valued as if the surviving spouse were deceased"; in (3), at beginning, substituted "The value of any property" for "Any transfer or exercise or release of a power of appointment" and at end substituted "nonprobate transfers to others" for "reclaimable estate"; in (3)(a), near end after "transfer", deleted "exercise or release"; substituted (3)(b) concerning transfer with written joinder or consent of surviving spouse for former text that read: "(b) if irrevocably made with the written consent or joinder of the surviving spouse"; inserted (3)(c) concerning insurance or benefit plans payable to persons other than surviving spouse or estate; substituted (4) concerning commuted value or present or future interest and (5) concerning overlapping application for former text that read: "(4) Property is valued as of the decedent's death, but an irrevocable transfer of property during the 2-year period preceding the decedent's death that is included in the decedent's reclaimable estate under subsections (2)(b)(i), (2)(b)(ii), and (2)(b)(iv) is valued as of the time of the transfer. If the terms of more than one of the provisions of subsection (2)(b) apply, the property is included in the augmented estate under the provision that yields the highest value. For purposes of this subsection, an "irrevocable transfer of property" includes an irrevocable exercise or release of a power of appointment"; deleted former (5) and (6) that read: "(5) (a) Although under this section a payment, item of property, or other benefit is included in the decedent's reclaimable estate, a payor or other third party is not liable for having made a payment or transferred an item of property or other benefit to a beneficiary designated in a governing instrument, or for having taken any other action in good faith reliance on the validity of a governing instrument, upon request and satisfactory proof of the decedent's death, before the payor or other third party received written notice from the surviving spouse or spouse's representative of an intention to file a petition for the elective share or that a petition for the elective share has been filed. A payor or other third party is liable for payments made or other actions taken after the payor or other third party received written notice of an intention to file a petition for the elective share or that a petition for the elective share has been filed.

(b) The written notice of intention to file a petition for the elective share or that a petition for the elective share has been filed must be mailed to the payor's or other third party's main office or home by certified mail, return receipt requested, or served upon the payor or other third party in the same manner as a summons in a civil action. Upon receipt of written notice of intention to file a petition for the elective share or that a petition for the elective share has been filed, a payor or other third party may pay any amount owed or transfer or deposit any item of property held by it to or with the court having jurisdiction of the probate proceedings relating to the decedent's estate or, if no proceedings have been commenced, to or with the court having jurisdiction of probate proceedings relating to decedents' estates located in the county of the decedent's residence. The court shall hold the funds or item of property and, upon its determination under 72-2-225(4), shall order disbursement in accordance with the determination. If no petition is filed in the court within the specified time under 72-2-225(1) or, if filed, the demand for an elective share is withdrawn under 72-2-225(3), the court shall order disbursement to the designated beneficiary. Payments, transfers, or deposits made to or with the court discharge the payor or other third party from all claims for the value of amounts paid to or items of property transferred to or deposited with the court.

(c) Upon petition to the probate court by the beneficiary designated in a governing instrument, the court may order that all or part of the property be paid to the beneficiary in an amount and subject to conditions consistent with this section.

(6) (a) A person who purchases property from a recipient for value and without notice or who receives a payment or other item of property in partial or full satisfaction of a legally enforceable obligation is neither obligated under this part to return the payment, item of property, or benefit nor liable under this part for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit. However, a person who, not for value, receives a payment, item of property, or other benefit included in the decedent's reclaimable estate is obligated to return the payment, item of property, or benefit or is personally liable for the amount of the payment or the value of the item of property or benefit, as provided in 72-2-227.

(b) If any section or part of any section of this part is preempted by federal law with respect to a payment, an item of property, or any other benefit included in the decedent's reclaimable estate, a person who, not for value, receives the payment, item of property, or other benefit is obligated to return that payment, item of property, or benefit, or is personally liable for the amount of that payment or the value of that item of property or benefit, as provided in 72-2-227, to the person who would have been entitled to it were that section or part of that section not preempted"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning the augmented estate for former text that read: "The augmented estate means the estate, reduced by funeral and administration expenses, homestead allowance, family allowances and exemptions, and enforceable claims, to which is added the sum of the following amounts:

(1) the value of property transferred to anyone other than a bona fide purchaser by the decedent at any time during marriage, to or for the benefit of any person other than the surviving spouse, to the extent that the decedent did not receive adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth for the transfer, if the transfer is of any of the following types:

(a) any transfer under which the decedent retained at the time of his death the possession or enjoyment of or right to income from the property;

(b) any transfer to the extent that the decedent retained at the time of his death a power, either alone or in conjunction with any other person, to revoke or to consume, invade, or dispose of the principal for his own benefit;

(c) any transfer whereby property is held at the time of decedent's death by decedent and another with right of survivorship;

(d) any transfer made to a donee within 2 years of death of the decedent to the extent that the aggregate transfers to any one donee in any of the years exceed $3,000;

(2) any transfer is excluded if made with the written consent or joinder of the surviving spouse. Property is valued as of the decedent's death except that property given irrevocably to a donee during lifetime of the decedent is valued as of the date the donee came into possession or enjoyment if that occurs first. Nothing herein shall cause to be included in the augmented estate any life insurance, accident insurance, joint annuity, or pension payable to a person other than the surviving spouse.

(3) the value of property owned by the surviving spouse at the decedent's death, plus the value of property transferred by the spouse at any time during marriage to any person other than the decedent which would have been includable in the spouse's augmented estate if the surviving spouse had predeceased the decedent, to the extent the owned or transferred property is derived from the decedent by any means other than testate or intestate succession without a full consideration in money or money's worth. For purposes of this subsection:

(a) property derived from the decedent includes but is not limited to any beneficial interest of the surviving spouse in a trust created by the decedent during his lifetime, any property appointed to the spouse by the decedent's exercise of a general or special power of appointment also exercisable in favor of others than the spouse, any proceeds of insurance (including accidental death benefits) on the life of the decedent attributable to premiums paid by him, any lump sum immediately payable and the commuted value of the proceeds of annuity contracts under which the decedent was the primary annuitant attributable to premiums paid by him, the commuted value of amounts payable after the decedent's death under any public or private pension, disability compensation, death benefit, or retirement plan, exclusive of the federal social security system, by reason of service performed or disabilities incurred by the decedent, any property held at the time of decedent's death by decedent and the surviving spouse with right of survivorship, any property held by decedent and transferred by contract to the surviving spouse by reason of the decedent's death, and the value of the share of the surviving spouse resulting from rights in community property in this or any other state formerly owned with the decedent. Premiums paid by the decedent's employer, his partner, a partnership of which he was a member, or his creditors are deemed to have been paid by the decedent.

(b) property owned by the spouse at the decedent's death is valued as of the date of death. Property transferred by the spouse is valued at the time the transfer became irrevocable or at the decedent's death, whichever occurred first. Income earned by included property prior to the decedent's death is not treated as property derived from the decedent.

(c) property owned by the surviving spouse as of the decedent's death or previously transferred by the surviving spouse is presumed to have been derived from the decedent, except to the extent that the surviving spouse establishes that it was derived from another source.

(4) For the purposes of this section, a bona fide purchaser is a purchaser for value in good faith and without notice of any adverse claim. Any recorded instrument is prima facie evidence that the transfer described therein was made to a bona fide purchaser."

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1981 Amendment: Inserted "to anyone other than a bona fide purchaser" near the beginning of (1), "to a donee" in (1)(d), and "any property held at the time of decedent's death by decedent and the surviving spouse with right of survivorship, any property held by decedent and transferred by contract to the surviving spouse by reason of the decedent's death" near the end of (3)(a), and added (4) defining bona fide purchaser; substituted "2 years" for "3 years" in (1)(d).

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Election From Augmented Estate When Contract Held in Joint Tenancy With Right of Survivorship: Property held by the decedent and the surviving spouse as joint tenants with the right of survivorship is included in an augmented estate only to the extent that the property was derived from decedent without full consideration in money or money's worth. When the record established that a ranch sold under a contract for deed was purchased at least in part with funds gained from the sale of property owned solely by the surviving spouse and that decedent contributed money for ranch payments, it was not error for the District Court to find that the parties contributed equally to the purchase of the ranch. Further, it was not error to deny the surviving spouse an elective share of the estate when the value the surviving spouse received from joint tenancy property derived from decedent more than satisfied the spouse's one-third share of the augmented estate. In re Estate of Lettengarver, 249 M 92, 813 P2d 468, 48 St. Rep. 593 (1991).

No Distribution From Augmented Estate to Remaining Heirs: Personal representatives argued that it was error to fail to distribute the remaining two-thirds of an augmented estate to the son and daughter. However, an augmented estate is merely an accounting device designed to protect a surviving spouse who was a domiciliary against donative transfers by will and will substitutes that would deprive the survivor of a fair share of the estate. The remaining heirs do not receive distributions from an augmented estate. In re Estate of Lettengarver, 249 M 92, 813 P2d 468, 48 St. Rep. 593 (1991).

Valuation of Estate: A dispute arose as to the proper fair market value of decedent's estate for purposes of applying the marital deduction. A hearing was held, and both sides presented testimony of various witnesses with varying valuations. The judge entered findings and conclusions adopting the valuation of one expert as the most credible and convincing. Appellant contended that the court erred by not giving sufficient reason for adopting the valuation, relying on In re the Marriage of Peterson, 195 M 157, 636 P2d 821 (1981). The Supreme Court found substantial evidence in the record to support the judgment, especially based on the expert's experience when compared to the other evidence. Frazier v. Frazier, 208 M 150, 676 P2d 217, 41 St. Rep. 233 (1984).

Widow's Elective Share — Apportionment of Share of Tax Liability: Under former law, the widow's elective intestate share of the decedent's estate was not exempt from payment of a proportionate share of federal estate tax. In re Estate of Mosby, 170 M 463, 554 P2d 1341 (1976).

72-2-223. Right of election personal to surviving spouse — incapacitated surviving spouse.

Official Comments

Subsection (a) [72-2-223(1)]. Subsection (a) [72-2-223(1)] is revised to make it clear that the right of election may be exercised only by or on behalf of a living surviving spouse. If the election is not made by the surviving spouse personally, it can be made on behalf of the surviving spouse by the spouse's conservator, guardian, or agent. In any case, the surviving spouse must be alive when the election is made. The election cannot be made on behalf of a deceased surviving spouse.

Subsections (b) and (c) [Montana adopted alternative subsection (b) as 72-2-223(2)]. If the election is made on behalf of a surviving spouse who is an "incapacitated person," as defined in Section 5-103(7) [72-5-101(1)], that portion of the elective-share and supplemental elective-share amounts which, under Sections 2-207(b) and (c) [72-2-227(2) and (3)], are payable from the decedent's probate and reclaimable estates must go into a custodial trust under the Uniform Custodial Trust Act, as adjusted in subsection (c).

If the election is made on behalf of the surviving spouse by his or her guardian or conservator, the surviving spouse is by definition an "incapacitated person." If the election is made by the surviving spouse's agent under a durable power of attorney, the surviving spouse is presumed to be an "incapacitated person"; the presumption is rebuttable.

The terms of the custodial trust are governed by the Uniform Custodial Trust Act, except as adjusted in subsection (c) [not adopted in Montana].

The custodial trustee is authorized to expend the custodial trust property for the use and benefit of the surviving spouse to the extent the custodial trustee considers it advisable. In determining the amounts, if any, to be expended for the spouse's benefit, the custodial trustee is directed to take into account the spouse's other support, income, and property; these items would include governmental benefits such as Social Security and Medicare.

Bracketed language in subsection (c)(2) [not adopted in Montana] (and in Alternative subsection (b)(1) [72-2-223(2)(a)]) gives enacting states a choice as to whether governmental benefits for which the spouse must qualify on the basis of need, such as Medicaid, are also to be considered. If so, the enacting state should include the bracketed word "and" but not the bracketed phrase "exclusive of" in its enactment; if not, the enacting state should include the bracketed phrase "exclusive of" and not include the bracketed word "and" in its enactment.

At the surviving spouse's death, the remaining custodial trust property does not go to the surviving spouse's estate, but rather under the residuary clause of the will of the predeceased spouse whose probate and reclaimable estates were the source of the property in the custodial trust, as if the predeceased spouse died immediately after the surviving spouse. In the absence of a residuary clause, the property goes to the predeceased spouse's heirs. See Section 2-711 [72-2-721].

Alternative Subsection (b) [Montana adopted this alternative as 72-2-223(2)]. For states that have not enacted the Uniform Custodial Trust Act, an Alternative subsection (b) [72-2-223(2)] is provided under which the court must set aside that portion of the elective-share and supplemental elective-share amounts which, under Sections 2-207(b) and (c) [72-2-227(2) and (3)], are due from the decedent's probate and reclaimable estates and must appoint a trustee to administer that property for the support of the surviving spouse, in accordance with the terms set forth in Alternative subsection (b) [72-2-223(2)].

Planning for an Incapacitated Surviving Spouse Not Disrupted. Note that the portion of the elective-share or supplemental elective-share amounts that go into the custodial or support trust is that portion due from the decedent's probate and reclaimable estates under Sections 2-207(b) and (c) [72-2-227(2) and (3)]. These amounts constitute the involuntary transfers to the surviving spouse under the elective-share system. Amounts voluntarily transferred to the surviving spouse under the decedent's will, by intestacy, or by nonprobate transfer, if any, do not go into the custodial or support trust. Thus, estate planning measures deliberately established for a surviving spouse who is incapacitated are not disrupted. For example, the decedent's will might establish a trust that qualifies for or that can be elected as qualifying for the federal estate tax marital deduction. Although the value of the surviving spouse's interests in such a trust count toward satisfying the elective-share amount under Section 2-207(a)(1) [72-2-227(1)(a)], the trust itself is not dismantled by virtue of Section 2-203(b) [Montana adopted alternative subsection (b) as 72-2-223(2); subsection (c) was not adopted in Montana] in order to force that property into the nonqualifying custodial or support trust.

Rationale. The approach of this section is based on a general expectation that most surviving spouses are, at the least, generally aware of and accept their decedents' overall estate plans and are not antagonistic to them. Consequently, to elect the elective share, and not have the disposition of that part of it that is payable from the decedent's probate and reclaimable estates under Sections 2-207(b) and (c) [72-2-227(2) and (3)] governed by subsections (b) and (c) [Montana adopted alternative subsection (b) as 72-2-223(2); subsection (c) was not adopted in Montana], the surviving spouse must not be an incapacitated person. When the election is made by or on behalf of a surviving spouse who is not an incapacitated person, the surviving spouse has personally signified his or her opposition to the decedent's overall estate plan.

If the election is made on behalf of a surviving spouse who is an incapacitated person, subsections (b) and (c) [Montana adopted alternative subsection (b) as 72-2-223(2); subsection (c) was not adopted in Montana] control the disposition of that part of the elective-share amount or supplemental elective-share amount payable under Sections 2-207(b) and (c) [72-2-227(2) and (3)] from the decedent's probate and reclaimable estates. The purpose of subsections (b) and (c) [Montana adopted alternative subsection (b) as 72-2-223(2); subsection (c) was not adopted in Montana], generally speaking, is to assure that that part of the elective share is devoted to the personal economic benefit and needs of the surviving spouse, but not to the economic benefit of the surviving spouse's heirs or devisees.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 in (2), near middle of first sentence after "decedent's", substituted "nonprobate transfers to others" for "reclaimable estate".

In the case of a protected person, the right of election may be exercised only by order of the court in which protective proceedings as to his property are pending after finding that exercise is necessary to provide adequate support for the protected person during his probable life expectancy."

Incompetent Spouse — Elective Share Requirement — Reasonable Classification: A requirement under this section that an incompetent spouse obtain a court-ordered finding of financial need before she can exercise her right to an elective share of her husband's estate, while a competent spouse is not restricted in any way in exercising the right to an elective share, does not create an arbitrary or unreasonable classification. This section ensures that the spouse will be adequately cared for, thus fulfilling the ultimate purpose of the statute, while denying the incompetent spouse only the discretionary income. 72-2-224. Waiver of right to elect and of other rights.

Official Comments

Apart from minor stylistic changes, this section is revised to incorporate the standards by which the validity of a premarital agreement is determined under the Uniform Premarital Agreement Act § 6 [40-2-608].

The right to homestead allowance, exempt property and family allowance are conferred by the provisions of Part 4. The right to disclaim interests is recognized by Section 2-801 [72-2-811].

The provisions of this section, permitting a spouse or prospective spouse to waive all statutory rights in the other spouse's property, seem desirable in view of the common desire of parties to second and later marriages to insure that property derived from the prior spouse passes at death to the joint children (or descendants) of the prior marriage instead of to the later spouse. The operation of a property settlement in anticipation of separation or divorce as a waiver and renunciation takes care of most situations arising when a spouse dies while a divorce suit is pending.

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Mental Weakness Short of Incapacity Not Sufficient to Invalidate Premarital Agreement: When Mary and Larry were married, Mary was 21 and developmentally disabled and Larry was 62 and in poor health. Larry had three children from a previous marriage. Two days before the marriage, Mary and Larry signed a prenuptial agreement prepared by Larry's attorney that provided that each would keep the individual's separate property, whether owned then or acquired thereafter, free from any claim of the other by virtue of the marriage. Two years later, Larry died, and Mary brought an action to challenge the enforcement of the premarital agreement on grounds that, because of her disability, she was incapable of understanding the agreement and thus could not have given the required consent. The District Court found that Mary was mentally competent to understand the agreement when she signed it and that the contract was valid. The Supreme Court applied Gen. Motors v. Jackson, 900 P2d 345 (Nev. 1995), for the proposition that a person is mentally defective for purposes of capacity when the party, for any reason, is incapable of understanding the force and effect of the agreement, but that a mere mental weakness short of incapacity does not invalidate the agreement because capacity deals with the ability to understand the terms of the agreement, not a person's actual understanding. Capacity relates to the status of the person rather than the circumstances surrounding the transaction. Mary attended special education classes, but nevertheless graduated from high school. She could read and write, although poorly, and could drive a car, although she had no license. Absent any medical or expert testimony regarding Mary's level of competency, the District Court relied on lay testimony, including Mary's, to determine whether Mary met the burden of establishing incompetence. Substantial evidence supported the court's conclusion that Mary failed to meet her burden of proof, and the Supreme Court affirmed the validity of the premarital contract. Wilkes v. Estate of Wilkes, 2001 MT 118, 305 M 335, 27 P3d 433 (2001).

No Finding of Unconscionability in Premarital Agreement: When Mary and Larry were married, Mary was 21 and developmentally disabled and Larry was 62 and in poor health. Larry had three children from a previous marriage. Two days before the marriage, Mary and Larry signed a prenuptial agreement prepared by Larry's attorney that provided that each would keep the individual's separate property, whether owned then or acquired thereafter, free from any claim of the other by virtue of the marriage. Two years later, Larry died, and Mary brought an action to challenge the enforcement of the premarital agreement on grounds that the agreement was unconscionable. The District Court concluded that although Mary's circumstances were not enviable in some respects, it was logical that Larry would desire to, and had the right to, protect the assets that he acquired during a lifetime of work and pass them on to his children. The mere fact that Mary functioned at a low intellectual level did not make it less conscionable that she would keep only what she brought to the marriage and share only whatever assets might have been added to the marital estate had the marriage lasted longer. The court properly applied the guidelines in this section, and absent clear error, the validity of the premarital agreement was affirmed. Wilkes v. Estate of Wilkes, 2001 MT 118, 305 M 335, 27 P3d 433 (2001).

Antenuptial Agreement Enforceable if Contract Conditions Met — Burden of Surviving Spouse to Prove Invalidity of Waiver and Absence of Fair Disclosure: Generally, an antenuptial agreement is valid and enforceable between two consenting parties if the agreement meets the requirements of a contract. Under 26-1-401, the party asserting a right in a case bears the burden of proving each of the material allegations of the cause of action. Thus, antenuptial agreements receive the same scrutiny as any other contract, except that there is an additional requirement of fair disclosure imposed on both parties in recognition of the confidential relationship between them. Therefore, the burden is on the surviving spouse to prove an invalid contractual waiver and to prove the absence of fair disclosure. Here, the surviving wife did not meet these burdens of proof, and the District Court did not err in holding that an antenuptial agreement was valid, precluding the wife from collecting a homestead allowance, an exempt property allowance, a family allowance, or an elective share from the husband's estate. Wiley v. Iverson, 1999 MT 214, 295 M 511, 985 P2d 1176, 56 St. Rep. 838 (1999). See also In re Estate of Lopata, 641 P2d 952 (Colo. 1982), and In re Estate of Thies, 273 M 272, 903 P2d 186, 52 St. Rep. 970 (1995).

Prenuptial Agreement — Recitation of Full Disclosure of Assets Held Sufficient: Before Everett and Eleanor were married, they executed a prenuptial agreement containing a statement that each party had disclosed assets to the other. Upon Everett's death, Eleanor attempted to elect against Everett's will and produced evidence that although she had signed the agreement containing the disclosure statement, there in fact had been no disclosure but that she had chosen not to raise the issue at the time that the prenuptial agreement was signed. The Supreme Court held that 72-2-102 (renumbered 72-2-224) did not require a written disclosure or listing of the parties' assets, that the statute was complied with in this case by inclusion of the recitation of disclosure, and that the District Court was entitled to determine the credibility of Eleanor's testimony. The Supreme Court also held that the Uniform Prenuptial Agreement Act (Uniform Premarital Agreement Act) did not apply to the case before the court because the Act was not in force at the time that the agreement was entered into. DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Renunciation to Be Clear and Unequivocal: A renunciation of property rights or interests under this section must be clear and unequivocal. Breidenbach v. Wedum, 233 M 478, 760 P2d 1237, 45 St. Rep. 1658 (1988), distinguished in In re Estate of Thies, 273 M 272, 903 P2d 186, 52 St. Rep. 970 (1995).

Will Provisions — Improper Consideration of Waiver of Property Rights in Distribution of Marital Property: It was improper for the District Court to find that wife's signing of a release of claims to husband's property, as part of her will, and contingent upon husband's death, constituted a waiver of property rights upon dissolution of marriage. In re Marriage of Dow, 230 M 416, 750 P2d 1064, 45 St. Rep. 317 (1988).

Waiver of Homestead Allowance and Right to Exempt Property by Agreement: An agreement wherein the beneficiaries of a will ambiguously delineated how property was to be divided did not specify that a homestead allowance or exempt property was to go to the decedent's wife. The trial court properly ruled that the wife waived her right to the allowance and property by agreement, despite her contentions that there was no fair disclosure of her rights since she was not aware of the allowance or exempt property. The Supreme Court noted that neither party was aware of the allowance or exempt property and that since the wife was represented by counsel at the time of agreement, the contractual ambiguity should be interpreted against her under 28-3-206. In re Estate of Flasted, 228 M 85, 741 P2d 750, 44 St. Rep. 1362 (1987), distinguished in In re Estate of Thies, 273 M 272, 903 P2d 186, 52 St. Rep. 970 (1995).

Divorce Decree Procured by Fraud — Effect of Death: After the decree in a divorce action, death of one of the parties does not deprive the Trial Court of its power to purge its records of a void or voidable decree procured by fraud. Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 M 7, 594 P2d 324 (1979).

Official Comments

This section is revised to coordinate the terminology with that used in revised Section 2-202 [72-2-222] and with the fact that an election can be made by a conservator, guardian, or agent on behalf of a surviving spouse, as provided in Section 2-203(a) [72-2-223(1)].

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 in (1), in third sentence, and in two places in (2), after "decedent's", substituted "nonprobate transfers to others" for "reclaimable estate".

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted (1) concerning notice of time and place of election for former (1) that read: "The surviving spouse may elect to take his elective share in the augmented estate by filing in the court and mailing or delivering to the personal representative, if any, a petition for the elective share within 9 months after the date of death or within 6 months after the probate of the decedent's will, whichever limitation last expires. However, the nonprobate transfers described in 72-2-705(1) shall not be included within the augmented estate for the purpose of computing the elective share if the petition is filed later than 9 months after death. The court may extend the time for election as it sees fit for cause shown by the surviving spouse before the time for election has expired"; substituted (2) imposing 9-month limit on time for petition for former (2) that read: "The surviving spouse shall give notice of the time and place set for hearing to persons interested in the estate and to the distributees and recipients of portions of the augmented net estate whose interests will be adversely affected by the taking of the elective share"; in (4), near beginning of first sentence, substituted "elective-share and supplemental elective-share amounts" for "amount of the elective share" and in last sentence inserted reference to 72-2-227; and made minor changes in style.

1981 Amendment: Deleted "net" following "augmented" near beginning of (1); extended the time for filing the petition for elective share from 6 to 9 months after the date of death or within 6 months after probate; and inserted next to last sentence in (1) concerning nonprobate transfers.

72-2-226. Effect of election on statutory benefits.

Official Comments

The title of this section is revised to correspond to the section's content.

The homestead, exempt property, and family allowances provided by Article II, Part 4 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 4], are not charged to the electing spouse as a part of the elective share. Consequently, these allowances may be distributed from the probate estate without reference to whether an elective share right is asserted.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning effect of election on statutory benefits for former text that read: "A surviving spouse is entitled to homestead allowance, exempt property, and family allowance whether or not he elects to take an elective share."

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1989 Amendment: Deleted former (1) that read: "(1) The surviving spouse's election of his elective share does not affect the share of the surviving spouse under the provisions of the decedent's will or intestate succession unless the surviving spouse also expressly renounces in the petition for an elective share the benefit of all or any of the provisions. If any provision is so renounced, the property or other benefit which would otherwise have passed to the surviving spouse thereunder is treated, subject to contribution under 72-2-706(2), as if the surviving spouse had predeceased the testator."

72-2-227. Sources from which elective share payable.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. Section 2-207 [72-2-227], as revised, is an integral part of the overall redesign of the elective share. It establishes the priority to be used in determining the source of the elective-share amount.

Subsection (a) [72-2-227(1)]. Subsection (a) [72-2-227(1)] applies only to the elective-share amount determined under Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)], not to the supplemental elective-share amount determined under Section 2-201(b) [72-2-221(2)]. Under subsection (a) [72-2-227(1)], the following are counted first toward satisfying the elective-share amount (to the extent they are included in the augmented estate):

(1) amounts that pass or have passed to the surviving spouse by testate or intestate succession;

(2) amounts included in the augmented estate under Section 2-202(b)(3) [72-2-222(2)(c)], i.e., the value of property to which the surviving spouse succeeds by reason of the decedent's death (other than by homestead allowance, exempt property, family allowance, testate succession, or intestate succession), including the proceeds of insurance (including accidental death benefits) on the life of the decedent and benefits payable under a retirement plan in which the decedent was a participant, exclusive of the Federal Social Security system.

(3) amounts that would have passed to the spouse but were disclaimed, the theory being that the spouse is not compelled to accept the benefits devised by the decedent, but if these benefits are rejected, the values involved are charged to the electing spouse as if the devises were accepted, and

(4) amounts included in the augmented estate under Section 2-202(b)(4) [72-2-222(2)(d)] up to the applicable percentage thereof, the applicable percentage being twice the elective-share percentage as determined under Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)]. (The phrase "amounts included in the augmented estate under Section 2-202(b)(4) [72-2-222(2)(d)]" refers to the value of property owned by the surviving spouse at the decedent's death, reduced by enforceable claims against that property or that spouse, plus the value of property that would have been includible in the spouse's reclaimable estate had the surviving spouse predeceased the decedent.)

If the combined value of these amounts equals or exceeds the elective-share amount, the surviving spouse is not entitled to any further amount from the decedent's probate estate or recipients of the decedent's reclaimable estate, unless the surviving spouse is entitled to a supplemental elective-share amount under Section 2-201(b) [72-2-221(2)].

Subsections (b) and (c) [72-2-227(2) and (3)]. Subsections (b) and (c) [72-2-227(2) and (3)] apply to both the elective-share amount and the supplemental elective-share amount, if any. As to the elective-share amount determined under Section 2-201(a) [72-2-221(1)], the decedent's probate and reclaimable estates become liable only if and to the extent that the amounts described in subsection (a) [72-2-227(1)] are insufficient to satisfy the elective-share amount. The decedent's probate and reclaimable estates are fully liable for the supplemental elective-share amount determined under Section 2-201(b) [72-2-221(2)], if any.

Subsections (b) and (c) [72-2-227(2) and (3)] establish a layer of priority within the decedent's probate and reclaimable estates. The decedent's probate estate and that portion of the decedent's reclaimable estate that was not irrevocably transferred within two years before the decedent's death are liable first. Only if and to the extent that those amounts are insufficient does the remaining portion of the decedent's reclaimable estate become liable.

Note that the exempt property and allowances provided by Sections 2-401 [72-2-411], 2-402 [72-2-412], and 2-403 [72-2-413] are not charged against, but are in addition to the elective-share and supplemental elective-share amounts.

Compiler's Comments

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 throughout section substituted "nonprobate transfers to others" for "reclaimable estate"; in (1)(a), after "estate", inserted "under 72-2-222(2)(a)"; in (2), in first sentence after "amounts", substituted "included under 72-2-222(2)(b)(iii)(A) or (2)(b)(iii)(B)" for "irrevocably transferred within 2 years before the decedent's death"; deleted (4) that read: "(4) Only original recipients of the reclaimable estate described in 72-2-222(2)(b) and the donees of the recipients of the reclaimable estate to the extent the donees have the property or its proceeds are liable to make a proportional contribution toward satisfaction of the surviving spouse's elective-share or supplemental elective-share amount. A person liable to contribution may choose to give up the proportional part of the reclaimable estate or to pay the value of the amount for which the person is liable"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning charging a spouse with owned assets and gifts received and charging others for the balance of the elective share for former text that read: "(1) In the proceeding for an elective share, values included in the augmented estate which pass or have passed to the surviving spouse, or which would have passed to the spouse but were renounced, are applied first to satisfy the elective share and to reduce any contributions due from other recipients of transfers included in the augmented estate. For purposes of this subsection, the electing spouse's beneficial interest in any life estate or in any trust shall be computed as if worth one-half of the total value of the property subject to the life estate, or of the trust estate, unless higher or lower values for these interests are established by proof.

(2) Remaining property of the augmented estate is so applied that liability for the balance of the elective share of the surviving spouse is equitably apportioned among the recipients of the augmented estate in proportion to the value of their interests therein.

(3) Only original transferees from or appointees of the decedent and their donees, to the extent the donees have the property or its proceeds, are subject to the contribution to make up the elective share of the surviving spouse. A person liable to contribution may choose to give up the property transferred to him or to pay its value as of the time it is considered in computing the augmented estate."

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1981 Amendment: Substituted "values included in" for "property which is part of"; substituted "or which would have passed to the spouse but were renounced" for "by testate or intestate succession or other means and which has not been renounced, including that described in 72-2-705(3)"; substituted "any contributions due" for "the amount due"; substituted "transfers included in" for "portions of"; and added the final sentence in (1) relating to the method of computing electing spouse's beneficial interest.

Election From Augmented Estate When Contract Held in Joint Tenancy With Right of Survivorship: Property held by the decedent and the surviving spouse as joint tenants with the right of survivorship is included in an augmented estate only to the extent that the property was derived from decedent without full consideration in money or money's worth. When the record established that a ranch sold under a contract for deed was purchased at least in part with funds gained from the sale of property owned solely by the surviving spouse and that decedent contributed money for ranch payments, it was not error for the District Court to find that the parties contributed equally to the purchase of the ranch. Further, it was not error to deny the surviving spouse an elective share of the estate when the value the surviving spouse received from joint tenancy property derived from decedent more than satisfied the spouse's one-third share of the augmented estate. Part 3
Spouse and Children Unprovided for in Wills

72-2-331. Entitlement of spouse — premarital will.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of the Revisions. This section applies only to a premarital will, a will executed prior to the testator's marriage to his or her surviving spouse. If the decedent and the surviving spouse were married to each other more than once, a premarital will is a will executed by the decedent at any time when they were not married to each other but not a will executed during a prior marriage. This section reflects the view that the intestate share of the spouse in that portion of the testator's estate not devised to certain of the testator's children, under trust or not, (or that is not devised to their descendants, under trust or not, or does not pass to their descendants under the antilapse statute) is what the testator would want the spouse to have if he or she had thought about the relationship of his or her old will to the new situation.

Under this section, a surviving spouse who married the testator after the testator executed his or her will may be entitled to a certain minimum amount of the testator's estate. The surviving spouse's entitlement under this section, if any, is granted automatically; it need not be elected. If the surviving spouse exercises his or her right to take an elective share, amounts provided under this section count toward making up the elective-share amount by virtue of the language in subsection (a) [72-2-331(1)] stating that the amount provided by this section is treated as "an intestate share." Under Section 2-207(a)(1) [72-2-227(1)(a)], amounts passing to the surviving spouse by intestate succession count first toward making up the spouse's elective-share amount.

Subsection (a) [72-2-331(1)]. Subsection (a) [72-2-331(1)] is revised to make it clear that a surviving spouse who, by a premarital will, is devised, under trust or not, less than the share of the testator's estate he or she would have received had the testator died intestate as to that part of the estate, if any, not devised to certain of the testator's children, under trust or not, (or that is not devised to their descendants, under trust or not, or does not pass to their descendants under the antilapse statute) is entitled to be brought up to that share. The pre-1990 version of Section 2-301 [72-2-331] was titled "Omitted Spouse," and the section used phrases such as "fails to provide" and "omitted spouse." The implication of the title and these phrases was that the section was inapplicable if the person the decedent later married was a devisee in his or her premarital will. It was clear, however, from the underlying purpose of the section that this was not intended. The courts recognized this and refused to interpret the section that way, but in doing so they have been forced to say that a premarital will containing a devise to the person to whom the testator was married at death could still be found to "fail to provide" for the survivor in the survivor's capacity as spouse. See Estate of Christensen, 665 P.2d 646 (Utah 1982); Estate of Ganier, 418 So.2d 256 (Fla. 1982); Note, "The Problem of the 'Un-omitted' Spouse Under Section 2-301 of the [Pre-1990] Uniform Probate Code," 52 U. Chi. L. Rev. 481 (1985). By making the existence and amount of a premarital devise to the spouse irrelevant, the revisions of subsection (a) [72-2-331(1)] make the operation of the statute more purposive.

Subsection (a)(1), (2), and (3) Exceptions [72-2-331(1)(a), (1)(b), and (1)(c)]. The moving party has the burden of proof on the exceptions contained in subsections (a)(1), (2), and (3) [72-2-331(1)(a), (1)(b), and (1)(c)]. For a case interpreting the language of subsection (a)(3) [72-2-331(1)(c)], see Estate of Bartell, 776 P.2d 885 (Utah 1989). This section can be barred by a premarital agreement, marital agreement, or waiver as provided in Section 2-204 [72-2-224].

Subsection (b) [72-2-331(2)]. Subsection (b) [72-2-331(2)] is also revised to provide that the value of any premarital devise to the surviving spouse, equitable or legal, is used first to satisfy the spouse's entitlement under this section, before any other devises suffer abatement. This revision is made necessary by the revision of subsection (a) [72-2-331(1)]: If the existence or amount of a premarital devise to the surviving spouse is irrelevant, any such devise must be counted toward and not be in addition to the ultimate share to which the spouse is entitled. Normally, a devise in favor of the person whom the testator later marries will be a specific or general devise, not a residuary devise. The effect under the pre-1990 version of subsection (b) [72-2-331(2)] was that the surviving spouse could take the intestate share under Section 2-301 [72-2-331], which in the pre-1990 version was satisfied out of the residue (under the rules of abatement in Section 3-902 [72-3-901]), plus the devise in his or her favor. The revision of subsection (b) [72-2-331(2)] prevents this "double dipping," so to speak.

Reference. The theory of this section is discussed in Waggoner, "The Multiple-Marriage Society and Spousal Rights Under the Revised Uniform Probate Code," 76 Iowa L. Rev. 223, 253-55 (1991).

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 in (1), near end after "devised", inserted "to the descendant of such a child" and after "72-2-614 to" inserted "such a child or to".

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning the entitlement of a spouse who marries testator after the execution of a will for former text that read: "(1) If a testator fails to provide by will for his surviving spouse who married the testator after the execution of the will, the omitted spouse shall receive the same share of the estate he would have received if the decedent left no will unless it appears from the will that the omission was intentional or the testator provided for the spouse by transfer outside the will and the intent that the transfer be in lieu of a testamentary provision is shown by statements of the testator or from the amount of the transfer or other evidence.

(2) In satisfying a share provided by this section, the devises made by the will abate as provided in 72-3-901."

72-2-332. Omitted children.

Official Comments

This section provides for both the case where a child was born or adopted after the execution of the will and not foreseen at the time and thus not provided for in the will, and the rare case where a testator omits one of his or her children because of the mistaken belief that the child is dead.

Basic Purposes and Scope of Revisions. This section is substantially revised. The revisions have two basic objectives. The first basic objective is to provide that a will that devised, under trust or not, all or substantially all of the testator's estate to the other parent of the omitted child prevents an after-born or after-adopted child from taking an intestate share if none of the testator's children was living when he or she executed the will. (Under this rule, the other parent must survive the testator and be entitled to take under the will.)

Under the pre-1990 Code [1990 Code adopted in Montana in 1993], such a will prevented the omitted child's entitlement only if the testator had one or more children living when he or she executed the will. The rationale for the revised rule is found in the empirical evidence (cited in the Comment to Section 2-102 [72-2-112]) that suggests that even testators with children tend to devise their entire estates to their surviving spouses, especially in smaller estates. The testator's purpose is not to disinherit the children; rather, such a will evidences a purpose to trust the surviving parent to use the property for the benefit of the children, as appropriate. This attitude of trust of the surviving parent carries over to the case where none of the children have been born when the will is executed.

The second basic objective of the revisions is to provide that if the testator had children when he or she executed the will, and if the will made provision for one or more of the then-living children, an omitted after-born or after-adopted child does not take a full intestate share (which might be substantially larger or substantially smaller than given to the living children). Rather, the omitted after-born or after-adopted child participates on a pro rata basis in the property devised, under trust or not, to the then-living children.

A more detailed description of the revised rules follows.

No Child Living When Will Executed. If the testator had no child living when he or she executed the will, subsection (a)(1) [72-2-332(1)(a)] provides that an omitted after-born or after-adopted child receives the share he or she would have received had the testator died intestate, unless the will devised, under trust or not, all or substantially all of the estate to the other parent of the omitted child. If the will did devise, under trust or not, all or substantially all of the estate to the other parent of the omitted child, and if that other parent survives the testator and is entitled to take under the will, the omitted after-born or after-adopted child receives no share of the estate. In the case of an after-adopted child, the term "other parent" refers to the other adopting parent. (The other parent of the omitted child might survive the testator, but not be entitled to take under the will because, for example, that devise, under trust or not, to the other parent was revoked under Section 2-803 [72-2-813] or 2-804 [72-2-814].)

One or More Children Living When Will Executed. If the testator had one or more children living when the will was executed, subsection (a)(2) [72-2-332(1)(b)], which implements the second basic objective stated above, provides that an omitted after-born or after-adopted child only receives a share of the testator's estate if the testator's will devised property or an equitable or legal interest in property to one or more of the children living at the time the will was executed; if not, the omitted after-born or after-adopted child receives nothing.

Subsection (a)(2) [72-2-332(1)(b)] is modelled on N.Y. Est. Powers & Trusts Law § 5-3.2. Subsection (a)(2) [72-2-332(1)(b)] is illustrated by the following example.

Example. When G executed her will, she had two living children, A and B. Her will devised $7,500 to each child. After G executed her will, she had another child, C.

C is entitled to $5,000. $2,500 (1/3 of $7,500) of C's entitlement comes from A's $7,500 devise (reducing it to $5,000); and $2,500 (1/3 of $7,500) comes from B's $7,500 devise (reducing it to $5,000).

Variation. If G's will had devised $10,000 to A and $5,000 to B, C would be entitled to $5,000. $3,333 (1/3 of $10,000) of C's entitlement comes from A's $10,000 devise (reducing it to $6,667); and $1,667 (1/3 of $5,000) comes from B's $5,000 devise (reducing it to $3,333).

Subsection (b) Exceptions [72-2-332(2)]. To preclude operation of subsection (a)(1) or (a)(2) [72-2-332(1)(a) or (1)(b)], the testator's will need not make any provision, even nominal in amount, for a testator's present or future children; under subsection (b)(1) [72-2-332(2)(a)], except for a child omitted solely because believed dead (see Comment to subsection (c) [72-2-332(3)]), a simple recital in the will that the testator intends to make no provision for then living children or any the testator thereafter may have would be sufficient.

For a case applying the language of subsection (b)(2) [72-2-332(2)(b)], in the context of the omitted spouse provision, see Estate of Bartell, 776 P.2d 885 (Utah 1989).

The moving party has the burden of proof on the elements of subsections (b)(1) and (b)(2) [72-2-332(2)(a) and (2)(b)].

Subsection (c) [72-2-332(3)]. Subsection (c) [72-2-332(3)] addresses the problem that arises if at the time of execution of the will the testator fails to provide in his or her will for a living child solely because he or she believes the child to be dead. Extrinsic evidence is admissible to determine whether the testator omitted the living child solely because he or she believed the child to be dead. Cf. Section 2-601 [72-2-611], Comment. If the child was omitted solely because of that belief, the child is entitled to share in the estate as if the child were an omitted after-born or after-adopted child. Under subsection (b) [72-2-332(2)], however, subsection (c) [72-2-332(3)] does not apply: (1) if it appears from the will that the omission was intentional, i.e., if it appears from the will that the testator would not have provided for the child had the child been alive; or (2) if the testator provided for the child by transfer outside the will and the intent that the transfer be in lieu of a testamentary provision is shown by the testator's statements or is reasonably inferred from the amount of the transfer or other evidence. Under subsection (b)(1) [72-2-332(2)(a)], a simple recital in the will that the testator intends to make no provision for then living children or for a specific child is insufficient to render subsection (c) [72-2-332(3)] inapplicable to a child the testator then believed to be dead because the intention to omit would be based on a false premise. Extrinsic evidence would be admissible because the language in such a case would be rendered ambiguous by the circumstance that the testator then believed the child to be dead. Cf. Section 2-601 [72-2-611], Comment. Subsection (c) [72-2-332(3)], however, would be inapplicable if the will itself stated or if extrinsic evidence establishes that the testator would not have provided for the child had the child been alive.

Abatement Under Subsection (d) [72-2-332(4)]. Under subsection (d) [72-2-332(4)] and Section 3-902 [72-3-901], any intestate estate would first be applied to satisfy the intestate share of an omitted after-born or after-adopted child under subsection (a)(1) [72-2-332(1)(a)].

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 in (2) deleted reference to subsection (3); in (3), at beginning, deleted "Except as provided in subsection (2)"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning failure of testator to provide for certain of testator's children for former text that read: "(1) If a testator fails to provide in his will for any of his children born or adopted after the execution of his will, the omitted child receives a share in the estate equal in value to that which he would have received if the testator had died intestate unless:

(a) it appears from the will that the omission was intentional;

(b) when the will was executed the testator had one or more children and devised substantially all his estate to the other parent of the omitted child; or

(c) the testator provided for the child by transfer outside the will and the intent that the transfer be in lieu of a testamentary provision is shown by statements of the testator or from the amount of the transfer or other evidence.

(2) If at the time of execution of the will the testator fails to provide in his will for a living child solely because he believes the child to be dead, the child receives a share in the estate equal in value to that which he would have received if the testator had died intestate.

(3) In satisfying a share provided by this section, the devises made by the will abate as provided in 72-3-901."

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 2-302.

Case Notes

Determination That Decedent Died Intestate Not Erroneous: Bradshaw's mother contended that Bradshaw executed a valid holographic will in 1988 and introduced the document into evidence. Pursuant to the document, Bradshaw left his vehicle to a nephew and the rest of his estate to be equally divided among his mother, father, brother, and sister. The District Court held that the document was not submitted into evidence as a holographic will and that Bradshaw died intestate. Bradshaw's two sons were born in 1992 and 1995. Under this section, children born after the making of a will who are not provided for in the will take as if the decedent died intestate. Therefore, even if the document had been properly submitted as a holographic will, the children, in the absence of a surviving spouse, were entitled to Bradshaw's estate. In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001).

Claim of Omitted Child Summarily Dismissed — Failure to Present Evidence of Mistaken Belief of Death of Child: Scotty Prescott married Howard Putman in 1946, and they had a son, William, in 1949. Scotty later found out that Howard's previous marriage had not been dissolved when they married, and Scotty was granted an annulment in 1954. She remained in Montana, attending Montana State College, and Howard moved to California with William. Aside from two letters in 1954, there was no evidence of any contact among Scotty, Howard, and William. William had no independent recollection of his mother and never attempted to contact her during the remaining 42 years of her life. Scotty executed a will in 1985, bequeathing the profits from the sale of her ranch to the college, the remainder of her estate to the Museum of the Rockies, and nothing to William, who later asserted that he was entitled to a share of the estate pursuant to this section because Scotty mistakenly believed that he was dead. In a nonsubstantial revision of the will in 1991, Scotty had stated that "the line of succession for this branch of the Prescott family ends with me", which William contended raised a question of material fact as to whether his mother believed him to be dead. However, the statement was not made until 6 years after the will was executed and was consistent with the separate way that they lived their lives. Further, the record was replete with uncontroverted proof that the disposition of Scotty's estate was consistent with her intention stated as early as 1964 to endow the college and did not indicate that William was omitted from the will solely because Scotty believed him to be dead. In the absence of sufficient evidence required by subsection (3) of this section proving that William was an omitted child, the District Court correctly dismissed

William's claim by summary judgment. In re Estate of Prescott, 2000 MT 200, 300 M 469, 8 P3d 88, 57 St. Rep. 779 (2000).

Part 4
Exempt Property and Allowances

Part Official Comments

GENERAL COMMENT

For decedents who die domiciled in this State, this part grants various allowances to the decedent's surviving spouse and certain children. The allowances have priority over unsecured creditors of the estate and persons to whom the estate may be devised by will. If there is a surviving spouse, all of the allowances described in this Part [Title 72, chapter 2, part 4], which (as revised to adjust for inflation) total $25,000, plus whatever is allowed to the spouse for support during administration, normally pass to the spouse. If the surviving spouse and minor or dependent children live apart from one another, the minor or dependent children may receive some of the support allowance. If there is no surviving spouse, minor or dependent children become entitled to the homestead exemption of $15,000 and to support allowances. The exempt property section confers rights on the spouse, if any, or on all children, to $10,000 in certain chattels, or funds if the unencumbered value of chattels is below the $10,000 level. This provision is designed in part to relieve a personal representative of the duty to sell household chattels when there are children who will have them.

These family protection provisions supply the basis for the important small estate provisions of Article III, Part 12 [Title 72, chapter 3, part 11].

States adopting the Code may see fit to alter the dollar amounts suggested in these sections, or to vary the terms and conditions in other ways so as to accommodate existing traditions. Although creditors of estates would be aided somewhat if all family exemption provisions relating to probate estates were the same throughout the country, there is probably less need for uniformity of law regarding these provisions than for any of the other parts of this article. Still, it is quite important for all states to limit their homestead, support allowance and exempt property provisions, if any, so that they apply only to estates of decedents who were domiciliaries of the state.

Cross Reference. Notice that under Section 2-104 [72-2-114] a spouse or child claiming under this Part must survive the decedent by 120 hours.

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

State Probate Jurisdiction of Federal Claim — Homestead Exemption — Priority of Liens: Creditor obtained a default judgment in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York against an Alaska resident and attempted to execute on property in Montana that had subsequently come under Montana's exclusive probate jurisdiction. While the federal court retained jurisdiction over claims impacting the estate, the court could not seize and control property in the possession of the state probate court. It was within the jurisdiction of the state court to determine that the real property was subject to family protection allowances and exempt from execution. Although the lien was attached prior to debtor's death, the lien was extinguished upon the exercise of the family protection allowances, and the homestead allowance was exempt from and had priority over all other claims against the estate. In re Estate of Wilhelm, 233 M 255, 760 P2d 718, 45 St. Rep. 1468 (1988).

No Statutory Claim-Filing Requirement for Homestead Allowance to Vest: The homestead allowance vests as a matter of law in the surviving spouse upon his outliving the deceased by 120 hours. The filing of a claim for the homestead allowance is not a condition of its vesting. In re the Estate of Heiser, 207 M 126, 672 P2d 1124, 40 St. Rep. 1941 (1983).

72-2-412. Homestead allowance.

Official Comments

As originally adopted in 1969, the bracketed dollar amount was $5,000. To adjust for inflation, the bracketed amount was increased to $15,000 in 1990.

See Section 2-802 [72-2-812] for the definition of "spouse," which controls in this Part. Also, see Section 2-104. Waiver of homestead is covered by Section 2-204 [72-2-224]. "Election" between a provision of a will and homestead is not required unless the will so provides.

A set dollar amount for homestead allowance was dictated by the desirability of having a certain level below which administration may be dispensed with or be handled summarily, without regard to the size of allowances under Section 2-404 [72-2-414]. The "small estate" line is controlled largely, though not entirely, by the size of the homestead allowance. This is because Part 12 of Article III [Title 72, chapter 3, part 11] dealing with small estates rests on the assumption that the only justification for keeping a decedent's assets from his creditors is to benefit the decedent's spouse and children.

Another reason for a set amount is related to the fact that homestead allowance may prefer a decedent's minor or dependent children over his or her other children. It was felt desirable to minimize the consequence of application of an arbitrary age line among children of the decedent.

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Right of Surviving Spouse to Homestead Allowance as Matter of Law: The primary purpose of the homestead allowance is to protect a decedent's family and ensure that the surviving spouse is not left penniless and abandoned by the death of a spouse. The plain statutory language creates an absolute benefit to the surviving spouse, and a District Court has no discretion to disallow or limit the homestead allowance. The only statutory condition for receipt of the homestead allowance by the surviving spouse is that the spouse survive the decedent by 120 hours, as provided in 72-2-712. There is no other requirement, qualification, or condition to receipt of the allowance by the surviving spouse, such as a showing of financial need. The definition of the homestead exception in Montana property law, 70-32-101, is unrelated to the homestead allowance under the Uniform Probate Code in this section, so the definition in 70-32-101 does not override otherwise inconsistent language in this section. Because the homestead allowance is an interest that may be satisfied in any type of property, it may be claimed from assets other than the dwelling house or land. It is an allowance off the top, which grants the decedent's family a vested interest apart from and in addition to any other rights flowing from the estate. Purpose of Allowances — Certain Defenses Not Allowed: Estate of Lawson appealed from District Court order to pay homestead allowance of $20,000 and family allowance of $500 a month to Karen Lawson, contending that defenses of setoff, satisfaction, payment, and abandonment should be available against statutory claims under 72-2-801 through 72-2-803 (renumbered 72-2-412 through 72-2-414). The Supreme Court stated that the purpose of allowances was to ensure that surviving spouse was not left penniless and abandoned by death of spouse. Allowances were not designed to support family members until they shared in the estate, regardless of whether they did or did not share in the estate. Accordingly, defenses asserted by the estate, if they could be proved, should not be allowed as matter of policy. Additionally, the District Court correctly refused to determine if the estate was legally entitled to setoff until after ownership of property had been determined and property had been valued by appraiser. Homestead Allowance — Exempt Property — Fee Interest: Sections 72-2-801 (renumbered 72-2-412) and 72-2-802 (renumbered 72-2-413), giving a homestead allowance and exempt property rights to a surviving spouse, contemplate an interest that does not terminate at the surviving spouse's death so long as the spouse survives the decedent for the required 120 hours under 72-2-205 (renumbered 72-2-114). 72-2-413. Exempt property.

Official Comments

As originally adopted in 1969, the dollar amount exempted was set at $3,500. To adjust for inflation, the amount was increased to $10,000 in 1990.

Unlike the exempt amount described in Sections 2-402 [72-2-412] and 2-404 [72-2-414], the exempt amount described in this section is available in a case in which the decedent left no spouse but left only adult children. The provision in this section that establishes priorities is required because of possible difference between beneficiaries of the exemptions described in this section and those described in Sections 2-402 [72-2-412] and 2-404 [72-2-414].

Section 2-204 [72-2-224] covers waiver of exempt property rights. This section indicates that a decedent's will may put a spouse to an election with reference to exemptions, but that no election is presumed to be required.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 throughout section increased amount of exempt property to $10,000 from $3,500; in first sentence substituted "decedent's surviving spouse" for "surviving spouse of a decedent who was domiciled in this state"; and made minor changes in style.

Right of Disinherited Child to Exempt Property Allowance: The decedent died testate and specifically left nothing to her son. The decedent's husband predeceased her. The son argued that he was entitled to $3,500 exempt property under this section. The court held that the will of the decedent merely disinherited her son. It did nothing to his statutory right to exempt property. In re Estate of Dunlap, 199 M 488, 649 P2d 1303, 39 St. Rep. 1550 (1982).

Homestead Allowance — Exempt Property — Fee Interest: Sections 72-2-801 (renumbered 72-2-412) and 72-2-802 (renumbered 72-2-413), giving a homestead allowance and exempt property rights to a surviving spouse, contemplate an interest that does not terminate at the surviving spouse's death so long as the spouse survives the decedent for the required 120 hours under 72-2-205 (renumbered 72-2-114). In re Estate of Merkel, 190 M 78, 618 P2d 872, 37 St. Rep. 1782 (1980).

72-2-414. Family allowance.

Official Comments

The allowance provided by this section does not qualify for the marital deduction under the federal estate tax because the interest is a non-deductible terminable interest. A broad code must be drafted to provide the best possible protection for the family in all cases, even though this may not provide desired tax advantages for certain larger estates. In the estates falling in the federal estate tax bracket where careful planning may be expected, it is important to the operation of formula clauses that the family allowance be clearly deductible or clearly non-deductible. With the section clearly creating a non-deductible interest, estate planners can create a plan that will operate with certainty. Finally, in order to facilitate administration of this allowance without court supervision it is necessary to provide a fairly simple and definite framework.

In determining the amount of the family allowance, account should be taken of both the previous standard of living and the nature of other resources available to the family to meet current living expenses until the estate can be administered and assets distributed. While the death of the principal income producer may necessitate some change in the standard of living, there must also be a period of adjustment. If the surviving spouse has a substantial income, this may be taken into account. Whether life insurance proceeds payable in a lump sum or periodic installments were intended by the decedent to be used for the period of adjustment or to be conserved as capital may be considered. A living trust may provide the needed income without resorting to the probate estate.

Obviously, need is relative to the circumstances, and what is reasonable must be decided on the basis of the facts of each individual case. Note, however, that under the next section the personal representative may not determine an allowance of more than $1500 per month for one year; a Court order would be necessary if a greater allowance is reasonably necessary.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

No Estate Inventory and Inventory Discovery Required Prior to Grant of Statutory Homestead, Exempt Property, and Family Allowances to Surviving Spouse: No estate inventory or scheduling order was filed prior to the District Court award of a homestead allowance, an exempt property allowance, and a family allowance to the surviving spouse. The decedent's son and sister contested the award, relying on former Rule 16(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), for the proposition that they were entitled to an inventory and related discovery before the allowances were granted. The Supreme Court found that application of the rule to probate proceedings would be administratively inefficient and contrary to the purposes of the rule. The District Court properly found that the surviving spouse was entitled to the allowances as a matter of law, and because these were legal issues, it was within the court's discretion to decide them prior to a scheduling order or estate inventory. In re Estate of Martelle, 2001 MT 194, 306 M 253, 32 P3d 758 (2001).

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Decrease in Standard of Living of Surviving Spouse — Award of $6,000 Family Allowance Proper: When a surviving spouse's standard of living decreased during the administration of the estate because he lived on only one-half of the proceeds received from a contract for deed while the other half was placed in an escrow account, it was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to award a $6,000 family allowance. In re Estate of Lettengarver, 249 M 92, 813 P2d 468, 48 St. Rep. 593 (1991).

Purpose of Allowances — Certain Defenses Not Allowed: Estate of Lawson appealed from District Court order to pay homestead allowance of $20,000 and family allowance of $500 a month to Karen Lawson, contending that defenses of setoff, satisfaction, payment, and abandonment should be available against statutory claims under 72-2-801 through 72-2-803 (renumbered 72-2-412 through 72-2-414). The Supreme Court stated that the purpose of allowances was to ensure that surviving spouse was not left penniless and abandoned by death of spouse. Allowances were not designed to support family members until they shared in the estate, regardless of whether they did or did not share in the estate. Accordingly, defenses asserted by the estate, if they could be proved, should not be allowed as matter of policy. Additionally, the District Court correctly refused to determine if the estate was legally entitled to setoff until after ownership of property had been determined and property had been valued by appraiser. Discretion of Court — Family Allowance Denied: Probate Court did not abuse its discretion in denying widow's petition for family allowance where she received from $2,800 to $6,400 per year as income from the assets of the estate and in addition received the monthly income of $154 from Social Security and $75 from the rental of her home, all of which income was sufficient for her care in the nursing home where she resided. Scope and Purpose of Revision. As originally adopted in 1969, the maximum family allowance the personal representative was authorized to determine without court order was a lump sum of $6,000 or periodic installments of $500 per month for one year. To adjust for inflation, the amounts are increased to $18,000 and $1,500 respectively.

A new subsection (b) [72-2-415(2)] is added to provide for the case where the right to an elective share is exercised on behalf of a surviving spouse who is an incapacitated person. In that case, the personal representative is authorized to add any unexpended portions under the homestead allowance, exempt property, and family allowance to the custodial trust established by Section 2-203(b) [Montana adopted alternative subsection (b) as 72-2-223(2)].

If Domiciliary Assets Insufficient. Note that a domiciliary personal representative can collect against out of state assets if domiciliary assets are insufficient.

Part 5
Wills, Will Contracts, and Custody and Deposit of Wills

Part Official Comments

GENERAL COMMENT

Part 5 of Article II [Title 72, chapter 2, part 5] is retitled to reflect the fact that it now includes the provisions on will contracts (pre-1990 Section 2-701 [72-2-711]) and on custody and deposit of wills (pre-1990 Sections 2-901 [former 72-2-402, renumbered 72-2-535] and 2-902 [former 72-2-401, renumbered 72-2-536]).

Part 5 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 5] deals with capacity and formalities for execution and revocation of wills. The basic intent of the pre-1990 sections was to validate wills whenever possible. To that end, the minimum age for making wills was lowered to eighteen, formalities for a written and attested will were reduced, holographic wills written and signed by the testator were authorized, choice of law as to validity of execution was broadened, and revocation by operation of law was limited to divorce or annulment. In addition, the statute also provided for an optional method of execution with acknowledgment before a public officer (the self-proved will).

These measures have been retained, and the purpose of validating wills whenever possible has been strengthened by the addition of a new section, Section 2-503 [72-2-523], which allows a will to be upheld despite a harmless error in its execution.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

No Finding of Undue Influence Under Bradshaw Criteria: Contestants to their father's will asserted that their father was unduly influenced by one of his sons. The District Court found no undue influence, and on appeal, the Supreme Court examined each of the criteria in In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001), and affirmed. All of the children had confidential relationships with their father at certain points in their lives, but the mere opportunity to exercise influence on a testator is not sufficient to prove undue influence. Although the contestants may have suspected that the father was unduly influenced, they did not meet their burden of proving that fact. Also, the District Court made the requisite findings regarding the father's physical and mental capacity and condition, the possibility of unnaturalness of the disposition, and the timing and circumstances surrounding the demands and importunities that may have affected the father's ability to withstand any possible influence, and the findings were supported by credible evidence. In re Estate of Harms, 2006 MT 320, 335 M 66, 149 P3d 557 (2006).

Presumption That Services Provided by Relative Rendered Gratuitously — Compensation for Personal Care Services Provided by Decedent's Daughters Properly Denied: Following their father's death, three daughters presented a claim against the estate for personal care services that they provided to their father. Their claims were disallowed, and the daughters appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Generally, when services are provided to one person by another and the services are knowingly and voluntarily accepted, the law presumes that the services were provided in expectation of payment. However, a generally acknowledged exception applies when a relative seeks payment for services, and the presumption in those cases is that the services were rendered gratuitously unless there was an express agreement for payment or unless such an agreement can be inferred. In this case, the decedent determined prior to death how he wished his assets to be distributed and, despite several opportunities to do so, made no provision for compensation for the personal services that his daughters provided. The daughters were unable to rebut the general presumption of gratuity, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court's denial of their claims for services. DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Undue Influence on Testator Making Will: Undue influence was present when testator made 1980 wills at urging of three of his four children when at time of making the wills testator was 91 years old, confined to a rest home, hard of hearing, and suffering from a brain disorder, and the wills disinherited the fourth child, whose interests testator's actions since 1948 had been directed toward protecting. The Supreme Court held there was substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's determination that there was undue influence and dismissal of petition for probate of the 1980 wills. In re Estate of Aageson, 217 M 78, 702 P2d 338, 42 St. Rep. 1038 (1985).

Apparently Executed Subsequent Will — Evidence Necessary to Support: The deceased and her husband executed a joint will in 1954. The will left all the property to the surviving spouse and provided that at the survivor's death their son would receive $5 because he was already provided for and that the daughter would receive the remainder of the property. The husband died in 1957. The wife died in 1980, and the daughter sought to probate the 1954 will. The son petitioned for a formal determination of intestacy. He produced an unexecuted copy of a second will, the original of which was purportedly executed in 1965 by the decedent. The 1965 will contained a standard revocation clause. The trial court found that the 1965 will was apparently executed but also found that the 1954 will was both a will and a contract and therefore irrevocable. The son appealed. The Supreme Court did not rule on whether the 1954 will was also a contract because it determined that the 1965 will was not duly executed. The drafter of the will could not establish that there was a second witness who had witnessed either the signing by the testator or the testator's acknowledgment of her signature of the will. There was insufficient evidence to support a finding that the 1965 will was fully executed. The 1954 will was properly admitted to probate. In re the Estate of Weidner, 192 M 421, 628 P2d 285, 38 St. Rep. 747 (1981), distinguished in In re Estate of Brooks, 279 M 516, 927 P2d 1024, 53 St. Rep. 1263 (1996).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

No Requirement That All Five Statutory Criteria Be Proved to Show Undue Influence — Return to Discretionary Standard and Line of Cases Requiring That All Criteria Must Be Satisfied Overruled: Section 28-2-407 sets forth the statutory definition of undue influence. In 1965, in In re Maricich, 145 M 146, 400 P2d 873 (1965), the Supreme Court set forth five criteria as factors that a court may consider in determining a question of undue influence: (1) any confidential relationship between the person alleged to be exercising undue influence and the donor; (2) the physical condition of the donor as it may affect the donor's ability to withstand influence; (3) the mental condition of the donor as it may affect the donor's ability to withstand influence; (4) the unnaturalness of the disposition as it relates to showing an unbalanced mind or a mind easily susceptible to undue influence; and (5) demands and importunities as they may affect the donor, taking into account the time, place, and surrounding circumstances. The court continued this discretionary approach in Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978). Then, beginning with In re Estate of Aageson, 217 M 78, 702 P2d 338 (1985), the court strayed from that approach and held that a court must consider the five criteria and set a standard for their consideration in which a proponent of an undue influence theory must satisfy each of the statutory criteria. In the present case, the Supreme Court was asked to consider whether the District Court incorrectly determined that a person's status as a beneficiary was the result of undue influence. The District Court found all five factors to be present, but the presence of four of the five factors was challenged on appeal. The court noted that the standard requiring a finding of all five statutory criteria was not supported by any authority and did not square with the alternative statutory definitions of undue influence in 28-2-407. Therefore, the court returned to the Cameron standard and overruled subsequent cases holding to the contrary, stating that a court may consider the five criteria in determining the existence of undue influence but that the five criteria need not all be proved to show undue influence in any given case. The statutory requirements control, and the five criteria are simply nonexclusive considerations available to guide the District Court in its application of the requirements. In the present case, the District Court correctly determined that each of the criterion for establishing a claim of undue influence had been established. In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001), overruling Christensen v. Britton, 240 M 393, 784 P2d 908 (1989), In re Estate of Luger, 244 M 301, 797 P2d 229 (1990), Taylor v. Conflict Between Statute and Intent of Testator — Intent Controlling: When Winifred died, testate, she left her two sons as her sole heirs and a net estate of approximately $112,000. At the time of her death, her son John was indebted to her for approximately $26,000 and her son Kenneth was indebted to her for approximately $69,000, although approximately $55,000 of that debt had been discharged in bankruptcy. In her will, Winifred stated that if either of her sons owed her money at the time of her death, the debt was to be offset against the share of the estate and the debt forgiven in such a way that each son was to be treated equally. Citing St. v. Keller, 173 M 523, 568 P2d 166 (1977), and In re Estate of Ellison, 243 M 258, 792 P2d 5 (1990), the Supreme Court held that under 72-2-501 (now repealed), the intent of the testator is to control and that that intent takes precedent over a conflicting statute. The Supreme Court held that Kenneth's debt must be offset against his share of the estate, notwithstanding the language of 72-3-912 and the fact that part of the debt was discharged. The Supreme Court also held that there was no basis to offset against Kenneth's share of the estate the value of real property earlier transferred to his mother at an inflated price because there was nothing in the record to show that Winifred objected to the terms of the sale. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Extrinsic Evidence on Testamentary Intent Raising Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: Kuralt gifted Shannon with 20 acres along the Big Hole River, disguising the transaction as a sale. Shortly before he died, he sent Shannon a letter, which constituted a holographic will, suggesting that he intended to do the same with another 90 acres. The District Court allowed introduction of the letter as extrinsic evidence regarding testamentary intent, then granted summary judgment to the estate after finding that the letter contemplated a separate testamentary instrument not yet in existence to accomplish the transfer of the Montana property. Nevertheless, the letter raised a fundamental disagreement as to a genuine material fact—namely, whether Kuralt intended that the letter effect a posthumous disposition of the property. Regardless of whether the court admitted the evidence because it considered the letter ambiguous or because it agreed with Shannon that extrinsic evidence may be discretionarily admitted in holographic will disputes, the court nevertheless improperly resolved contested issues by granting summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for trial. In re Estate of Kuralt, 1999 MT 111, 294 M 354, 981 P2d 771, 56 St. Rep. 460 (1999).

No Capacity of Seriously Ill Person to Revoke Will: A man who suffered multiple heart attacks and complications that included respiratory arrest, who was unable to speak, and who was questionably lucid and coherent was held not to have the cognitive capacity to make a knowing and voluntary destruction of his will or to possess the capacity to direct the revocation of his will. 72-2-522. Execution — witnessed wills — holographic wills.

Official Comments

Scope and Purpose of Revision. Section 2-502 [72-2-522] and pre-1990 Section 2-503 [former 72-2-303, now repealed] are combined to make room for new Section 2-503 [72-2-523]. Also, a cross reference to new Section 2-503 [72-2-523] is added, and fairly minor clarifying revisions are made.

Subsection (a) [72-2-522(1)]. Three formalities for execution of a witnessed will are imposed. Subsection (a)(1) [72-2-522(1)(a)] requires the will to be in writing. Any reasonably permanent record is sufficient. A tape-recorded will has been held not to be "in writing." Estate of Reed, 672 P.2d 829 (Wyo. 1983).

Under subsection (a)(2) [72-2-522(1)(b)], the testator must sign the will or some other individual must sign the testator's name in the testator's presence and by the testator's direction. If the latter procedure is followed, and someone else signs the testator's name, the so-called "conscious presence" test is codified, under which a signing is sufficient if it was done in the testator's conscious presence, i.e., within the range of the testator's senses such as hearing; the signing need not have occurred within the testator's line of sight. For application of the "conscious-presence" test, see Cunningham v. Cunningham, 80 Minn. 180, 83 N.W. 58 (1900) (conscious-presence requirement held satisfied where "the signing was within the sound of the testator's voice; he knew what was being done...."); Healy v. Bartless, 73 N.H. 110, 59 A. 617 (1904) (individuals are in the decedent's conscious presence "whenever they are so near at hand that he is conscious of where they are and of what they are doing, through any of his senses, and where he can readily see them if he is so disposed."); Demaris' Estate, 166 Or. 36, 110 P.2d 571 (1941) ("[W]e do not believe that sight is the only test of presence. We are convinced that any of the senses that a testator possesses, which enable him to know whether another is near at hand and what he is doing, may be employed by him in determining whether [an individual is] in his [conscious] presence ....").

Under subsection (a)(3) [72-2-522(1)(c)], at least two individuals must sign the will, each of whom witnessed at least one of the following: the signing of the will; the testator's acknowledgment of the signature; or the testator's acknowledgment of the will.

Signing may be by mark, nickname, or initials, subject to the general rules relating to that which constitutes a "signature." There is no requirement that the testator "publish" the document as his or her will, or that he or she request the witnesses to sign, or that the witnesses sign in the presence of the testator or of each other. The testator may sign the will outside the presence of the witnesses, if he or she later acknowledges to the witnesses that the signature is his or hers (or that his or her name was signed by another) or that the document is his or her will. An acknowledgment need not be expressly stated, but can be inferred from the testator's conduct. Norton v. Georgia Railroad Bank & Tr. Co., 248 Ga. 847, 285 S.E.2d 910 (1982). The witnesses must sign as witnesses (see, e.g., Mossler v. Johnson, 565 S.W.2d 952 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978)), and must sign within a reasonable time after having witnessed the signing or acknowledgment. There is, however, no requirement that the witnesses sign before the testator's death; in a given case, the reasonable-time requirement could be satisfied even if the witnesses sign after the testator's death.

There is no requirement that the testator's signature be at the end of the will; thus, if he or she writes his or her name in the body of the will and intends it to be his or her signature, this would satisfy the statute. See Estate of Siegel, 214 N.J. Super. 586, 520 A.2d 798 (App. Div. 1987).

A will that does not meet these requirements may be valid under subsection (b) [72-2-522(2)] as a holograph or under Section 2-503 [72-2-523].

Subsection (b) [72-2-522(2)]. This subsection authorizes holographic wills. It enables a testator to write his or her own will in handwriting. There need be no witnesses. The only requirement is that the signature and the material portions of the document be in the testator's handwriting.

By requiring only the "material portions of the document" to be in the testator's handwriting (rather than requiring, as some existing statutes do, that the will be "entirely" in the decedent's handwriting), a holograph may be valid even though immaterial parts such as date or introductory wording are printed, typed, or stamped.

A valid holograph can also be executed on a printed will form if the material portions of the document are handwritten. The fact, for example, that the will form contains printed language such as "I give, devise, and bequeath to _____" does not disqualify the document as a holographic will, as long as the testator fills out the remaining portion of the dispositive provision in his or her own hand.

Under subsection (c) [72-2-522(3)], testamentary intent can be shown by extrinsic evidence, including for holographic wills the printed, typed, or stamped portions of the form or document.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning execution of holographic and witnessed will for former text that read: "Except as provided for holographic wills, writings within 72-2-312, and wills within 72-2-306, every will shall be in writing signed by the testator or in the testator's name by some other person in the testator's presence and by his direction and shall be signed by at least two persons each of whom witnessed either the signing or the testator's acknowledgment of the signature or of the will."

Code Commissioner Correction: Chapter 494 inserted a reference to 72-2-303, which was repealed. The reference was intended to be to section 2-503 of the Uniform Probate Code. That section was enacted as 72-2-523. Pursuant to the authority contained in sec. 84, Ch. 10, L. 1993, the Code Commissioner has inserted the corresponding reference.

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 2-502.

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Testator's Printed Name a Valid Signature When Written in Presence of Notary and Two Witnesses — Burden of Proof of Due Execution Met: The decedent's daughter petitioned the District Court to be appointed personal representative to probate the decedent's estate but was opposed by the decedent's sister, who asserted the decedent had previously executed a will in 2002 that named the sister to the position. The District Court concluded that the decedent died intestate, ruling that she had not signed the will because she had printed her name, rather than writing it in a cursive script. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court, holding that the decedent's will was validly executed under either 72-2-522 or 72-2-523. The Supreme Court relied on the testimony of the notary and one of the witnesses, who both said the decedent presented the document as her last will and testament when she signed it in block letters in front of them. The decedent had also acknowledged the document as her will in a sworn deposition in 2009. In light of the evidence, the Supreme Court concluded the decedent had validly executed her will and that the decedent's sister had met the burden of presenting a prima facie case of due execution as the proponent of the will. In re Estate of Harless, 2013 MT 283, 372 Mont. 117, 310 P.3d 550.

Lack of Testamentary Capacity Rendering Holographic Will Invalid: A son and a daughter both sought probate of different wills signed by their mother. The District Court found that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity at the time both wills were executed, so probate was denied, resulting in intestacy. The son appealed on grounds that the District Court improperly found that the mother lacked testamentary capacity when signing the second, holographic will, but the Supreme Court affirmed. There was evidence that years before the wills were executed, the mother was confused and uncertain about her assets and was paranoid, often did not know what was happening around her and was delusional, could not remember people or recall what she had done with her property, thought that the sheriff and people of Richland County were all on drugs, thought people were stealing from her, was not aware that through two wills she would be treating her children differently, and did not understand when signing the holographic will that it would govern distribution of her assets and revoke any prior wills. This was substantial evidence to justify the District Court's conclusion that the mother lacked testamentary capacity, rendering the will invalid. In re Estate of Lightfield, 2009 MT 244, 351 M 426, 213 P3d 468 (2009).

General Devise — No Ademption Absent Evidence of Testator's Intent to Adeem: Deisz left a holographic will in which he chose his companion to receive the bulk of his estate, other family members received much more modest sums in life insurance, and the remaining members received only one ring each. Deisz's father submitted an application for informal probate and appointment as personal representative, then amended the filing as an intestate estate on grounds that the will was invalid. The companion filed for formal probate, seeking to have the will declared valid, the estate made testate, and Deisz's distribution wishes followed. The District Court found the will to be a valid holographic will creating specific devises and concluded that the devises were adeemed based on the sale of specific assets to pay for Deisz's medical care. The companion appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Based on the distribution of assets and evidence that Deisz intended to make sure that the companion was well taken care of, coupled with the presumption in favor of finding a general devise, the devise to the companion was general rather than specific. By definition, a general devise cannot be adeemed, and the estate failed to meet its burden of establishing any facts and circumstances to indicate that Deisz intended to adeem the devise to the companion or that such a distribution would be consistent with Deisz's plan of distribution. The District Court's conclusion that the companion's willingness to see the estate partially depleted for Deisz's best interests signaled the companion's intention to relinquish her share of the estate was not supported by the record. It was Deisz's intent, not the companion's, that was relevant, and there was no evidence that Deisz intended to revoke the devise to the companion. Absent Deisz's intent or any evidence that Deisz intended to adeem, the provisions of 72-2-616 controlled. The Supreme Court directed that a neutral representative be appointed to dispose of the remainder of the estate. Holtz v. Deisz, 2003 MT 132, 316 M 77, 68 P3d 828 (2003). See also In re Estate of Wales, 223 M 515, 727 P2d 536 (1986).

Public Policy in Favor of Statutory Apportionment Precluded by Specific Provisions in Will — Estate Taxes to Be Paid by Residual Estate: In In re Estate of Kuralt, 2000 MT 359, 303 M 335, 15 P3d 931 (2000), the Supreme Court found that a letter by the decedent was a valid holographic codicil to the decedent's will conveying real property in Montana to the decedent's companion, but a question remained whether the estate or the companion was responsible for the estate taxes on the Montana property. Under the law of New York, where the will was admitted to probate, and similar law in Montana, there is a strong public policy in favor of statutory apportionment unless the will provides otherwise. In this case, the decedent's will specifically provided that estate taxes be paid by the residual estate without apportionment, which included those generated by the bequest of the Montana property by codicil. Because the language of the will was clear and unambiguous, the District Court correctly concluded that estate taxes on the Montana property must be paid by the residual estate. In re Estate of Kuralt, 2003 MT 92, 315 M 177, 68 P3d 662 (2003).

Question Whether Holographic Document Intended as Codicil or List of Property to Be Dispensed — Testamentary Intent Question of Fact to Be Determined by Judge or Jury — Summary Judgment Improper: Johnson executed a formal will and also executed and signed a holographic document consisting of a handwritten list of possessions and names. The District Court concluded that the holographic document was a personal property list made pursuant to 72-2-533, rather than a codicil, and applied 72-2-523 in ordering distribution of the property because there was no intent by Johnson that the holographic document should constitute the complete will. The Supreme Court held that the District Court should have applied this section, which deals with holographic wills, rather than 72-2-523. The three requirements for a valid holographic will are: (1) individuals must be at least 18 years old and of sound mind; (2) the material provisions of the will must be in the handwriting of the testator and signed by the testator; and (3) the individual must have testamentary intent that the document will dispose of the individual's property after death. Here, the first two elements were met, but a question of fact remained concerning Johnson's intent, precluding summary judgment. The case was remanded to give the parties an opportunity to present evidence concerning Johnson's intent so that the trier of fact could decide the issue under the correct standard. In re Estate of Johnson, 2002 MT 341, 313 M 316, 60 P3d 1014 (2002).

Acts of Testator Demonstrating Intent to Revoke Prior Will — Unwitnessed Will Treated as Executed Will: Hall executed his original will in 1984, and in 1997, he and his current wife met with their attorney and drew up a joint will. They signed the joint will, and the attorney notarized it, and although there were no other witnesses, they believed that the joint will would stand as valid until a final version was executed. Hall directed that the 1984 will be destroyed. Hall died before a final version was executed, and his wife sought to informally probate the joint will, but Hall's daughter objected and requested formal probate. The District Court admitted the joint will to probate, and the daughter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. In contested cases, the proponent of a will must establish that the testator duly executed the will. For a will to be valid, typically, two people must witness the testator signing the will, and then sign the will themselves. However, under 72-2-523, a document may still be treated as if it had been executed under certain circumstances, even if it was not properly witnessed, and one such circumstance is if the proponent establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the decedent intended the document to be the decedent's will. Here, Hall clearly intended the joint will to be his final will, as evidenced by superseding language in the joint will revoking the prior will, by Hall's belief that the joint will would stand as valid until a final version was drawn up, and by Hall's destruction of the earlier will. Thus, the District Court did not err in admitting the unwitnessed joint will to probate. In re Estate of Hall, 2002 MT 171, 310 M 486, 51 P3d 1134 (2002).

Determination That Decedent Died Intestate Not Erroneous: Bradshaw's mother contended that Bradshaw executed a valid holographic will in 1988 and introduced the document into evidence. Pursuant to the document, Bradshaw left his vehicle to a nephew and the rest of his estate to be equally divided among his mother, father, brother, and sister. The District Court held that the document was not submitted into evidence as a holographic will and that Bradshaw died intestate. Bradshaw's two sons were born in 1992 and 1995. Under 72-2-332, children born after the making of a will who are not provided for in the will take as if the decedent died intestate. Therefore, even if the document had been properly submitted as a holographic will, the children, in the absence of a surviving spouse, were entitled to Bradshaw's estate. In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001).

Letter Stating Writer Would Be Sure Addressee Would Inherit Specified Property Was Valid Codicil to Will: A letter written in 1997 by a hospital patient to his long-term and intimate personal friend, stating "I'll have the lawyer visit the hospital to be sure you inherit the rest of the place in MT. if it comes to that", expressed a present testamentary intent to transfer the approximately 90-acre piece of property to her. He had already deeded her an adjoining 20-acre parcel with a cabin on it, for no consideration. He wrote the letter when extremely ill and died two weeks later. He was reluctant to consult a lawyer because he wanted to keep the relationship secret. The use of the underlined word "inherit" in the letter reflected his intent to make a posthumous disposition of the property. Furthermore, the letter constituted a valid codicil to the 1994 formal will that did not specifically mention the Montana property. In re Estate of Kuralt, 2000 MT 359, 303 M 335, 15 P3d 931, 57 St. Rep. 1529 (2000).

Extrinsic Evidence on Testamentary Intent Raising Genuine Issue of Material Fact — Summary Judgment Improper: Kuralt gifted Shannon with 20 acres along the Big Hole River, disguising the transaction as a sale. Shortly before he died, he sent Shannon a letter, which constituted a holographic will, suggesting that he intended to do the same with another 90 acres. The District Court allowed introduction of the letter as extrinsic evidence regarding testamentary intent, then granted summary judgment to the estate after finding that the letter contemplated a separate testamentary instrument not yet in existence to accomplish the transfer of the Montana property. Nevertheless, the letter raised a fundamental disagreement as to a genuine material fact—namely, whether Kuralt intended that the letter effect a posthumous disposition of the property. Regardless of whether the court admitted the evidence because it considered the letter ambiguous or because it agreed with Shannon that extrinsic evidence may be discretionarily admitted in holographic will disputes, the court nevertheless improperly resolved contested issues by granting summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for trial. In re Estate of Kuralt, 1999 MT 111, 294 M 354, 981 P2d 771, 56 St. Rep. 460 (1999).

Document Signing Attested to by Only One Witness Not Duly Executed: In contested cases, the proponent of a will must establish that it has been duly executed, which includes the requirement that the document be signed by two individuals acknowledging either the signature or the will. The number of attesting witnesses who must testify in a contested will proceeding pursuant to 72-3-309 is an entirely different question from whether a purported will meets the requirements for a duly executed will under this section. Here, the document was signed by only one person who witnessed the testator signing the purported will. A second signature by a notary public, who was a family friend and recognized the testator's signature but who was not present when the document was signed, did not constitute the signature of a second witness as required under this section. The proponent thus did not meet the statutory burden under 72-3-310 that the document had been duly executed, and the District Court properly denied admission of the document to probate. In re Estate of Brooks, 279 M 516, 927 P2d 1024, 53 St. Rep. 1263 (1996), distinguishing In re Estate of Weidner, 192 M 421, 628 P2d 285 (1981).

Apparently Executed Subsequent Will — Evidence Necessary to Support: The deceased and her husband executed a joint will in 1954. The will left all the property to the surviving spouse and provided that at the survivor's death their son would receive $5 because he was already provided for and that the daughter would receive the remainder of the property. The husband died in 1957. The wife died in 1980, and the daughter sought to probate the 1954 will. The son petitioned for a formal determination of intestacy. He produced an unexecuted copy of a second will, the original of which was purportedly executed in 1965 by the decedent. The 1965 will contained a standard revocation clause. The trial court found that the 1965 will was apparently executed but also found that the 1954 will was both a will and a contract and therefore irrevocable. The son appealed. The Supreme Court did not rule on whether the 1954 will was also a contract because it determined that the 1965 will was not duly executed. The drafter of the will could not establish that there was a second witness who had witnessed either the signing by the testator or the testator's acknowledgment of her signature of the will. There was insufficient evidence to support a finding that the 1965 will was fully executed. The 1954 will was properly admitted to probate. In re the Estate of Weidner, 192 M 421, 628 P2d 285, 38 St. Rep. 747 (1981), distinguished in In re Estate of Brooks, 279 M 516, 927 P2d 1024, 53 St. Rep. 1263 (1996).

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Self-Proving Affidavit — Effect on Execution: Since the execution of a valid will is a condition precedent to the use of a self-proving affidavit to admit a will to probate without testimony of a subscribing witness, such an affidavit will not cure defects in execution requirements of attestation. In re Estate of Sample, 175 M 93, 572 P2d 1232 (1977).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Declaration to Attesting Witness: Evidence that testator did not verbally declare to attesting witnesses that document was his last will and testament but that he merely handed pen to the witness and by motion indicated that he wished the witness to sign the attestation clause did not establish a deficiency in execution since the declarations by the testator were not required to be in exact terms, but could be implied from his conduct and the attendant circumstances. Wallin v. Kinyon Estate, 164 M 160, 519 P2d 1236 (1974).

Attestation Clause — Presumption of Due Execution: Where testator did not sign will in presence of witnesses, had attesting witnesses sign on separate occasions without knowing document was will, and crossed out portions of typewritten document, purported will was not executed and attested in substantial compliance with statute, and there was no presumption of due execution, in spite of presence of attestation clause. In re Birkeland's Estate, 164 M 94, 519 P2d 154 (1974).

Substantial Compliance: In order for will to be validly executed, substantial compliance with former statute on execution of will was required and not merely compliance with substantial portion of statute; there was no substantial compliance where testator procured signatures of attesting witnesses on separate occasions and attempted to conceal nature of document from them, and one witness testified he did not know if testator's signature was on document at time he attested to it. In re Birkeland's Estate, 164 M 94, 519 P2d 154 (1974).

Purpose of New Section. By way of dispensing power, this new section allows the probate court to excuse a harmless error in complying with the formal requirements for executing or revoking a will. The measure accords with legislation in force in the Canadian province of Manitoba and in several Australian jurisdictions. The Uniform Laws Conference of Canada approved a comparable measure for the Canadian Uniform Wills Act in 1987.

Legislation of this sort was enacted in the state of South Australia in 1975. The experience there has been closely studied by a variety of law reform commissions and in the scholarly literature. See, e.g., Law Reform Commission of British Columbia, Report on the Making and Revocation of Wills (1981); New South Wales Law Reform Commission, Wills: Execution and Revocation (1986); Langbein, Excusing Harmless Errors in the Execution of Wills: A Report on Australia's Tranquil Revolution in Probate Law, 87 Colum. L. Rev. 1 (1987). A similar measure has been in effect in Israel since 1965 (see British Columbia Report, supra, at 44-46; Langbein, supra, at 48-51).

Consistent with the general trend of the revisions of the UPC, Section 2-503 [72-2-523] unifies the law of probate and nonprobate transfers, extending to will formalities the harmless error principle that has long been applied to defective compliance with the formal requirements for nonprobate transfers. See, e.g., Annot., 19 A.L.R.2d 5 (1951) (life insurance beneficiary designations).

Evidence from South Australia suggests that the dispensing power will be applied mainly in two sorts of cases. See Langbein, supra, at 15-33. When the testator misunderstands the attestation requirements of Section 2-502(a) [72-2-522(1)] and neglects to obtain one or both witnesses, new Section 2-503 [72-2-523] permits the proponents of the will to prove that the defective execution did not result from irresolution or from circumstances suggesting duress or trickery — in other words, that the defect was harmless to the purpose of the formality. The measure reduces the tension between holographic wills and the two-witness requirement for attested wills under Section 2-502(a)[72-2-522(1)]. Ordinarily, the testator who attempts to make an attested will but blunders will still have achieved a level of formality that compares favorably with that permitted for holographic wills under the Code.

The other recurrent class of case in which the dispensing power has been invoked in South Australia entails alterations to a previously executed will. Sometimes the testator adds a clause, that is, the testator attempts to interpolate a defectively executed codicil. More frequently, the amendment has the character of a revision — the testator crosses out former text and inserts replacement terms. Lay persons do not always understand that the execution and revocation requirements of Section 2-502 [72-2-522] call for fresh execution in order to modify a will; rather, lay persons often think that the original execution has continuing effect.

By placing the burden of proof upon the proponent of a defective instrument, and by requiring the proponent to discharge that burden by clear and convincing evidence (which courts at the trial and appellate levels are urged to police with rigor), Section 2-503 [72-2-523] imposes procedural standards appropriate to the seriousness of the issue. Experience in Israel and South Australia strongly supports the view that a dispensing power like Section 2-503 [72-2-523] will not breed litigation. Indeed, as an Israeli judge reported to the British Columbia Law Reform Commission, the dispensing power "actually prevents a great deal of unnecessary litigation," because it "eliminates disputes about technical lapses and limits the zone of dispute to the functional question of whether the instrument correctly expresses the testator's intent. British Columbia Report, supra, at 46.

The larger the departure from Section 2-502 [72-2-522] formality, the harder it will be to satisfy the court that the instrument reflects the testator's intent. Whereas the South Australian and Israeli courts lightly excuse breaches of the attestation requirements, they have never excused noncompliance with the requirement that a will be in writing, and they have been extremely reluctant to excuse noncompliance with the signature requirement. See Langbein, supra, at 23-29, 49-50. The main circumstance in which the South Australian courts have excused signature errors has been in the recurrent class of cases in which two wills are prepared for simultaneous execution by two testators, typically husband and wife, and each mistakenly signs the will prepared for the other. E.g., Estate of Blakely, 32 S.A.S.R. 473 (1983). Recently, the New York Court of Appeals remedied such a case without aid of statute, simply on the ground "what has occurred is so obvious, and what was intended so clear." In re Snide, 52 N.Y.2d 193, 196, 418 N.E.2d 656, 657, 437 N.Y.S.2d 63, 64 (1981).

Section 2-503 [72-2-523]means to retain the intent-serving benefits of Section 2-502 [72-2-522] formality without inflicting intent-defeating outcomes in cases of harmless error.

Reference. The rule of this section is supported by the Restatement (Second) of Property (Donative Transfers) § 33.1 comment g (as approved by the American Law Institute at the 1990 annual meeting).

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Testator's Printed Name a Valid Signature When Written in Presence of Notary and Two Witnesses — Burden of Proof of Due Execution Met: The decedent's daughter petitioned the District Court to be appointed personal representative to probate the decedent's estate but was opposed by the decedent's sister, who asserted the decedent had previously executed a will in 2002 that named the sister to the position. The District Court concluded that the decedent died intestate, ruling that she had not signed the will because she had printed her name, rather than writing it in a cursive script. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court, holding that the decedent's will was validly executed under either 72-2-522 or 72-2-523. The Supreme Court relied on the testimony of the notary and one of the witnesses, who both said the decedent presented the document as her last will and testament when she signed it in block letters in front of them. The decedent had also acknowledged the document as her will in a sworn deposition in 2009. Question Whether Holographic Document Intended as Codicil or List of Property to Be Dispensed — Testamentary Intent Question of Fact to Be Determined by Judge or Jury — Summary Judgment Improper: Johnson executed a formal will and also executed and signed a holographic document consisting of a handwritten list of possessions and names. The District Court concluded that the holographic document was a personal property list made pursuant to 72-2-533, rather than a codicil, and applied this section in ordering distribution of the property because there was no intent by Johnson that the holographic document should constitute the complete will. The Supreme Court held that the District Court should have applied 72-2-522, which deals with holographic wills, rather than this section. The three requirements for a valid holographic will are: (1) individuals must be at least 18 years old and of sound mind; (2) the material provisions of the will must be in the handwriting of the testator and signed by the testator; and (3) the individual must have testamentary intent that the document will dispose of the individual's property after death. Here, the first two elements were met, but a question of fact remained concerning Johnson's intent, precluding summary judgment. The case was remanded to give the parties an opportunity to present evidence concerning Johnson's intent so that the trier of fact could decide the issue under the correct standard. In re Estate of Johnson, 2002 MT 341, 313 M 316, 60 P3d 1014 (2002).

Acts of Testator Demonstrating Intent to Revoke Prior Will — Unwitnessed Will Treated as Executed Will: Hall executed his original will in 1984, and in 1997, he and his current wife met with their attorney and drew up a joint will. They signed the joint will, and the attorney notarized it, and although there were no other witnesses, they believed that the joint will would stand as valid until a final version was executed. However, under this section, a document may still be treated as if it had been executed under certain circumstances, even if it was not properly witnessed, and one such circumstance is if the proponent establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the decedent intended the document to be the decedent's will. Here, Hall clearly intended the joint will to be his final will, as evidenced by superseding language in the joint will revoking the prior will, by Hall's belief that the joint will would stand as valid until a final version was drawn up, and by Hall's destruction of the earlier will. Thus, the District Court did not err in admitting the unwitnessed joint will to probate. In re Estate of Hall, 2002 MT 171, 310 M 486, 51 P3d 1134 (2002).

Letter Stating Writer Would Be Sure Addressee Would Inherit Specified Property Was Valid Codicil to Will: A letter written in 1997 by a hospital patient to his long-term and intimate personal friend, stating "I'll have the lawyer visit the hospital to be sure you inherit the rest of the place in MT. if it comes to that", expressed a present testamentary intent to transfer the approximately 90-acre piece of property to her. Proponent's Burden to Prove Decedent's Intent That Writing Constituted Will: Even absent due execution, a document can still be admitted to probate as a valid will under certain circumstances. Under the express language of this section, the proponent of a document has the burden of proving the decedent's intent that the writing constitutes the decedent's will. Insofar as 72-3-310 imposes a burden on the contestant of a will to prove lack of testamentary intent or capacity, that section does not apply when the document sought to be admitted to probate is not a duly executed will. In this case, the proponent did not meet the statutory burden of proving testator's testamentary capacity, which was error, but because the error did not affect the outcome of the case, it was considered harmless. In re Estate of Brooks, 279 M 516, 927 P2d 1024, 53 St. Rep. 1263 (1996), followed in In re Estate of Hall, 2002 MT 171, 310 M 486, 51 P3d 1134 (2002), and In re Estate of Harless, 2013 MT 283, 372 Mont. 117, 310 P.3d 550.

Holographic Will in Letters of Testator Upheld — Burden on Contestant to Prove Lack of Intent: On two different occasions, from his jail cell, Julian Ramirez wrote letters to his sister saying that if something ever happened to him, their mother should get all of his possessions and take care of his son Nicolas. After Julian's death, the District Court refused to admit the letters to probate as a holographic will, holding that there was insufficient evidence of Julian's testamentary intent. Citing In re Augestad's Estate, 111 M 138, 106 P2d 1087 (1940), In re Van Voast's Estate, 127 M 450, 266 P2d 377 (1954), and Estate of Coleman, 139 M 58, 359 P2d 502 (1961), the Supreme Court held that the letters contained sufficient evidence of testamentary intent. The Supreme Court also noted that the District Court was under the mistaken misapprehension that the burden of proof is upon the person seeking to enter the will to probate. The Supreme Court noted that under 72-3-310, the contestant has the burden of proving a lack of testamentary intent, and that burden was not satisfied in this case. Will to Contain Testamentary Provisions: A sealed envelope containing four pieces of paper on which were written names and addresses of relatives of decedent and on the outside of which was written "names and addresses of those to be named in my will" could not be probated as a Blue Penciled Cross-Outs: The District Court properly refused probate of a holographic will because its proponent failed to establish a prima facie case that blue penciled cross-outs were authored by the testator. In re Craddock, 179 M 74, 586 P2d 292 (1978).

Date Required on Holographic Will: Under section 91-108, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), regardless of clear testator intent, purported holographic will revealing no date is not valid. In re Gudmunsen, 169 M 53, 545 P2d 146 (1976).

72-2-524. Self-proved will.

Official Comments

A self-proved will may be admitted to probate as provided in Sections 3-303 [72-3-212 and 72-3-213], 3-405 [72-3-307], and 3-406 [72-3-309] without the testimony of any subscribing witness, but otherwise it is treated no differently from a will not self proved. Thus, a self-proved will may be contested (except in regard to signature requirements), revoked, or amended by a codicil in exactly the same fashion as a will not self proved. The procedural advantage of a self-proved will is limited to formal testacy proceedings because Section 3-303 [72-3-212 and 72-3-213], which deals with informal probate, dispenses with the necessity of testimony of witnesses even though the instrument is not self proved under this section.

A new subsection (c) [72-2-524(3)] is added to counteract an unfortunate judicial interpretation of similar self-proving will provisions in a few states, under which a signature on the self-proving affidavit has been held not to constitute a signature on the will, resulting in invalidity of the will in cases where the testator or witnesses got confused and only signed on the self-proving affidavit. See Mann, Self-proving Affidavits and Formalism in Wills Adjudication, 63 Wash. U. L.Q. 39 (1985); Estate of Ricketts, 773 P.2d 93 (Wash. Ct. App. 1989).

What Constitutes Undue Influence: In determining the issue of undue influence, the Court may consider the confidential relationship of the person attempting to influence the donor, the physical and mental condition of the donor as it affects his ability to withstand the influence, the unnaturalness of the disposition as it relates to showing an unbalanced mind or a mind easily susceptible to undue influence, and demands and importunities as they may affect the particular donor, taking into consideration the time, place, and all surrounding circumstances. Self-Proving Affidavit — Effect on Execution: Since the execution of a valid will is a condition precedent to the use of a self-proving affidavit to admit a will to probate without testimony of a subscribing witness, such an affidavit will not cure defects in execution requirements of attestation. 72-2-525. Who may witness.

Official Comments

This section carries forward the position of the pre-1990 Code. The position adopted simplifies the law relating to interested witnesses. Interest no longer disqualifies a person as a witness, nor does it invalidate or forfeit a gift under the will. Of course, the purpose of this change is not to foster use of interested witnesses, and attorneys will continue to use disinterested witnesses in execution of wills. But the rare and innocent use of a member of the testator's family on a home-drawn will is not penalized.

This approach does not increase appreciably the opportunity for fraud or undue influence. A substantial devise by will to a person who is one of the witnesses to the execution of the will is itself a suspicious circumstance, and the devise might be challenged on grounds of undue influence. The requirement of disinterested witnesses has not succeeded in preventing fraud and undue influence; and in most cases of undue influence, the influencer is careful not to sign as a witness, but to procure disinterested witnesses.

Under Section 3-406 [72-3-309], an interested witness is competent to testify to prove execution of the will.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 in (1), at beginning, substituted "An individual" for "Any person"; and substituted (2) concerning signing by interested witness for former text that read: "A will is not invalid because the will is signed by an interested witness."

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1989 Amendment: Deleted former (3) and (4) that read: "(3) All beneficial devises made in any will to a subscribing witness thereto are void unless there are two other competent subscribing witnesses to the same, but a mere charge on the estate of the testator does not prevent his creditors from being competent witnesses to his will.

(4) If a witness to whom any beneficial devise void under subsection (3) is made would have been entitled to any share of the estate of the testator if the testator had died intestate, such witness succeeds to so much of the share as would be distributed to him under intestate succession, not exceeding the devise or bequest made to him in the will."

1989 Editorial Comment: Former subsections (3) and (4) purged devises to subscribing witnesses to the extent these devises exceeded what the witness-devisee would have received under intestacy. These subsections were not part of the corresponding national Uniform Probate Code section 2-505. As amended, this section returns to the position of the national Uniform Probate Code and eliminates these purging provisions. The purpose of the change is not to foster the use of interested witnesses, but the rare and innocent use of a member of the testator's family or a friend to witness a home-drawn will would no longer be penalized. Attorneys will continue to use disinterested witnesses in the execution of wills.

72-2-526. Choice of law as to execution.

Official Comments

This section permits probate of wills in this state under certain conditions even if they are not executed in accordance with the formalities of Section 2-502 [72-2-522] or 2-503 [72-2-523]. Such wills must be in writing but otherwise are valid if they meet the requirements for execution of the law of the place where the will is executed (when it is executed in another state or country) or the law of testator's domicile, abode or nationality at either the time of execution or at the time of death. Thus, if testator is domiciled in state 1 and executes a typed will merely by signing it without witnesses in state 2 while on vacation there, the Court of this State would recognize the will as valid if the law of either state 1 or state 2 permits execution by signature alone. Or if a national of Mexico executes a written will in this State which does not meet the requirements of Section 2-502 [72-2-522] but meets the requirements of Mexican law, the will would be recognized as validly executed under this section. The purpose of this section is to provide a wide opportunity for validation of expectations of testators.

72-2-527. Revocation by writing or act.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. Revocation of a will may be by either a subsequent will or an authorized act done to the document. Revocation by subsequent will cannot be effective unless the subsequent will is valid.

Revocation by Inconsistency. As originally promulgated, this section provided no standard by which the courts were to determine whether in a given case a subsequent will with no revocation clause revokes a prior will, wholly or partly, by inconsistency. Some courts seem to have been puzzled about the standard to be applied. New subsections (b) [72-2-527(2)], (c) [72-2-527(3)], and (d) [72-2-527(4)] codify the workable and common-sense standard set forth in the Restatement (Second) of Property (Donative Transfers) § 34.2 comment b (1991). Under these subsections, the question whether the subsequent will was intended to replace rather than supplement the previous will depends upon whether the second will makes a complete disposition of the testator's estate. If the second will does make a complete disposition of the testator's estate, a presumption arises that the second will was intended to replace the previous will. If the second will does not make a complete disposition of the testator's estate, a presumption arises that the second will was intended to supplement rather than replace the previous will. The rationale is that, when the second will does not make a complete disposition of the testator's estate, the second will is more in the nature of a codicil to the first will. This standard has been applied in the cases without the benefit of a statutory provision to this effect. E.g., Gilbert v. Gilbert, 652 S.W.2d 663 (Ky. Ct. App. 1983).

Example. Five years before her death, G executed a will (Will # 1), devising her antique desk to A; $20,000 to B; and the residue of her estate to C. Two years later, A died, and G executed another will (Will # 2), devising her antique desk to A's spouse, X; $10,000 to B; and the residue of her estate to C. Will # 2 neither expressly revoked Will # 1 nor made any other reference to it. G's net probate estate consisted of her antique desk (worth $10,000) and other property (worth $90,000). X, B, and C survived G by 120 hours.

Solution. Will #2 was presumptively intended by G to replace Will #1 because Will #2 made a complete disposition of G's estate. Unless this presumption is rebutted by clear and convincing evidence, Will #1 is wholly revoked; only Will #2 is operative on G's death.

If, however, Will #2 had not contained a residuary clause, and hence had not made a complete disposition of G's estate, "Will #2" is more in the nature of a codicil to Will #1, and the solution would be different. Now, Will #2 would presumptively be treated as having been intended to supplement rather than replace Will #1. In the absence of evidence clearly and convincingly rebutting this presumption, Will # 1 would be revoked only to the extent Will #2 is inconsistent with it; both wills would be operative on G's death, to the extent they are not inconsistent. As to the devise of the antique desk, Will #2 is inconsistent with Will # 1, and the antique desk would go to X. There being no residuary clause in Will #2, there is nothing in Will #2 that is inconsistent with the residuary clause in Will #1, and so the residue would go to C. The more difficult question relates to the cash devises in the two wills. The question whether they are inconsistent with one another is a question of interpretation in the individual case. Section 2-507 [72-2-527] does not establish a presumption one way or the other on that question. If the court finds that the cash devises are inconsistent with one another, i.e., if the court finds that the cash devise in Will #2 was intended to replace rather than supplement the cash devise in Will #1, then B takes $10,000. But, if the court finds that the cash devises are not inconsistent with one another, B would take $30,000.

Revocatory Act. In the case of an act of revocation done to the document, subsection (a)(2) [72-2-527(1)(b)] is revised to provide that a burning, tearing, or canceling is a sufficient revocatory act even though the act does not touch any of the words on the will. This is consistent with cases on burning or tearing (e.g., White v. Casten, 46 N.C. 197 (1853) (burning); Crampton v. Osburn, 356 Mo. 125, 201 S.W.2d 336 (1947) (tearing)), but inconsistent with most, but not all, cases on cancellation (e.g., Yont v. Eads, 317 Mass. 232, 57 N.E.2d 531 (1944); Kronauge v. Stoecklein, 33 Ohio App. 2d 229, 293 N.E.2d 320 (1972); Thompson v. Royall, 163 Va. 492, 175 S.E. 748 (1934); contra, Warner v. Warner's Estate, 37 Vt. 356 (1864)). By substantial authority, it is held that removal of the testator's signature — by, for example, lining it through, erasing or obliterating it, tearing or cutting it out of the document, or removing the entire signature page — constitutes a sufficient revocatory act to revoke the entire will. Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama v. Calhoun, 514 So.2d 895 (Ala. 1987) and cases cited therein.

Subsection (a)(2) [72-2-527(1)(b)] is also revised to codify the "conscious-presence" test. As revised, subsection (a)(2) [72-2-527(1)(b)] provides that, if the testator does not perform the revocatory act, but directs another to perform the act, the act is a sufficient revocatory act if the other individual performs it in the testator's conscious presence. The act need not be performed in the testator's line of sight. See the Comment to Section 2-502 [72-2-522] for a discussion of the "conscious-presence" test.

Revocatory Intent. To effect a revocation, a revocatory act must be accompanied by revocatory intent. Determining whether a revocatory act was accompanied by revocatory intent may involve exploration of extrinsic evidence, including the testator's statements as to intent.

Partial Revocation. This section specifically permits partial revocation.

Dependent Relative Revocation. Each court is free to apply its own doctrine of dependent relative revocation. See generally Palmer, "Dependent Relative Revocation and Its Relation to Relief for Mistake," 69 Mich. L. Rev. 989 (1971). Note, however, that dependent relative revocation should less often be necessary under the revised provisions of the Code. Dependent relative revocation is the law of second best, i.e., its application does not produce the result the testator actually intended, but is designed to come as close as possible to that intent. A precondition to the application of dependent relative revocation is, or should be, good evidence of the testator's actual intention; without that, the court has no basis for determining which of several outcomes comes the closest to that actual intention.

When there is good evidence of the testator's actual intention, however, the revised provisions of the Code would usually facilitate the effectuation of the result the testator actually intended. If, for example, the testator by revocatory act revokes a second will for the purpose of reviving a former will, the evidence necessary to establish the testator's intent to revive the former will should be sufficient under Section 2-509 [72-2-529] to effect a revival of the former will, making the application of dependent relative revocation as to the second will unnecessary. If, by revocatory act, the testator revokes a will in conjunction with an effort to execute a new will, the evidence necessary to establish the testator's intention that the new will be valid should, in most cases, be sufficient under Section 2-503 [72-2-523] to give effect to the new will, making the application of dependent relative revocation as to the old will unnecessary. If the testator lines out parts of a will or dispositive provision in conjunction with an effort to alter the will's terms, the evidence necessary to establish the testator's intention that the altered terms be valid should be sufficient under Section 2-503 [72-2-523] to give effect to the will as altered, making dependent relative revocation as to the lined-out parts unnecessary.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Sole Means of Revocation Provided in Statute — Any Other Actions Taken by Testator Insufficient to Revoke Will: The decedent's daughter petitioned to be appointed as personal representative to probate the decedent's estate, arguing that the decedent had revoked her 2002 will naming her sister to the position. The District Court concluded the decedent had revoked the will by writing a letter to denounce her relationship with the devisees, by suing one of the devisees, and by stating in a deposition in the suit that the will was not valid and was a joke. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that this section outlines the only acceptable methods to revoke a will and that none of the actions taken by the decedent satisfied the terms of this section. In re Estate of Harless, 2013 MT 283, 372 Mont. 117, 310 P.3d 550.

Acts of Testator Demonstrating Intent to Revoke Prior Will — Unwitnessed Will Treated as Executed Will: Hall executed his original will in 1984, and in 1997, he and his current wife met with their attorney and drew up a joint will. They signed the joint will, and the attorney notarized it, and although there were no other witnesses, they believed that the joint will would stand as valid until a final version was executed. Hall directed that the 1984 will be destroyed. Hall died before a final version was executed, and his wife sought to informally probate the joint will, but Hall's daughter objected and requested formal probate. The District Court admitted the joint will to probate, and the daughter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. In contested cases, the proponent of a will must establish that the testator duly executed the will. For a will to be valid, typically, two people must witness the testator signing the will, and then sign the will themselves. However, under 72-2-523, a document may still be treated as if it had been executed under certain circumstances, even if it was not properly witnessed, and one such circumstance is if the proponent establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the decedent intended the document to be the decedent's will. Here, Hall clearly intended the joint will to be his final will, as evidenced by superseding language in the joint will revoking the prior will, by Hall's belief that the joint will would stand as valid until a final version was drawn up, and by Hall's destruction of the earlier will. Thus, the District Court did not err in admitting the unwitnessed joint will to probate. In re Estate of Hall, 2002 MT 171, 310 M 486, 51 P3d 1134 (2002).

Letter Stating Writer Would Be Sure Addressee Would Inherit Specified Property Was Valid Codicil to Will: A letter written in 1997 by a hospital patient to his long-term and intimate personal friend, stating "I'll have the lawyer visit the hospital to be sure you inherit the rest of the place in MT. if it comes to that", expressed a present testamentary intent to transfer the approximately 90-acre piece of property to her. He had already deeded her an adjoining 20-acre parcel with a cabin on it, for no consideration. He wrote the letter when extremely ill and died two weeks later. He was reluctant to consult a lawyer because he wanted to keep the relationship secret. The use of the underlined word "inherit" in the letter reflected his intent to make a posthumous disposition of the property. Furthermore, the letter constituted a valid codicil to the 1994 formal will that did not specifically mention the Montana property. In re Estate of Kuralt, 2000 MT 359, 303 M 335, 15 P3d 931, 57 St. Rep. 1529 (2000).

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Will Revoked — Jury Verdict: In an action to contest decedent's will that would have left a substantial portion of decedent's estate to the plaintiffs, defendant testified that she accompanied decedent to the hospital before he died and that before leaving for the hospital the decedent burned the will. Plaintiffs' key witness testified that she drove the decedent to the hospital and that the defendant could not have seen the decedent burn his will. The jury found that the decedent had revoked his will by destroying it. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed on the grounds that there was sufficient evidence to support the jury verdict and to deny a request for a new trial. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Promissory Estoppel Requiring Reversal of Summary Judgment — No Will Produced: The Supreme Court reversed summary judgment, finding that genuine issues of material fact existed regarding testimony that an original will had been altered, yet no changed will was ever produced, and that all parties agreed to abide by deceased's wishes, but there was some disagreement as to what those wishes were. Further, appellant's reliance on the promise to abide resulted in potential injury and invoked the doctrine of promissory estoppel, precluding summary judgment. Tope v. Taylor, 224 M 131, 728 P2d 789, 43 St. Rep. 2074 (1986).

No Capacity of Seriously Ill Person to Revoke Will: A man who suffered multiple heart attacks and complications that included respiratory arrest, who was unable to speak, and who was questionably lucid and coherent was held not to have the cognitive capacity to make a knowing and voluntary destruction of his will or to possess the capacity to direct the revocation of his will. In re Estate of Fogerty, 221 M 336, 719 P2d 425, 43 St. Rep. 873 (1986).

Presumption of Intent to Revoke Holographic Will by Cancellation: Where appellant's wife died leaving a holographic will in her bedroom nightstand and the will contained unexplained X's drawn on the single page of the will such that all of the paragraphs except one had the markings through them, the court erred in admitting the will to formal probate because the will was revoked by its maker. By the existence of the unexplained X's over the will, it is presumed that the maker intended to revoke the will by cancellation, and the opponents of the will have thereby satisfied their burden of proof under 72-3-310. As the appellant failed to explain the markings, the presumed revocation controls. In re Estate of Cox, 190 M 436, 621 P2d 1057, 37 St. Rep. 2018 (1980).

Revocation by Subsequent Will: Subsequent will, containing provisions wholly inconsistent with the terms of former will, was not a valid revocation of former will where husband and wife had drawn mutual wills in favor of each other pursuant to oral contract conveying their assets to provide financing for their corporate business. Conitz v. Walker, 168 M 238, 541 P2d 1028 (1975).

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning revocation by change of circumstances for former text that read: "(1) If after executing a will the testator is divorced or his marriage annulled, the divorce or annulment revokes any disposition or appointment of property made by the will to the former spouse, any provision conferring a general or special power of appointment on the former spouse, and any nomination of the former spouse as executor, trustee, conservator, or guardian, unless the will expressly provides otherwise.

(2) Property prevented from passing to a former spouse because of revocation by divorce or annulment passes as if the former spouse failed to survive the decedent, and other provisions conferring some power or office on the former spouse are interpreted as if the spouse failed to survive the decedent.

(3) If provisions are revoked solely by this section, they are revived by testator's remarriage to the former spouse.

(4) For purposes of this section, divorce or annulment means any divorce or annulment which would exclude the spouse as a surviving spouse within the meaning of 72-2-103(2). A decree of separation which does not terminate the status of husband and wife is not a divorce for purposes of this section.

(5) No change of circumstances other than as described in this section revokes a will."

72-2-529. Revival of revoked will.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. Although a will takes effect as a revoking instrument when it is executed, it takes effect as a dispositive instrument at death. Once revoked, therefore, a will is ineffective as a dispositive instrument unless it has been revived. This section covers the standards to be applied in determining whether a will (Will # 1) that was revoked by a subsequent will (Will # 2), either expressly or by inconsistency, has been revived by the revocation of the subsequent will, i.e., whether the revocation of Will # 2 (the revoking will) revives Will # 1 (the will that Will # 2 revoked).

As revised, this section is divided into three subsections. Subsections (a) [72-2-529(1)] and (b) [72-2-529(2)] cover the effect of revoking Will # 2 (the revoking will) by a revocatory act under Section 2-507(a)(2) [72-2-527(1)(b)]. Under subsection (a) [72-2-529(1)], if Will # 2 (the revoking will) wholly revoked Will # 1, the revocation of Will # 2 does not revive Will # 1 unless "it is evident from the circumstances of the revocation of [Will # 2] or from the testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations that the testator intended [Will # 1] to take effect as executed." This standard places the burden of persuasion on the proponent of Will # 1 to establish that the decedent's intention was that Will # 1 is to be his or her valid will. Testimony as to the testator's statements at the time he or she revokes Will # 2 or at a later date can be admitted. Indeed, all relevant evidence of intention is to be considered by the court on this question; the open-ended statutory language is not to be undermined by translating it into discrete subsidiary elements, all of which must be met, as the court did in Estate of Boysen, 309 N.W.2d 45 (Minn. 1981).

The pre-1990 version of this section did not distinguish between complete and partial revocation. Regardless of whether Will # 2 wholly or partly revoked Will # 1, the pre-1990 version presumed against revival of Will # 1 when Will # 2 was revoked by act.

As revised, this section properly treats the two situations as distinguishable. The presumption against revival imposed by subsection (a) [72-2-529(1)] is justified because where Will # 2 wholly revoked Will No. 1, the testator understood or should have understood that Will # 1 had no continuing effect. Consequently, subsection (a) [72-2-529(1)] properly presumes that the testator's act of revoking Will # 2 was not accompanied by an intent to revive Will # 1.

Subsection (b) [72-2-529(2)] establishes the opposite presumption where Will # 2 (the revoking will) revoked Will # 1 only in part. In this case, the revocation of Will # 2 revives the revoked part or parts of Will # 1 unless "it is evident from the circumstances of the revocation of [Will # 2] or from the testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations that the testator did not intend the revoked part to take effect as executed." This standard places the burden of persuasion on the party arguing that the revoked part or parts of Will # 1 were not revived. The justification is that where Will # 2 only partly revoked Will # 1, Will # 2 is only a codicil to Will # 1, and the testator knows (or should know) that Will # 1 does have continuing effect. Consequently, subsection (b) [72-2-529(2)] properly presumes that the testator's act of revoking Will # 2 (the codicil) was accompanied by an intent to revive or reinstate the revoked parts of Will # 1.

Subsection (c) [72-2-529(3)] covers the effect on Will # 1 of revoking Will # 2 (the revoking will) by another, later, will (Will # 3). Will # 1 remains revoked except to the extent that Will # 3 shows an intent to have Will # 1 effective.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning revival of revoked will for former text that read: "(1) If a second will which, had it remained effective at death, would have revoked the first will in whole or in part is thereafter revoked by acts under 72-2-321, the first will is revoked in whole or in part unless it is evident from the circumstances of the revocation of the second will or from testator's contemporary or subsequent declarations that he intended the first will to take effect as executed.

(2) If a second will which, had it remained effective at death, would have revoked the first will in whole or in part is thereafter revoked by a third will, the first will is revoked in whole or in part, except to the extent it appears from the terms of the third will that the testator intended the first will to take effect."

Incorporating of Antenuptial Agreement by Reference: Prior to enactment of this section, the Supreme Court, in construing testator's will in accordance with an existing antenuptial agreement, adopted the common law principal of incorporation by reference of an extrinsic writing into a will, where: (1) the extrinsic document was in existence at the time the will was written; (2) the will sufficiently identified the document; and (3) it appeared in the will that testator intended to incorporate the document for the purpose of carrying out his testamentary desires. 72-2-531. Testamentary additions to trusts.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. In addition to making a few stylistic changes, several substantive changes in this section are made.

As revised, it has been made clear that the "trust" need not have been established (funded with a trust res) during the decedent's lifetime, but can be established (funded with a res) by the devise itself. The pre-1990 version probably contemplated this result and reasonably could be so interpreted (because of the phrase "regardless of the existence ... of the corpus of the trust"). Indeed, a few cases have expressly stated that statutory language like the pre-1990 version of this section authorizes pour-over devises to unfunded trusts. E.g., Clymer v. Mayo, 473 N.E.2d 1084 (Mass. 1985); Trosch v. Maryland Nat'l Bank, 32 Md. App. 249, 359 A.2d 564 (1976). The authority of these pronouncements is problematic, however, because the trusts in these cases were so-called "unfunded" life-insurance trusts. An unfunded life-insurance trust is not a trust without a trust res; the trust res in an unfunded life-insurance trust is the contract right to the proceeds of the life-insurance policy conferred on the trustee by virtue of naming the trustee the beneficiary of the policy. See Gordon v. Portland Trust Bank, 201 Or. 648, 271 P.2d 653 (1954) ("[T]he [trustee as the] beneficiary [of the policy] is the owner of a promise to pay the proceeds at the death of the insured ...."); Gurnett v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 356 Ill. 612, 191 N.E. 250 (1934). Thus, the term "unfunded life-insurance trust" does not refer to an unfunded trust, but to a funded trust that has not received additional funding. For further indication of the problematic nature of the idea that the pre-1990 version of this section permits pour-over devises to unfunded trusts, see Estate of Daniels, 665 P.2d 594 (Colo. 1983) (pour-over devise failed; before signing the trust instrument, the decedent was advised by counsel that the "mere signing of the trust agreement would not activate it and that, before the trust could come into being, [the decedent] would have to fund it;" decedent then signed the trust agreement and returned it to counsel "to wait for further directions on it;" no further action was taken by the decedent prior to death; the decedent's will devised the residue of her estate to the trustee of the trust, but added that the residue should go elsewhere "if the trust created by said agreement is not in effect at my death.")

Additional revisions of this section are designed to remove obstacles to carrying out the decedent's intention that were contained in the pre-1990 version. These revisions allow the trust terms to be set forth in a written instrument executed after as well as before or concurrently with the execution of the will; require the devised property to be administered in accordance with the terms of the trust as amended after as well as before the decedent's death, even though the decedent's will does not so provide; and allow the decedent's will to provide that the devise is not to lapse even if the trust is revoked or terminated before the decedent's death.

Revision of Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act. The freestanding Uniform Testamentary Additions to Trusts Act (UTATA) was revised in 1991 in accordance with the revisions to UPC § 2-511 [72-2-531]. States that enact Section 2-511 [72-2-531] need not enact the UTATA as revised in 1991 and should repeal the original version of the UTATA if previously enacted in the state.

72-2-533. Separate writing identifying disposition of tangible personal property.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revision. As part of the broader policy of effectuating a testator's intent and of relaxing formalities of execution, this section permits a testator to refer in his or her will to a separate document disposing of tangible personalty other than money. The pre-1990 version precluded the disposition of "evidences of indebtedness, documents of title, and securities, and property used in a trade or business." These limitations are deleted in the revised version, partly to remove a source of confusion in the pre-1990 version, which arose because evidences of indebtedness, documents of title, and securities are not items of tangible personal property to begin with, and partly to permit the disposition of a broader range of items of tangible personal property.

The language "items of tangible personal property" does not require that the separate document specifically itemize each item of tangible personal property covered. The only requirement is that the document describe the items covered "with reasonable certainty." Consequently, a document referring to "all my tangible personal property other than money" or to "all my tangible personal property located in my office" or using similar catch-all type of language would normally be sufficient.

The separate document disposing of an item or items of tangible personal property may be prepared after execution of the will, so would not come within Section 2-510 [72-2-530] on incorporation by reference. It may even be altered from time to time. The only requirement is that the document be signed by the testator. The pre-1990 version of this section gave effect to an unsigned document if it was in the testator's handwriting. The revisions remove the language giving effect to such an unsigned document. The purpose is to prevent a mere handwritten draft from becoming effective without sufficient indication that the testator intended it to be effective. The signature requirement is designed to prevent mere drafts from becoming effective against the testator's wishes. An unsigned document could still be given effect under Section 2-503 [72-2-523], however, if the proponent could carry the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that the testator intended the document to be effective.

The typical case covered by this section would be a list of personal effects and the persons whom the decedent desired to take specified items.

Sample Clause. Section 2-513 [72-2-533] might be utilized by a clause in the decedent's will such as the following:

I might leave a written statement or list disposing of items of tangible personal property. If I do and if my written statement or list is found and is identified as such by my Personal Representative no later than 30 days after the probate of this will, then my written statement or list is to be given effect to the extent authorized by law and is to take precedence over any contrary devise or devises of the same item or items of property in this will.

Section 2-513 [72-2-533] only authorizes disposition of tangible personal property "not otherwise specifically disposed of by the will." The sample clause above is consistent with this restriction. By providing that the written statement or list takes precedence over any contrary devise in the will, a contrary devise is made conditional upon the written statement or list not contradicting it; if the written statement or list does contradict a devise in the will, the will does not otherwise specifically dispose of the property.

If, however, the clause in the testator's will does not provide that the written statement or list is to take precedence over any contrary devise in the will (or contain a provision having similar effect), then the written statement or list is ineffective to the extent it purports to dispose of items of property that were otherwise specifically disposed of by the will.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 at end of (1), after "money", deleted "evidences of indebtedness, documents of title, and securities and property used in trade or business"; in (2), near middle, substituted "signed by the testator" for "either be in the handwriting of the testator or be signed by him"; and made minor changes in style.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 2-513.

Case Notes

Invested Money Not Considered Article of Personal Property in Probate: In his will, Bjerke listed items of personal property and the persons to whom they were bequeathed and provided that any item of personal property not listed was determined to be a household item bequeathed to plaintiff. Plaintiff maintained that money was personal property and that because Bjerke's money was not on the list, all money should go to plaintiff as contents of the house. The District Court found that the ordinary words of the will indicated that Bjerke did not intend to include money invested outside the home as personal property and that plaintiff was thus entitled only to cash found in the home. Plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court noted that under 1-1-205, personal property includes money, but that the doctrine of ejusdem generis should be applied in interpreting the will. Under the doctrine, general words may be limited in their application to items of a similar class, as exemplified by the more specific and particular words preceding in the general phrase, focusing on what is specifically listed and not on what is omitted. In reading Bjerke's will as a whole, it was clear that he was contemplating that only tangible goods pass to plaintiff. The District Court correctly determined that cash was an item of personal property, but that invested money was not. Hanson v. Estate of Bjerke, 2004 MT 200, 322 M 280, 95 P3d 704 (2004). Question Whether Holographic Document Intended as Codicil or List of Property to Be Dispensed — Testamentary Intent Question of Fact to Be Determined by Judge or Jury — Summary Judgment Improper: Johnson executed a formal will and also executed and signed a holographic document consisting of a handwritten list of possessions and names. The District Court concluded that the holographic document was a personal property list made pursuant to this section, rather than a codicil, and applied 72-2-523 in ordering distribution of the property because there was no intent by Johnson that the holographic document should constitute the complete will. The Supreme Court held that the District Court should have applied 72-2-522, which deals with holographic wills, rather than 72-2-523. The three requirements for a valid holographic will are: (1) individuals must be at least 18 years old and of sound mind; (2) the material provisions of the will must be in the handwriting of the testator and signed by the testator; and (3) the individual must have testamentary intent that the document will dispose of the individual's property after death. Here, the first two elements were met, but a question of fact remained concerning Johnson's intent, precluding summary judgment. The case was remanded to give the parties an opportunity to present evidence concerning Johnson's intent so that the trier of fact could decide the issue under the correct standard. In re Estate of Johnson, 2002 MT 341, 313 M 316, 60 P3d 1014 (2002).

72-2-534. Contracts concerning succession.

Official Comments

Section Relocated. No substantive revision of this section is made, but the section is relocated and renumbered to make room for new Part 7 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7].

The purpose of this section is to tighten the methods by which contracts concerning succession may be proved. Oral contracts not to revoke wills have given rise to much litigation in a number of states; and in many states if two persons execute a single document as their joint will, this gives rise to a presumption that the parties had contracted not to revoke the will except by consent of both.

This section requires that either the will must set forth the material provisions of the contract, or the will must make express reference to the contract and extrinsic evidence prove the terms of the contract, or there must be a separate writing signed by the decedent evidencing the contract. Oral testimony regarding the contract is permitted if the will makes reference to the contract, but this provision of the statute is not intended to affect normal rules regarding admissibility of evidence.

This section does not preclude recovery in quantum meruit for the value of services rendered the testator.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Oral Contract to Devise House Barred: Braaten's stepson cared for Braaten for about 12 years prior to Braaten's death, later claiming that Braaten had orally promised to leave the stepson a house upon Braaten's death. Although the house was subsequently sold, the District Court awarded the stepson $44,100 for the value of his services after determining that Braaten falsely induced the stepson to serve him by promising to devise the house to the stepson. However, no writing of any kind verified Braaten's promises, and under this section, a purely oral contract to make a devise is barred. Thus, because the stepson did not have an enforceable contract, the District Court erred by granting the stepson's claim, and the Supreme Court reversed. In re Estate of Braaten, 2004 MT 213, 322 M 364, 96 P3d 1125 (2004), following Orlando v. Prewett, 218 M 5, 705 P2d 593 (1985).

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Contract to Make Will Denied — No Part Performance Exception: An oral agreement whereby respondents agreed to move to decedent's ranch and lease it from decedent for remainder of his lifetime and decedent agreed to give an undivided one-half interest in the ranch to them at his death and provide them with the right to buy the other one-half interest at the appraised value as of the date of his death was an oral agreement for disposition of decedent's property at death. The District Court committed error and contradicted its own findings of fact when it concluded that the oral agreement was for the leasing, sale, and purchase of real property. The agreement does not conform to a single particular of the requirements provided by statute for the enforcement of such an agreement. The language of this section is unambiguous and does not provide for a part performance exception to the Statute of Frauds. Orlando v. Prewett, 218 M 5, 705 P2d 593, 42 St. Rep. 1328 (1985), followed, with regard to the holding that oral contracts to make a devise are barred, in In re Estate of Braaten, 2004 MT 213, 322 M 364, 96 P3d 1125 (2004). A mechanics' lien filed against real property that was the subject of the 1985 quiet title action against the same parties who filed the lien was held void under the doctrine of res judicata in Orlando v. Prewett, 236 M 478, 771 P2d 111, 46 St. Rep. 520 (1989).

Valid Agreement Not to Revoke — 1966 Will: Testimony regarding its execution and the wording of a 1966 will provided sufficient credible evidence to support the trial court's conclusion that there was a valid oral agreement not to revoke the provisions of the will disposing of family corporation stock. Lazetich v. Miller, 206 M 247, 671 P2d 15, 40 St. Rep. 1626 (1983).

Contract to Make Will Denied — Public Policy: In 1954 the plaintiff moved to his ailing brother's ranch to care for his brother and the ranch. After his brother's death in 1969, the plaintiff asserted the existence of an oral contract whereby his brother agreed to will the ranch to him in consideration of his caretaking. The trial court determined that the plaintiff's services were rendered gratuitously and denied specific performance of the alleged oral contract. Sanger v. Huguenel, 65 M 236, 221 P 349 (1922), enunciated the sound public policy that contracts to make wills are looked upon with disfavor, thereby requiring clear and convincing evidence of their existence. This section is an extension of that public policy. Therefore, the judgment of the trial court was upheld. Craddock v. Berryman, 198 M 155, 645 P2d 399, 39 St. Rep. 835 (1982).

Oral Contract Not to Revoke Mutual Wills: Where husband made inter vivos and causa mortis gifts to female companion, while wife was in a hospital sick from a crippling disorder, of all property which wife had worked all her life next to her husband to accumulate, Court found an oral contract not to revoke mutual wills by clear, cogent, and convincing testimony of two disinterested witnesses so as to set aside gifts for benefit of wife. Conitz v. Walker, 168 M 238, 541 P2d 1028 (1975).

Oral Contract to Bequeath Property: Proof of an oral contract by a deceased to leave property by will must be clear, cogent, and convincing, and the making of such an oral contract or agreement must be established by disinterested witnesses. Cox v. Williamson, 124 M 512, 227 P2d 614 (1951).

72-2-535. Deposit of will with court in testator's lifetime.

Official Comments

Many states already have statutes permitting deposit of wills during a testator's lifetime. Most of these statutes have elaborate provisions governing purely administrative matters: how the will is to be enclosed in a sealed wrapper, what is to be endorsed on the wrapper, the form of receipt or certificate given to the testator, the fee to be charged, how the will is to be opened after testator's death and who is to be notified. Under this section, details have been left to Court rule, except as other relevant statutes such as one governing fees may apply.

It is, of course, vital to maintain the confidential nature of deposited wills. However, this obviously does not prevent the opening of the will after the death of the testator if necessary in order to determine the executor or other interested persons to be notified. Nor should it prevent opening the will to microfilm for confidential record storage, for example. These matters could again be regulated by Court rule.

The provision permitting examination of a will of a protected person by the conservator supplements Section 5-427 [72-5-433].

Part 6
Rules of Construction Applicable Only to Wills

Part Official Comments

Parts 6 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 6] and 7 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7] address a variety of construction problems that commonly occur in wills, trusts, and other types of governing instruments. All of the "rules" set forth in these parts yield to a finding of a contrary intention and are therefore rebuttable presumptions.

The rules of construction set forth in Part 6 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 6] apply only to wills. The rules of construction set forth in Part 7 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7] apply to wills and other governing instruments.

The sections in Part 6 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 6] deal with such problems as death before the testator (lapse), the inclusiveness of the will as to property of the testator, effect of failure of a gift in the will, change in form of securities specifically devised, ademption by reason of fire, sale and the like, exoneration, and exercise of a power of appointment by general language in the will.

Part Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Establishment of Museum From Charitable Trust Proceeds Not Considered Precatory Language Secondary to General Philanthropic Trust Purposes: Alberta Bair's will established a charitable trust and directed the board overseeing the trust proceeds to establish, improve, and maintain a museum to display the family's historical artifacts. The District Court concluded that the will language directing establishment of a museum was authorized in a precatory clause and that the board had the discretion whether to create a museum. The Supreme Court disagreed.

The clear language of the trust agreement established that although the trust was created for general philanthropic purposes, the creation of a museum was the primary purpose of the trust, and the District Court committed reversible error in holding that the trust agreement did not require establishment of a museum. In re Bair Family Trust, 2008 MT 144, 343 M 138, 183 P3d 61 (2008), followed in Lane v. Caler, 2013 MT 108, 370 Mont. 30, 299 P.3d 827. See also In re Estate of Bolinger, 284 M 114, 943 P2d 981 (1997).

Precatory Language Not Sufficient to Create Trust: The children of the testator brought an action to have the District Court declare that the language of the will, which left everything to the testator's father or in the event of his death to the testator's stepmother and which stated that the testator had confidence that his father or stepmother would use the estate in the best interests of his children, in reality created a trust in behalf of the testator's children. The Supreme Court, stating that the principles of trust law existing before the adoption of the new trust code were still applicable, held that the language used by the decedent clearly and unambiguously made an outright gift to his father and in default to his stepmother and specifically excluded his children and that therefore the statement of the reasons for doing so by the decedent did not limit the testamentary gift and a trust was not created. In re Estate of Bolinger, 284 M 114, 943 P2d 981, 54 St. Rep. 799 (1997).

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Gift of Tax-Free Municipal Bonds — Testator's Intent: The deceased left half of his tax-free municipal bonds to his five children. The rest of his property passed by the residual clause to his widow. The children argued that they should have received half of the remaining municipal bonds. The Supreme Court ruled that the rest of the bonds were only exempt from federal tax and not state tax and therefore were not tax-free. The court stated that the deceased was a knowledgeable investor and would have used the proper wording if he had wanted to leave a portion of the remaining bonds to his children. In re Estate of Ellison, 243 M 258, 792 P2d 5, 47 St. Rep. 910 (1990).

Intent Construed From Four Corners of Will: The testatrix, on a form will, crossed out the "and" in a bequest to two heirs and substituted the word "or". The Supreme Court held that in examining the entire will and interpreting the language in its ordinary sense, the court still could not ascertain the intent of the testatrix and therefore the property passed by intestacy. Drabant v. DeLong, 242 M 15, 788 P2d 889, 47 St. Rep. 496 (1990).

Intent of Testator Devising Interest in Land Determined by Law of State Where Land Located: The decedent's husband had predeceased her, and in his will he had created a power of appointment in her that she did not specifically exercise in her will. The appellants argued that Montana law did not control because both parties had died in Minnesota and that the Minnesota court had ruled that the general residuary clause in the wife's will did constitute an exercise of the power granted to her by her husband. The Supreme Court ruled that the mineral royalty interests were an interest in land located in Montana and that the intention of a testator in devising land is controlled by the law of the situs. The court went on to find that Montana's law states that a power of appointment must be specifically exercised and is not exercised by a general residuary clause. In re Estate of Allen, 237 M 114, 772 P2d 297, 46 St. Rep. 665 (1989).

Extrinsic Evidence Unnecessary When Devise Clear: The language of a devise bequeathed property, if any, left in a partnership at the time of testator's demise. The District Court found the partnership to be a conduit through which the partners conducted their tenancy-in-common business and reported income for tax purposes; however, absent any partnership interest in real property, the court determined no property should pass and properly granted summary judgment. Because the testator's intention could be ascertained from the plain language of the devise alone, it was not necessary or proper for the court to receive extrinsic evidence in making its determination. In re Estate of Greenfield, 232 M 357, 757 P2d 1297, 45 St. Rep. 1112 (1988).

Construction of "Cash and Savings" Clause in Will and Subsequent Agreement — Parol Evidence Admissible: In broadly construing a clause in a will leaving "cash and savings" to the wife and when the clause was also used in a subsequent agreement wherein the parties more clearly delineated the division of property, the trial court properly granted to the wife a promissory note, a diamond ring, partnership interests, and corporate shares. A residuary clause bequeathing to a brother the remainder of the estate, "including but not limited to my ranch and any livestock and machinery", properly included all personal property and assets connected with the ranch, including patronage and capital credits in electric, telephone, and farming cooperatives. The "cash and savings" clause as used in the subsequent agreement did not alter the will and was properly construed in the context of the will. Further, it was not error for the lower court to admit parol evidence relative to the parties' intent as to the agreement in interpreting ambiguous language in the agreement. In re Estate of Flasted, 228 M 85, 741 P2d 750, 44 St. Rep. 1362 (1987).

"In Equal Shares, Per Stirpes and Not Per Capita" — Intent of Testator Controls: Testatrix devised residue of her estate to her eight grandchildren "in equal shares, per stirpes and not per capita". Copersonal representative appealed District Court's interpretation of the will, which awarded one-eighth equal shares to the named grandchildren rather than one-half to her two children and one-half to the six children of her sister. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court and held that taking the will as a whole, the testatrix clearly intended her grandchildren to take in their own right equally and not by right of representation through their living parents. The Supreme Court denied appellant attorney fees and costs on the basis that appellant did not prosecute the action in good faith as a fiduciary of the estate and its successors. In re Estate of Evans, 217 M 89, 704 P2d 35, 42 St. Rep. 1047 (1985).

Undue Influence on Testator Making Will: Undue influence was present when testator made 1980 wills at urging of three of his four children when at time of making the wills testator was 91 years old, confined to a rest home, hard of hearing, and suffering from a brain disorder, and the wills disinherited the fourth child, whose interests testator's actions since 1948 had been directed toward protecting. The Supreme Court held there was substantial credible evidence to support the District Court's determination that there was undue influence and dismissal of petition for probate of the 1980 wills. In re Estate of Aageson, 217 M 78, 702 P2d 338, 42 St. Rep. 1038 (1985).

Will Versus Deed — Test for Undue Influence Different: Plaintiff obtained a power of attorney from his sick and elderly aunt and then brought her to Montana to live with him. The aunt later executed a new will leaving her estate to the plaintiff and deeded a ranch to plaintiff. It was alleged that plaintiff exercised undue influence over his aunt in the execution of the deed, the will, and the power of attorney. The court employed 28-2-407 in concluding that plaintiff had exercised undue influence in the execution of the deed. A different test is employed when establishing undue influence in the execution of a will. A will may not be defeated on grounds of undue influence unless the testator is induced to execute an instrument which is in form and appearance his will but in reality expresses testamentary dispositions which he would not have voluntarily made. In this case the will was drafted by the lawyer the testator had used for many years, and there is no evidence that plaintiff participated in the preparation of the will or that he dictated the will's terms. The will should therefore not have been set aside. Dybvik v. Dybvik, 201 M 389, 654 P2d 989, 39 St. Rep. 2184 (1982).

Failure to Timely Exercise Option "to Take": The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's holding that appellant failed to exercise an option "to take" contained in the last will and testament of his mother where he used the property but failed to make payment to other heirs within the designated 2-year period. The intention of a testator, as expressed in his will, controls the legal effect of his disposition. The intention of the testator is also to be ascertained from the words of a will, which are to be taken in their ordinary and grammatical sense unless a clear intention to use them in another sense can be collected. The words of a will are to receive an interpretation which will give to every expression some effect, rather than one which will render any of the expressions inoperative. In re Estate of Erdahl, 193 M 103, 630 P2d 230, 38 St. Rep. 978 (1981).

Variation of Terms of Written Contract Held Improper — Evidentiary Rule as Procedural Rule Only: In an action to collect the amount due under a promissory note, the District Court erred in allowing the plaintiff to prove that the terms of a written contract concerning only the terms of sale of a bar also applied to a previous sale of another business. Rule 106, Montana Rules of Evidence, relied on by the District Court to vary the clear terms of the parties' written agreement, is a procedural rule concerning the introduction of only a portion of a whole agreement and cannot be used to affect the substance of the existing law of parol evidence. Spraggins v. Elvidge, 192 M 8, 625 P2d 1151, 38 St. Rep. 493 (1981).

Contention That Residence to Pass Intestate: Where decedent directed in her will that "after the decease of her two sons" her property was to go to two others, the District Court properly dismissed the claims of representatives of her deceased sons who claimed, among other things, that the residue of the estate, after termination of the life estates of the sons, would pass intestate to the estates of the deceased sons, as wills are to be construed to pass all of the estate and a devise of real property passes all of such property. In re Estate of Wallace v. McAlear, 186 M 18, 606 P2d 136 (1980).

Mortmain Statute Impliedly Repealed as Contrary to MUPC: The MUPC clearly requires that the intent of the testator control the passing of his property. The mortmain statute, 72-11-334 (now repealed), restricting charitable devises, prevents implementation of the intent expressed in a will and was impliedly repealed by the adoption of the MUPC. In re Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

Imperfect Description: A description of property is an "imperfect description" within the meaning of 72-11-313 (now repealed) if it is a description of property over which the testator had no power of testamentary disposition and the mistake or omission must be corrected. If incapable of correction without substituting what the Court thought the testator intended, the false description must be discarded, even if it means that nothing can pass. St. Fish & Game Comm'n v. Keller, 173 M 523, 568 P2d 166 (1977).

Expression of One Thing Excludes Another — Enumeration Followed by General Phrase: Where will had left legatee a sum of cash, a sewing table, a color television set, luggage, costume jewelry, a cut glass vase and pitcher, personal effects, and clothes, application of the doctrine of ejusdem generis was appropriate to determine whether "personal effects" included diamond jewelry valued at $8,700; it was also appropriate to apply doctrine to determine whether "costume jewelry" included the diamond jewelry. In re Estate of Donovan, 169 M 278, 546 P2d 512 (1976).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Precatory Language in Devise: Under former law, when the testator's will provided that all his property was to go to his wife as her sole and separate property "with the knowledge that she will be fair and equitable to all of my children", the will was clear on its face and the language regarding the children was precatory and did not create a resulting trust or contract to make a will on behalf of the children of the testator by a former marriage. Stapleton v. DeVries, 167 M 108, 535 P2d 1267 (1975).

Creation of Life Estate: Holographic will stating "I want her to have free use of and administer my estate for life or as long as she cares to" created a life estate. In re Hetland's Estate, 166 M 122, 531 P2d 367 (1975).

Undevised Remainder: Clause in holographic will providing for distribution plan if it became necessary to liquidate the estate was not a testamentary disposition, and upon the death of the surviving spouse the estate was distributed according to intestate succession. In re Hetland's Estate, 166 M 122, 531 P2d 367 (1975).

Establishment of Will: Presumption created by former statute requiring that construction which would prevent total intestacy be preferred over another construction did not aid in making a will out of an instrument which showed no testamentary intent other than use of the word "will", but rather spoke in terms of authorizing present acts with respect to personal property. In re Estate of Gasparovich, 158 M 21, 487 P2d 1148 (1971).

Division of Residue: Holographic will making specific bequests to various persons' children and directing that any residue be divided by percentage "to all of them more or less" was construed to bequeath specific sums to children as classes rather than individually, but with children to participate equally as individuals in residue. In re Estate of Jensen, 152 M 495, 452 P2d 418 (1969).

Real Estate Included in Bequest: Where the deceased in a holographic will bequeathed certain personal property to a Katherine Clauson and "also the residue of my estate after all bequests are taken care of", the word "bequeath" is sufficient to include real estate located in Montana. In re Gift's Estate, 125 M 95, 232 P2d 328 (1951).

Power of Attorney: A power of attorney to a physician to perform all medical services for decedent for which he was to receive $2,000, any unpaid balance thereof to be paid by her executor, contained a conditional disposition. Trenouth v. Mulroney, 124 M 499, 227 P2d 590 (1951).

Compliance With Terms of Will: Where will provided that the Court should appoint "the nominee of the Roman Catholic Bishop" as executor, the Court could not disregard such provision and appoint another as administrator with the will annexed. In re Effertz' Estate, 123 M 45, 207 P2d 1151, 11 ALR 2d 1278 (1949).

Children Not Specifically Mentioned: Where a will contained the provision that the residue of the estate should go to certain named children, and a provision that certain named children were intentionally omitted and another provision that "my heirs at law not elsewhere herein mentioned" shall receive $1, such latter provision will be construed to apply to children of a deceased child not named in the other provisions of the will. In re Benolken's Estate, 122 M 425, 205 P2d 1141 (1949).

"Heirs at Law": "Heirs", "heirs at law", and "legal heirs" are in a legal sense the same. In re Benolken's Estate, 122 M 425, 205 P2d 1141 (1949).

Ambiguous Will — Right to Legacy: In a proceeding to determine beneficiaries under residuary clause of will in which testatrix left the sum of $50 to the estate of a deceased brother "as his share of my estate as heir or otherwise", where the children of the deceased brother who were not mentioned in the will claimed they were entitled to share in the residue, but the residuary clause provided "all the rest and remainder shall be divided between my lawful heirs herein mentioned", the Court, after considering such extrinsic facts as were allowable under 72-11-313 (now repealed) in case of ambiguity, was unable to determine who should have the $50, but affirmed the judgment of the Trial Court that the children of the deceased brother were not entitled to share in the residue. In re Doyle's Estate, 107 M 64, 80 P2d 374 (1938).

Equitable Conversion: Under 72-11-322 (now repealed), when a will directed the conversion of real property into money and turned over to the executor, equitable conversion took place upon the death of the testator and the real estate was treated as personalty. In re Livingston's Estate, 91 M 584, 9 P2d 159, 90 ALR 1036 (1932).

Effects: A will reading: "I hereby give, devise and bequeath all my goods, chattels and effects to my wife", passed all of his property, both real and personal. The use of the word "effects", though generally including only personal property, is broad enough to encompass real estate. (Mr. Justice Stark dissenting.) In re Spriggs' Estate, 70 M 272, 225 P 617 (1924).

Children as Not Including Grandchildren: When a will bequeathed one-half of the testator's estate to his two sisters and the other half to their children if living at the time of his death and both sisters had died before the will was made leaving no children, the word "children" used in the will could not, under the rules of construction of wills laid down by 72-11-302 (now repealed) and 72-11-313 (now repealed), be construed as including grandchildren so as to permit a grandson of one of the sisters to share in the estate. In re Hash's Estate, 64 M 118, 208 P 605 (1922).

Inclusion of Grandchildren by Use of the Word "Children": Where a will bequeathed one-half of the testator's estate to his sisters and the other half to their children if living at the time of his death, and both sisters had died before the will was made leaving no children, the word "children" used in the will could not, under the rules of construction of wills laid down by 72-11-302 (now repealed) and 72-11-313 (now repealed), be construed as including grandchildren so as to permit a grandson of one of the sisters to share in the estate. In re Hash's Estate, 64 M 118, 208 P 605 (1922).

Endowed: In a proceeding to debar decedent's widow, who under the will was "endowed in his estate, real and personal", from nominating an administrator with the will annexed, Trial Court properly found that the testator by the use of the word "endowed" did not intend that she should be limited to her right of dower (a third part of his real property) but did intend that she should have the same portion of his estate, both real and personal, to which she would have been entitled had he died intestate. In re McLure's Estate, 63 M 536, 208 P 900 (1922).

Intention of Testator: That construction of a will must be favored which will reconcile with testator's intention the several provisions thereof. In re McLure's Estate, 63 M 536, 208 P 900 (1922).

Corporate Stock — Action to Recover — Joinder Unnecessary: A suit by a legatee or devisee of stock in a Montana corporation which owned real estate but which had been dissolved by expiration of its term of incorporation, to recover her interest from a third person who claims ownership is not one to recover the stock for the benefit of the estate but one brought as tenant in common of the property under 72-11-319 (now repealed), and could be maintained without joining the other devisees or the executors. Barker v. Edwards, 259 F 484 (1919).

Ordinary Business Transaction: Where a testator had made a bequest of $3,000, "less a note of two thousand dollars", held by him against the beneficiary, the quoted words would, in ordinary business transactions, have reference to the debt as a whole and not to the sum mentioned as principal only and should therefore be assigned their ordinary meaning. In re Beck's Estate, 44 M 561, 121 P 784 (1912).

Character of Instruments — Letter Made Part of Will: A letter not intended to be a will is not a holographic will. However, an instrument not of a testamentary character may be construed with one having that character for the purpose of determining whether the writings, taken together, constitute a will; if the former, by appropriate reference, is clearly referred to and made a part of the latter, it is a part of the will; otherwise, it is not. In re Noyes' Estate, 40 M 231, 106 P 355 (1909), distinguished in In re Augestad's Estate, 111 M 138, 106 P2d 1087 (1940).

Employees: When a will provided for a specified sum to all employees of a firm of which testator was a member, who had been in the employ of the firm for 1 year or more previous to testator's death, only those who were actually in the employ of the firm at the time of testator's death and had been so continuously for 1 year immediately prior to testator's death were entitled to be rewarded under the terms of the will. In re Klein's Estate, 35 M 185, 88 P 798 (1907).

"Firm" Meant in Ordinary Rather Than Legal Sense: Where will provided that each of the employees of a firm, of which testator was a member, "who shall have been in the employ of the said firm one year or more previous to my decease", should be entitled to receive $1,000, the word "firm" was used by the testator in its ordinary rather than its legal sense. In re Klein's Estate, 35 M 185, 88 P 798 (1907).

Reference to Other Provisions: Uncertainty arising on face of will may be resolved by reference to other provisions of the will, taking into consideration the circumstances under which the will was made. In re Peterson's Estate, 49 M 96, 140 P 237 (1914); In re Klein's Estate, 35 M 185, 88 P 798 (1907).

72-2-611. Scope.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. Common-law rules of construction yield to a finding of a contrary intention. The pre-1990 version of this section provided that the rules of construction in Part 6 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 6] yielded only to a "contrary intention indicated by the will." To align the statutory rules of construction in Part 6 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 6] with those established at common law, this section is revised so that the rules of construction yield to a "finding of a contrary intention." As revised, evidence extrinsic to the will as well as the content of the will itself is admissible for the purpose of rebutting the rules of construction in Part 6 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 6].

As originally promulgated, this section began with the sentence: "The intention of a testator as expressed in his will controls the legal effect of his dispositions." This sentence is removed primarily because it is inappropriate and unnecessary in a part of the Code containing rules of construction. The deletion of this sentence does not signify a retreat from the widely accepted proposition that a testator's intention controls the legal effect of his or her dispositions.

A further reason for deleting this sentence is that a possible, though unintended, reading of this sentence might be that it prevents the judicial adoption of a general reformation doctrine for wills, as approved by the American Law Institute in the Restatement (Second) of Property § 34.7 & comment d, illustration 11, and as advocated in Langbein & Waggoner, "Reformation of Wills on the Ground of Mistake: Change of Direction in American Law?," 130 U.Pa.L.Rev. 521 (1982). The striking of this sentence removes that possible impediment to the judicial adoption of a general reformation doctrine for wills as approved by the American Law Institute and as advocated in the Langbein-Waggoner article.

Cross Reference. See Section 8-101(b) [an effective date provision not codified in Montana] for the application of the rules of construction in this Part [Title 72, chapter 2, part 6] to documents executed prior to the effective date of this Article [Title 72, chapter 2].

72-2-612. Will may pass all property and after-acquired property.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revision. This section is revised to assure that, for example, a residuary clause in a will not only passes property owned at death that is not otherwise devised, even though the property was acquired by the testator after the will was executed, but also passes property acquired by a testator's estate after his or her death. This reverses a case like Braman Estate, 435 Pa. 573, 258 A.2d 492 (1969), where the court held that Mary's residuary devise to her sister Ruth "or her estate," which had passed to Ruth's estate where Ruth predeceased Mary by about a year, could not go to Ruth's residuary legatee. The court held that Ruth's will had no power to control the devolution of property acquired by Ruth's estate after her death; such property passed, instead, by intestate succession from Ruth. This section, applied to the Braman Estate case, would mean that the property acquired by Ruth's estate after her death would pass under her residuary clause.

The added language also makes it clear that items such as bonuses awarded to an employee after his or her death pass under his or her will.

Compiler's Comments

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 near beginning, after "will", substituted "may provide for the passage of" for "is construed to pass"; near end, after "acquired", substituted "by the estate after the testator's death" for "after the execution of the will"; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 2-602.

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Contention That Residence to Pass Intestate: Where decedent directed in her will that "after the decease of her two sons" her property was to go to two others, the District Court properly dismissed the claims of representatives of her deceased sons who claimed, among other things, that the residue of the estate, after termination of the life estates of the sons, would pass intestate to the estates of the deceased sons, as wills are to be construed to pass all of the estate and a devise of real property passes all of such property. 72-2-613. Antilapse — deceased devisee — class gifts.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revised Section. Revised Section 2-603 [72-2-613] is a comprehensive antilapse statute that resolves a variety of interpretive questions that have arisen under standard antilapse statutes, including the antilapse statute of the pre-1990 Code.

Theory of Lapse. A will transfers property at the testator's death, not when the will was executed. The common-law rule of lapse is predicated on this principle and on the notion that property cannot be transferred to a deceased individual. Under the rule of lapse, all devises are automatically and by law conditioned on survivorship of the testator. A devise to a devisee who predeceases the testator fails (lapses); the devised property does not pass to the devisee's estate, to be distributed according to the devisee's will or pass by intestate succession from the devisee. (Section 2-702 [72-2-712] modifies the rule of lapse by presumptively conditioning devises on a 120-hour period of survival.)

"Antilapse" Statutes — Rationale of Section 2-603 [72-2-613]. Statutes such as Section 2-603 [72-2-613] are commonly called "antilapse" statutes. An antilapse statute is remedial in nature, tending to preserve equality of treatment among different lines of succession. Although Section 2-603 [72-2-613] is a rule of construction, and hence under Section 2-601 [72-2-611] yields to a finding of a contrary intention, the remedial character of the statute means that it should be given the widest possible latitude to operate in considering whether in an individual case there is an indication of a contrary intent sufficiently convincing to defeat the statute.

The 120-hour Survivorship Period. In effect, the requirement of survival of the testator's death means survival of the 120-hour period following the testator's death. This is because, under Section 2-702(a) [72-2-712(1)], "an individual who is not established to have survived an event ... by 120 hours is deemed to have predeceased the event." As made clear by subsection (a)(6) [72-2-613(1)(f)], for the purposes of Section 2-707 [72-2-717], the "event" to which Section 2-702(a) [72-2-712(1)] relates is the testator's death.

General Rule of Section 2-603 — Subsection (b) [72-2-613(2)]. Subsection (b) [72-2-613(2)] states the general rule of Section 2-603 [72-2-613]. Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] applies to individual devises; subsection (b)(2) [72-2-613(2)(b)] applies to devises in class gift form. Together, they show that the "antilapse" label is somewhat misleading. Strictly speaking, these subsections do not reverse the common-law rule of lapse. They do not abrogate the law-imposed condition of survivorship, so that devised property passes to the estates of predeceasing devisees. Subsections (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] and (b)(2) [72-2-613(2)(b)] leave the law-imposed condition of survivorship intact, but modify the devolution of lapsed devises by providing a statutory substitute gift in the case of specified relatives. The statutory substitute gift is to the devisee's descendants who survive the testator by 120 hours; they take the property to which the devisee would have been entitled had the devisee survived the testator by 120 hours.

Class Gifts. In line with modern policy, subsection (b)(2) [72-2-613(2)(b)] continues the pre-1990 Code's approach of expressly extending the antilapse protection to class gifts. Class gifts to "issue," "descendants," "heirs of the body," "heirs," "next of kin," "relatives," "family," or a class described by language of similar import are excluded, however, because antilapse protection is unnecessary in class gifts of these types. They already contain within themselves the idea of representation, under which a deceased class member's descendants are substituted for him or her. See Sections 2-708 [72-2-718], 2-709 [72-2-719], 2-711 [72-2-721].

"Void" Gifts. By virtue of subsection (a)(4) [72-2-613(1)(d)], subsection (b) [72-2-613(2)] applies to the so-called "void" gift, where the devisee is dead at the time of execution of the will. Though contrary to some decisions, it seems likely that the testator would want the descendants of a person included, for example, in a class term but dead when the will is made to be treated like the descendants of another member of the class who was alive at the time the will was executed but who dies before the testator.

Protected Relatives. The specified relatives whose devises are protected by this section are the testator's grandparents and their descendants and the testator's stepchildren or, in the case of a testamentary exercise of a power of appointment, the testator's (donee's) or donor's grandparents and their descendants and the testator's or donor's stepchildren.

Section 2-603 [72-2-613] extends the "antilapse" protection to devises to the testator's own stepchildren. The term "stepchild" is defined in subsection (a)(5) [72-2-613(1)(e)]. Antilapse protection is not extended to descendants of the testator's stepchildren or to stepchildren of any of the testator's relatives. As to the testator's own stepchildren, note that under Section 2-804 [72-2-814] a devise to a stepchild might be revoked if the testator and the stepchild's adoptive or biological parent become divorced; the antilapse statute does not, of course, apply to a deceased stepchild's devise if it was revoked by Section 2-804 [72-2-814]. Subsections (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] and (b)(2) [72-2-613(2)(b)] give this result by providing that the substituted descendants take the property to which the deceased devisee or deceased class member would have been entitled if he or she had survived the testator. If a deceased stepchild whose devise was revoked by Section 2-804 [72-2-814] had survived the testator, that stepchild would not have been entitled to his or her devise, and so his or her descendants take nothing, either.

Other than stepchildren, devisees related to the testator by affinity are not protected by this section.

Section 2-603 [72-2-613] Applicable to Testamentary Exercise of a Power of Appointment Where Appointee Fails to Survive the Testator. Subsections (a)(3), (4), (5), (7) [72-2-613(1)(c), (1)(d), (1)(e), (1)(g)], and (b)(5) [72-2-613(2)(e)] extend the protection of this section to appointees under a power of appointment exercised by the testator's will. The extension of the antilapse statute to powers of appointment is a step long overdue. The extension brings the statute into line with the Restatement (Second) of Property (Donative Transfers) § 18.6 (1986).

Substituted Gift. The substitute gifts provided for by subsections (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] and (b)(2) [72-2-613(2)(b)] are to the deceased devisee's descendants. They include adopted persons and children of unmarried parents to the extent they would inherit from the devisee; see Sections 1-201 [72-1-103] and 2-114 [72-2-124].

The 120-hour survival requirement stated in Section 2-702 [72-2-712] does not require descendants who would be substituted for their parent by this section to survive their parent by any set period.

The statutory substitute gift is divided among the devisee's descendants "by representation," a term defined in Section 2-709(b) [72-2-719(2)].

Section 2-603 [72-2-613] Restricted to Wills. Section 2-603 [72-2-613] is applicable only when a devisee of a will predeceases the testator. It does not apply to beneficiary designations in life-insurance policies, retirement plans, or transfer-on-death accounts, nor does it apply to inter-vivos trusts, whether revocable or irrevocable. See, however, Sections 2-706 [72-2-716] and 2-707 [72-2-717] for rules of construction applicable when the beneficiary of a life-insurance policy, a retirement plan, or a transfer-on-death account predeceases the decedent or when the beneficiary of a future interest is not living when the interest is to take effect in possession or enjoyment.

Contrary Intention — the Rationale of Subsection (b)(3) [72-2-613(2)(c)]. An antilapse statute is a rule of construction, designed to carry out presumed intention. In effect, Section 2-603 [72-2-613] declares that when a testator devises property "to A (a specified relative)," the testator (if he or she had thought further about it) is presumed to have wanted to add: "but if A is not alive (120 hours after my death), I devise the property in A's stead to A's descendants (who survive me by 120 hours)."

Under Section 2-601 [72-2-611], the rule of Section 2-603 [72-2-613] yields to a finding of a contrary intention. A foolproof means of expressing a contrary intention is to add to a devise the phrase "and not to [the devisee's] descendants." In the case of a power of appointment, the phrase "and not to an appointee's descendants" can be added by the donor of the power in the document creating the power of appointment, if the donor does not want the antilapse statute to apply to an appointment under a power. Another method of expressing a contrary intention as to nonresiduary devises is to add to the residuary clause the phrase "including all lapsed or failed devises." Another foolproof method of expressing a contrary intention is to add a separate clause stating that all lapsed or failed nonresiduary devises are to pass under the residuary clause. See Section 2-603(a)(1) [72-2-613(1)(a)].

A much-litigated question is whether mere words of survivorship — such as in a devise "to my daughter, A, if A survives me" or "to my surviving children" — automatically defeat the antilapse statute. Lawyers who believe that the attachment of words of survivorship to a devise is a foolproof method of defeating an antilapse statute are mistaken. The very fact that the question is litigated so frequently is itself proof that the use of mere words of survivorship is far from foolproof. In addition, the results of the litigated cases are divided on the question. To be sure, many cases hold that mere words of survivorship do automatically defeat the antilapse statute. E.g., Estate of Stroble, 6 Kan.App.2d 955, 636 P.2d 236 (1981); Annot., 63 A.L.R.2d 1172, 1186 (1959); Annot., 92 A.L.R. 846, 857 (1934). Other cases, however, reach the opposite conclusion. E.g., Estate of Ulrikson, 290 N.W.2d 757 (Minn. 1980) (residuary devise to testator's brother Melvin and sister Rodine, and "in the event that either one of them shall predecease me, then to the other surviving brother or sister"; Melvin and Rodine predeceased testator, Melvin but not Rodine leaving descendants who survived testator; court held residue passed to Melvin's descendants under antilapse statute); Detzel v. Nieberding, 7 Ohio Misc. 262, 219 N.E.2d 327 (P. Ct. 1966) (devise of $5,000 to sister "provided she be living at the time of my death"; sister predeceased testator; court held $5,000 devise passed under antilapse statute to sister's descendants); Henderson v. Parker, 728 S.W.2d 768 (Tex. 1987) (devise of all of testator's property "unto our surviving children of this marriage"; two of testator's children survived testator, but one child, William, predeceased testator leaving descendants who survived testator; court held that share William would have taken passed to William's descendants under antilapse statute; words of survivorship found ineffective to counteract antilapse statute because court interpreted those words as merely restricting the devisees to those living at the time the will was executed); see also Restatement (Second) of Property (Donative Transfers) § 27.2 comment f, illustration 5; cf. id. § 27.1 comment e, illustration 6.

Subsection (b)(3) [72-2-613(2)(c)] adopts the position that mere words of survivorship do not — by themselves, in the absence of additional evidence — lead to automatic defeat of the antilapse statute. As noted in French, "Antilapse Statutes Are Blunt Instruments: A Blueprint for Reform," 37 Hastings L. J. 335, 369 (1985), "courts have tended to accord too much significance to survival requirements when deciding whether to apply antilapse statutes."

A formalistic argument sometimes employed by courts adopting the view that words of survivorship automatically defeat the antilapse statute is that, when words of survivorship are used, there is nothing upon which the antilapse statute can operate; the devise itself, it is said, is eliminated by the devisee's having predeceased the testator. The language of subsections (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] and (b)(2) [72-2-613(2)(b)], however, nullify this formalistic argument by providing that the predeceased devisee's descendants take the property to which the devisee would have been entitled had the devisee survived the testator.

Another objection to applying the antilapse statute is that mere words of survivorship somehow establish a contrary intention. The argument is that attaching words of survivorship indicates that the testator thought about the matter and intentionally did not provide a substitute gift to the devisee's descendants. At best, this is an inference only, which may or may not accurately reflect the testator's actual intention. An equally plausible inference is that the words of survivorship are in the testator's will merely because the testator's lawyer used a will form with words of survivorship. The testator who went to lawyer X and ended up with a will containing devises with a survivorship requirement could by chance have gone to lawyer Y and ended up with a will containing devises with no survivorship requirement — with no different intent on the testator's part from one case to the other.

Even a lawyer's deliberate use of mere words of survivorship to defeat the antilapse statute does not guarantee that the lawyer's intention represents the client's intention. Any linkage between the lawyer's intention and the client's intention is speculative unless the lawyer discussed the matter with the client. Especially in the case of younger-generation devisees, such as the client's children or nieces and nephews, it cannot be assumed that all clients, on their own, have anticipated the possibility that the devisee will predecease the client and will have thought through who should take the devised property in case the never-anticipated event happens.

If, however, evidence establishes that the lawyer did discuss the question with the client, and that the client decided that, for example, if the client's child predeceases the client, the deceased child's children (the client's grandchildren) should not take the devise in place of the deceased child, then the combination of the words of survivorship and the extrinsic evidence of the client's intention would support a finding of a contrary intention under Section 2-601 [72-2-611]. See Example 1, below. For this reason, Sections 2-601 [72-2-611] and 2-603 [72-2-613] will not expose lawyers to malpractice liability for the amount that, in the absence of the finding of the contrary intention, would have passed under the antilapse statute to a deceased devisee's descendants. The success of a malpractice claim depends upon sufficient evidence of a client's intention and the lawyer's failure to carry out that intention. In a case in which there is evidence that the client did not want the antilapse statute to apply, that evidence would support a finding of a contrary intention under Section 2-601 [72-2-611], thus preventing the client's intention from being defeated by Section 2-603 [72-2-613] and protecting the lawyer from liability for the amount that, in the absence of the finding of a contrary intention, would have passed under the antilapse statute to a deceased devisee's descendants.

Any inference about actual intention to be drawn from mere words of survivorship is especially problematic in the case of will substitutes such as life insurance, where it is less likely that the insured had the assistance of a lawyer in drafting the beneficiary designation. Although Section 2-603 [72-2-613] only applies to wills, a companion provision is Section 2-706 [72-2-716], which applies to will substitutes, including life insurance. Section 2-706 [72-2-716] also contains language similar to that in subsection (b)(3) [72-2-613(2)(c)], directing that words of survivorship do not, in the absence of additional evidence, indicate an intent contrary to the application of this section. It would be anomalous to provide one rule for wills and a different rule for will substitutes.

The basic operation of Section 2-603 [72-2-613] is illustrated in the following example:

Example 1. G's will devised "$10,000 to my surviving children." G had two children, A and B. A predeceased G, leaving a child, X, who survived G by 120 hours. B also survived G by 120 hours.

Solution: Under subsection (b)(2) [72-2-613(2)(b)], X takes $5,000 and B takes $5,000. The substitute gift to A's descendant, X, is not defeated by the fact that the devise is a class gift nor, under subsection (b)(3) [72-2-613(2)(c)], is it automatically defeated by the fact that the word "surviving" is used.

Note that subsection (b)(3) [72-2-613(2)(c)] provides that words of survivorship are not by themselves to be taken as expressing a contrary intention for purposes of Section 2-601 [72-2-611]. Under Section 2-601 [72-2-611], a finding of a contrary intention could appropriately be based on affirmative evidence that G deliberately used the words of survivorship to defeat the antilapse statute. In the case of such a finding, B would take the full $10,000 devise. Relevant evidence tending to support such a finding might be a pre-execution letter or memorandum to G from G's attorney stating that G's attorney used the word "surviving" for the purpose of assuring that if one of G's children were to predecease G, that child's descendants would not take the predeceased child's share under any statute or rule of law.

In the absence of persuasive evidence of a contrary intent, however, the antilapse statute, being remedial in nature, and tending to preserve equality among different lines of succession, should be given the widest possible chance to operate and should be defeated only by a finding of intention that directly contradicts the substitute gift created by the statute. Mere words of survivorship — by themselves — do not directly contradict the statutory substitute gift to the descendants of a deceased devisee. The common law of lapse already conditions all devises on survivorship (and Section 2-702 [72-2-712] presumptively conditions all devises on survivorship by 120 hours). As noted above, the antilapse statute does not reverse the law-imposed requirement of survivorship in any strict sense; it merely alters the devolution of lapsed devises by substituting the deceased devisee's descendants in place of those who would otherwise take. Thus, mere words of survivorship merely duplicate the law-imposed survivorship requirement deriving from the rule of lapse, and do not contradict the statutory substitute gift created by subsection (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] or (b)(2) [72-2-613(2)(b)].

Subsection (b)(4) [72-2-613(2)(d)]. Under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-613(2)(d)], a statutory substitute gift is superseded if the testator's will expressly provides for its own alternative devisee and if that alternative devisee is otherwise entitled to take under the terms of the will. For example, the statute's substitute gift would be superseded in the case of a devise "to A if A survives me; if not, to B," where B survived the testator but A predeceased the testator leaving descendants who survived the testator. Under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-613(2)(d)], B, not A's descendants, would take. In the same example, however, it should be noted that A's descendants would take under the statute if B as well as A predeceased the testator.

Subsection (b)(4) [72-2-613(2)(d)] is illustrated by the following examples:

Example 2. G's will devised "$10,000 to my sister, S" and "the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate to X-Charity." S predeceased G, leaving a child, N, who survived G by 120 hours.

Solution: S's $10,000 devise goes to N, not to X-Charity. The residuary clause does not create an "alternative devise," as defined in subsection (a)(1) [72-2-613(1)(a)], because neither it nor any other language in the will specifically provides that S's $10,000 devise or lapsed or failed devises in general pass under the residuary clause.

Example 3. Same facts as Example 2, except that G's residuary clause devised "the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, including all failed and lapsed devises, to X-Charity."

Solution: S's $10,000 devise goes to X-Charity, not to N. Under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-613(2)(d)], the substitute gift to N created by subsection (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] is superseded. The residuary clause expressly creates an "alternative devise," as defined in subsection (a)(1) [72-2-613(1)(a)], in favor of X-Charity and that alternative devisee, X-Charity, is otherwise entitled to take under the terms of the will.

Example 4. G's will devised "$10,000 to my two children, A and B, or to the survivor of them." A predeceased G, leaving a child, X, who survived G by 120 hours. B also survived G by 120 hours.

Solution: B takes the full $10,000. Because the takers of the $10,000 devise are both named and numbered ("my two children, A and B"), the devise is not in the form of a class gift. The substance of the devise is as if it read "half of $10,000 to A, but if A predeceases me, that half to B if B survives me and the other half of $10,000 to B, but if B predeceases me, that other half to A if A survives me." With respect to each half, A and B have alternative devises, one to the other. Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] creates a substitute gift to A's descendant, X, with respect to A's alternative devise in each half. Under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-613(2)(d)], however, that substitute gift to X with respect to each half is superseded by the alternative devise to B because the alternative devisee, B, survived G by 120 hours and is otherwise entitled to take under G's will.

Example 5. G's will devised "$10,000 to my two children, A and B, or to the survivor of them." A and B predeceased G. A left a child, X, who survived G by 120 hours; B died childless.

Solution: X takes the full $10,000. Because the devise itself is in the same form as the one in Example 4, the substance of the devise is as if it read "half of $10,000 to A, but if A predeceases me, that half to B if B survives me and the other half of $10,000 to B, but if B predeceases me, that other half to A if A survives me." With respect to each half, A and B have alternative devises, one to the other. As in Example 4, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] creates a substitute gift to A's descendant, X, with respect to A's alternative devise in each half. Unlike the situation in Example 4, however, neither substitute gift to X is superseded under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-613(2)(d)] by the alternative devise to B because, in this case, the alternative devisee, B, failed to survive G by 120 hours and is therefore not entitled to take either half under G's will.

Note that the order of deaths as between A and B is irrelevant. The phrase "or to the survivor" does not mean the survivor as between them if they both predecease G; it refers to the one who survives G if one but not the other survives G.

Subsection (c) [72-2-613(3)]. Subsection (c) [72-2-613(3)] is necessary because there can be cases in which subsections (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] or (b)(2) [72-2-613(2)(b)] create substitute gifts with respect to two or more alternative devises of the same property, and those substitute gifts are not superseded under the terms of subsection (b)(4) [72-2-613(2)(d)]. Subsection (c) [72-2-613(3)] provides the tie-breaking mechanism for such situations.

The initial step is to determine which of the alternative devises would take effect had all the devisees themselves survived the testator (by 120 hours). In subsection (c) [72-2-613(3)], this devise is called the "primary devise." Unless subsection (c)(2) [72-2-613(3)(b)] applies, subsection (c)(1) [72-2-613(3)(a)] provides that the devised property passes under substitute gift created with respect to the primary devise. This substitute gift is called the "primary substitute gift." Thus, the devised property goes to the descendants of the devisee or devisees of the primary devise.

Subsection (c)(2) [72-2-613(3)(b)] provides an exception to this rule. Under subsection (c)(2) [72-2-613(3)(b)], the devised property does not pass under the primary substitute gift if there is a "younger-generation devise" — defined as a devise that (A) is to a descendant of a devisee of the primary devise, (B) is an alternative devise with respect to the primary devise, (C) is a devise for which a substitute gift is created, and (D) would have taken effect had all the deceased devisees who left surviving descendants survived the testator except the deceased devisee or devisees of the primary devise. If there is a younger-generation devise, the devised property passes under the "younger-generation substitute gift" — defined as the substitute gift created with respect to the younger-generation devise.

Subsection (c) [72-2-613(3)] is illustrated by the following examples:

Example 6. G's will devised "$5,000 to my son, A, if he is living at my death; if not, to my daughter, B" and devised "$7,500 to my daughter, B, if she is living at my death; if not, to my son, A." A and B predeceased G, both leaving descendants who survived G by 120 hours.

Solution: A's descendants take the $5,000 devise as substitute takers for A, and B's descendants take the $7,500 devise as substitute takers for B. In the absence of a finding based on affirmative evidence such as described in the solution to Example 1, the mere words of survivorship do not by themselves indicate a contrary intent.

Both devises require application of subsection (c) [72-2-613(3)]. In the case of both devises, the statute produces a substitute gift for the devise to A and for the devise to B, each devise being an alternative devise, one to the other. The question of which of the substitute gifts takes effect is resolved by determining which of the devisees themselves would take the devised property if both A and B had survived G by 120 hours.

With respect to the devise of $5,000, the primary devise is to A because A would have taken the devised property had both A and B survived G by 120 hours. Consequently, the primary substitute gift is to A's descendants and that substitute gift prevails over the substitute gift to B's descendants.

With respect to the devise of $7,500, the primary devise is to B because B would have taken the devised property had both A and B survived G by 120 hours, and so the substitute gift to B's descendants is the primary substitute gift and it prevails over the substitute gift to A's descendants.

Subsection (c)(2) [72-2-613(3)(b)] is inapplicable because there is no younger-generation devise. Neither A nor B is a descendant of the other.

Example 7. G's will devised "$10,000 to my son, A, if he is living at my death; if not, to A's children, X and Y." A and X predeceased G. A's child, Y, and X's children, M and N, survived G by 120 hours.

Solution: Half ($5,000) of the devise goes to Y. The other half ($5,000) goes to M and N. The disposition of the latter half requires application of subsection (c) [72-2-613(3)].

Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] produces substitute gifts as to that half for the devise of that half to A and for the devise of that half to X, each of these devises being alternative devises, one to the other. The primary devise is to A. But there is also a younger-generation devise, the alternative devise to X. X is a descendant of A, X would take if X but not A survived G by 120 hours, and the devise is one for which a substitute gift is created by subsection (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)]. So, the younger-generation substitute gift, which is to X's descendants (M and N), prevails over the primary substitute gift, which is to A's descendants (Y, M, and N).

Example 8. Same facts as Example 5, except that both A and B predeceased the testator and both left descendants who survived the testator by 120 hours.

Solution: A's descendants take half ($5,000) and B's descendants take half ($5,000).

As to the half devised to A, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] produces a substitute gift to A's descendants and a substitute gift to B's descendants (because the language "or to the survivor of them" created an alternative devise in B of A's half). As to the half devised to B, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-613(2)(a)] produces a substitute gift to B's descendants and a substitute gift to A's descendants (because the language "or to the survivor of them" created an alternative devise in A of B's half). Thus, with respect to each half, resort must be had to subsection (c) [72-2-613(3)] to determine which substitute gift prevails.

Under subsection (c)(1) [72-2-613(3)(a)], each half passes under the primary substitute gift. The primary devise as to A's half is to A and the primary devise as to B's half is to B because, if both A and B had survived G by 120 hours, A would have taken half ($5,000) and B would have taken half ($5,000). Neither A nor B is a descendant of the other, so subsection (c)(2) [72-2-613(3)(b)] does not apply. Only if one were a descendant of the other would the other's descendants take it all, under the rule of subsection (c)(2) [72-2-613(3)(b)].

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 in (2)(b), at end of first sentence, substituted "surviving descendants of any deceased devisee" for "deceased devisee or devisee's surviving descendants".

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning antilapse, deceased devisee, and class gifts for former text that read: "(1) If a devisee who is a grandparent or a lineal descendant of a grandparent of the testator is dead at the time of execution of the will, fails to survive the testator, or is treated as if he predeceased the testator, the issue of the deceased devisee who survive the testator by 120 hours take in place of the deceased devisee and if they are all of the same degree of kinship to the devisee, they take equally, but if of unequal degree then those of more remote degree take by representation.

(2) One who would have been a devisee under a class gift if he had survived the testator is treated as a devisee for purposes of this section whether his death occurred before or after the execution of the will."

Case Notes

Public Policy in Favor of Statutory Apportionment Precluded by Specific Provisions in Will — Estate Taxes to Be Paid by Residual Estate: In In re Estate of Kuralt, 2000 MT 359, 303 M 335, 15 P3d 931 (2000), the Supreme Court found that a letter by the decedent was a valid holographic codicil to the decedent's will conveying real property in Montana to the decedent's companion, but a question remained whether the estate or the companion was responsible for the estate taxes on the Montana property. Under the law of New York, where the will was admitted to probate, and similar law in Montana, there is a strong public policy in favor of statutory apportionment unless the will provides otherwise. In this case, the decedent's will specifically provided that estate taxes be paid by the residual estate without apportionment, which included those generated by the bequest of the Montana property by codicil. Because the language of the will was clear and unambiguous, the District Court correctly concluded that estate taxes on the Montana property must be paid by the residual estate. This section applies only if Section 2-603 [72-2-613] does not produce a substitute taker for a devisee who fails to survive the testator by 120 hours. There is also a special rule for disclaimers contained in Section 2-801 [72-2-811]; a disclaimed devise may be governed by either Section 2-603 [72-2-613] or the present section, depending on the circumstances.

72-2-615. Increase in securities — accessions.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. The rule of subsection (a) [72-2-615(1)], as revised, relates to a devise of securities (such as a devise of 100 shares of XYZ Company), regardless of whether that devise is characterized as a general or specific devise. If the testator executes a will that makes a devise of securities and if the testator then owned securities that meet the description in the will, then the devisee is entitled not only to the described securities to the extent they are owned by the testator at death; the devisee is also entitled to any additional securities owned by the testator at death that were acquired by the testator during his or her lifetime after the will was executed and were acquired as a result of the testator's ownership of the described securities by reason of an action specified in subsections (a)(1) [72-2-615(1)(a)], (a)(2) [72-2-615(1)(b)], or (a)(3) [72-2-615(1)(c)], such as the declaration of stock splits or stock dividends or spinoffs of a subsidiary.

The impetus for these revisions derives from the rule on stock splits enunciated by Bostwick v. Hurstel, 364 Mass. 282, 304 N.E.2d 186 (1973), and now codified in Massachusetts as to actions covered by subsections (a)(1) [72-2-615(1)(a)] and (a)(2) [72-2-615(1)(b)]. Mass. Gen. Laws c. 191, § 1A(4).

Subsection (a) [72-2-615(1)] Not Exclusive. Subsection (a) [72-2-615(1)] is not exclusive, i.e., it is not to be understood as setting forth the only conditions under which additional securities of the types described in paragraphs (1) [72-2-615(1)(a)], (2) [72-2-615(1)(b)], and (3) [72-2-615(1)(c)] are included in the devise. For example, the express terms of subsection (a) [72-2-615(1)] do not apply to a case in which the testator owned the described securities when he or she executed the will, but later sold (or otherwise disposed of) those securities, and then later purchased (or otherwise acquired) securities that meet the description in the will, following which additional securities of the type or types described in paragraphs (1) [72-2-615(1)(a)], (2) [72-2-615(1)(b)], or (3) [72-2-615(1)(c)] are acquired as a result of the testator's ownership of the later-acquired securities. Nor do the express terms of subsection (a) [72-2-615(1)] apply to a similar (but less likely) case in which the testator did not own the described securities when he or she executed the will, but later purchased (or otherwise acquired) such securities. Subsection (a) [72-2-615(1)] does not preclude a court, in an appropriate case, from deciding that additional securities of the type described in paragraphs (1) [72-2-615(1)(a)], (2) [72-2-615(1)(b)], or (3) [72-2-615(1)(c)] acquired as a result of the testator's ownership of the later-acquired securities pass under the devise in either of these two cases, or in other cases if appropriate.

Subsection (b) [72-2-615(2)] codifies existing law that distributions in cash, such as interest, accrued rent, or cash dividends declared and payable as of a record date before the testator's death, do not pass as a part of the devise. It makes no difference whether such cash distributions were paid before or after death. See Section 4 of the Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act.

Cross Reference. The term "organization" is defined in Section 1-201 [72-1-103].

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning increases in securities for former text that read: "(1) If the testator intended a specific devise of certain securities rather than the equivalent value thereof, the specific devisee is entitled only to:

(a) as much of the devised securities as is a part of the estate at time of the testator's death;

(b) any additional or other securities of the same entity owned by the testator by reason of action initiated by the entity, excluding any securities acquired by exercise of purchase options;

(c) securities of another entity owned by the testator as a result of a merger, consolidation, reorganization, or other similar action initiated by the entity; and

(d) any additional securities of the entity owned by the testator as a result of a plan of reinvestment.

(2) Distributions prior to death with respect to a specifically devised security not provided for in subsection (1) are not part of the specific devise."

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1989 Amendment: At end of (1)(b) inserted exclusion clause; and at end of (1)(d), after "reinvestment", deleted "if it is a regulated investment company".

1989 Editorial Comment: This change results from an amendment proposed by the Joint Editorial Board of the national Uniform Probate Code in 1987. Subsection (1)(d) formerly provided that the specific devisee was entitled to additional securities of the entity owned by the testator as the result of a plan of reinvestment in a regulated investment company. This change reflects the fact that many entities other than regulated investment companies offer dividend reinvestment plans.

Additionally, subsection (1)(b) was modified to bring it into conformance with the national Uniform Probate Code in another respect. The specific devisee is entitled to any additional or other securities of the same entity owned by the testator by reason of action initiated by the entity, excluding any securities acquired by exercise of purchase options. This exclusion was not part of former Montana law. It seems wise to distinguish between a testator who acquires additional shares by reason of a corporate reorganization and does not pay any additional consideration and a testator who pays additional consideration through the exercise of a purchase option. See corresponding national Uniform Probate Code section 2-607.

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Will Not Changed After Gift of Portion of Estate Prior to Death — Distribution of Remaining Shares: In her will, deceased made specific devise of 147 shares of stock to two nephews and a grandnephew. Prior to death, she distributed 44 shares but never changed the will to reflect the reduction in her estate. The Supreme Court held that deceased intended a specific devise of the securities rather than the equivalent value thereof, thus the specific devisees were entitled only to as much of the securities as remained in the estate at the time of death. Under 72-2-515 (renumbered 72-2-619), an inter vivos gift may be deducted from a devise only if such intent is expressed in the will. Absent such intent, the remaining 103 shares must be distributed on a proportional basis consistent with the percentages listed in the will. 72-2-616. Nonademption of specific devises — unpaid proceeds of sale, condemnation, or insurance — sale by conservator or agent.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. Under the "identity" theory followed by most courts, the common-law doctrine of ademption by extinction is that a specific devise is adeemed — rendered ineffective — if the specifically devised property is not owned by the testator at death. In applying the "identity" theory, courts do not inquire into the testator's intent to determine whether the testator's objective in disposing of the specifically devised property was to revoke the devise. The only thing that matters is that the property is no longer owned at death. The application of the "identity" theory of ademption has resulted in harsh results in a number of cases, where it was reasonably clear that the testator did not intend to revoke the devise. Notable examples include McGee v. McGee, 122 R.I. 837, 413 A.2d 72 (1980); Estate of Dungan, 31 Del.Ch. 551, 73 A.2d 776 (1950).

Recently, some courts have begun to break away from the "identity" theory and adopt instead the so-called "intent" theory. E.g., Estate of Austin, 113 Cal. App. 3d 167, 169 Cal. Rptr. 648 (1980). The major import of the revisions of this section is to adopt the "intent" theory in subsections (a)(5) [72-2-616(1)(e)] and (a)(6) [72-2-616(1)(f)].

Subsection (a)(5) [72-2-616(1)(e)] does not import a tracing principle into the question of ademption, but rather should be seen as a sensible "mere change in form" principle.

Example. G's will devised to X "my 1984 Ford." After she executed her will, she sold her 1984 Ford and bought a 1988 Buick; later, she sold the 1988 Buick and bought a 1993 Chrysler. She still owned the 1993 Chrysler when she died. Under subsection (a)(5) [72-2-616(1)(e)], X takes the 1993 Chrysler.

Variation. If G had sold her 1984 Ford (or any of the replacement cars) and used the proceeds to buy shares in a mutual fund, which she owned at death, subsection (a)(5) [72-2-616(1)(e)] does not give X the shares in the mutual fund. If G owned an automobile at death as a replacement for her 1984 Ford, however, X would be entitled to that automobile, even though it was bought with funds other than the proceeds of the sale of the 1984 Ford.

Subsection (a)(6) [72-2-616(1)(f)] applies only to the extent the specifically devised property is not in the testator's estate at death and its value or its replacement is not covered by the provisions of paragraphs (1) through (5) [72-2-616(1)(a) through (1)(e)]. In that event, subsection (a)(6) [72-2-616(1)(f)] creates a mild presumption against ademption by extinction, imposing on the party claiming that an ademption has occurred the burden of establishing that the facts and circumstances indicate that ademption of the devise was intended by the testator or that ademption of the devise is consistent with the testator's manifested plan of distribution.

Example. G's will devised to his son, A, "that diamond ring I inherited from grandfather" and devised to his daughter, B, "that diamond broach I inherited from grandmother." After G executed his will, a burglar entered his home and stole the diamond ring (but not the diamond broach, as it was in G's safety deposit box at his bank).

Under subsection (a)(6) [72-2-616(1)(f)], the party claiming that A's devise was adeemed would be unlikely to be able to establish that G intended A's devise to be adeemed or that ademption is consistent with G's manifested plan of distribution. In fact, G's equalizing devise to B affirmatively indicates that ademption is inconsistent with G's manifested plan of distribution. The likely result is that, under subsection (a)(6) [72-2-616(1)(f)], A would be entitled to the value of the diamond ring.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 in (1), after "property", inserted "in the testator's estate at death"; in (1)(c), after "insurance on", inserted "or other recovery for injury to"; in (1)(d), after "death", inserted "and acquired" and after "security" inserted "interest"; inserted (1)(e) concerning real or tangible personal property; inserted (1)(f) concerning indication of ademption of devise by testator or consistent with plan of distribution; in (2), in first sentence near beginning after "sold", inserted "or mortgaged", in two places substituted "incapacitated principal" for "principal who is under a disability", after "insurance proceeds" inserted "or recovery for an injury to property", after the second "incapacitated principal" deleted "as a result of condemnation, fire, or casualty", after "sale price" inserted "the amount of the unpaid loan", and at end inserted "or the recovery" and deleted second sentence that read: "This subsection does not apply if after the sale, condemnation, or casualty it is adjudicated that the disability of the testator has ceased and the testator survives the adjudication by 1 year"; in (3) substituted "subsection (2)" for "this subsection"; inserted (4) concerning nonapplicability if incapacity ceased and testator survived determination by 1 year; inserted (5) concerning agent acting within authority of a durable power of attorney; and made minor changes in style.

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1989 Amendment: Deleted former (1) that read: "(1) If specifically devised property is sold by a conservator or if a condemnation award or insurance proceeds are paid to a conservator as a result of condemnation, fire, or casualty, the specific devisee has the right to a pecuniary devise equal to so much of the sale price, condemnation award, or insurance proceeds as remains in the estate and is identifiable at the time of the decedent's death. This subsection does not apply if subsequent to the sale, condemnation, or casualty it is adjudicated that the disability of the testator has ceased and the testator survives the adjudication by 1 year. The right of the specific devisee under this subsection is reduced by any right he has under subsection (2)"; in (1), before "specifically devised property", deleted "remaining"; inserted (2) relating to right of specific devisee to sale, condemnation, or insurance proceeds; and made minor change in punctuation.

1989 Editorial Comment: This change results from amendments proposed by the Joint Editorial Board of the national Uniform Probate Code in 1975 and 1987. This change reflects the increased use of durable powers of attorney. Additionally, this change eliminates a requirement of former law, peculiar to Montana, that the sale price, condemnation award, or insurance proceeds remain in the estate and be "identifiable at the time of the decedent's death". That provision mandated some tracing of assets, which was thought to be impractical. See corresponding national Uniform Probate Code section 2-608.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

General Devise — No Ademption Absent Evidence of Testator's Intent to Adeem: Deisz left a holographic will in which he chose his companion to receive the bulk of his estate, other family members received much more modest sums in life insurance, and the remaining members received only one ring each. Deisz's father submitted an application for informal probate and appointment as personal representative, then amended the filing as an intestate estate on grounds that the will was invalid. The companion filed for formal probate, seeking to have the will declared valid, the estate made testate, and Deisz's distribution wishes followed. The District Court found the will to be a valid holographic will creating specific devises and concluded that the devises were adeemed based on the sale of specific assets to pay for Deisz's medical care. The companion appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Based on the distribution of assets and evidence that Deisz intended to make sure that the companion was well taken care of, coupled with the presumption in favor of finding a general devise, the devise to the companion was general rather than specific. By definition, a general devise cannot be adeemed, and the estate failed to meet its burden of establishing any facts and circumstances to indicate that Deisz intended to adeem the devise to the companion or that such a distribution would be consistent with Deisz's plan of distribution. The District Court's conclusion that the companion's willingness to see the estate partially depleted for Deisz's best interests signaled the companion's intention to relinquish her share of the estate was not supported by the record. It was Deisz's intent, not the companion's, that was relevant, and there was no evidence that Deisz intended to revoke the devise to the companion. Absent Deisz's intent or any evidence that Deisz intended to adeem, the provisions of this section controlled. The Supreme Court directed that a neutral representative be appointed to dispose of the remainder of the estate. Holtz v. Deisz, 2003 MT 132, 316 M 77, 68 P3d 828 (2003). DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Real Property Subject to Contract as Personalty: Wooten, an attorney, made and executed a holographic will which appointed Grafft as personal representative. The will gave Grafft personalty and a life estate in real property with several charities as remaindermen. Wooten died, and Grafft was appointed personal representative. At the time of death, a portion of the land was subject to a contract for deed. After the death, the buyer defaulted and her interest in the contract and the property was terminated. In response to a petition filed by the remaindermen, the District Court held that all of the land was to pass to the remaindermen, thereby holding that the testator held the property subject to the contract as real property rather than personalty at the time of his death. The Supreme Court overruled that decision, saying that applying statutory rules, the right of decedent in the contracted land was that of a seller under contract and so was personalty. The personal property was specifically devised to Grafft. The decedent's security interest (the default provisions of the contract) also passed to Grafft, and the default after decedent's death was a default in a contract vested in Grafft, subject to the administration of the estate. In re the Estate of Wooten, 198 M 132, 643 P2d 1196, 39 St. Rep. 816 (1982).

72-2-617. Nonexoneration.

Official Comments

See Section 3-814 [72-3-812] empowering the personal representative to pay an encumbrance under some circumstances; the last sentence of that section makes it clear that such payment does not increase the right of the specific devisee. The present section governs the substantive rights of the devisee. The common-law rule of exoneration of the specific devise is abolished by this section, and the contrary rule is adopted.

For the rule as to exempt property, see Section 2-403 [72-2-413].

The rule of this section is not inconsistent with Section 2-606(b) [72-2-616(2)]. If a conservator or agent for an incapacitated principal mortgages specifically devised property, Section 2-606(b) [72-2-616(2)] provides that the specific devisee is entitled to a pecuniary devise equal to the amount of the unpaid loan. Section 2-606(b) [72-2-616(2)] does not contradict this section, which provides that the specific devise passes subject to any mortgage interest existing at the date of death, without right of exoneration.

Spouse's Claim Against Estate for Contribution on Motor Home Debt Denied: The personal representative of an estate appealed an order of the District Court allowing the surviving spouse's claim against the estate for half of the debt in a motor home the spouse and decedent owned as joint tenants with the right of survivorship. The Supreme Court reversed, concluding that the debt in the motor home passed automatically to the surviving spouse as a joint tenant, that 72-2-617 did not apply, and that if the property had passed through the will, the surviving spouse would not have been entitled to contribution on the debt pursuant to 72-2-617. General Residuary Clause. As revised, this section, in conjunction with Section 2-601 [72-2-611], provides that a general residuary clause (such as "All the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, I devise to ....") in the testator's will or a will making general disposition of all of the testator's property (such as "All of my estate, I devise to ....") is presumed to express an intent to exercise a power of appointment held by the donee of the power only if one or the other of two circumstances or sets of circumstances are satisfied. One such circumstance (whether the power is general or nongeneral) is if the testator's will manifests an intention to include the property subject to the power. A simple example of a residuary clause that manifests such an intention is a so-called "blending" or "blanket-exercise" clause, such as "All the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, including any property over which I have a power of appointment, I devise to .... ."

The other circumstance under which a general residuary clause or a will making general disposition of all of the testator's property is presumed to express an intent to exercise a power is if the power is a general power and the instrument that created the power does not contain a gift over in the event the power is not exercised (a "gift in default"). In well planned estates, a general power of appointment will be accompanied by a gift in default. The gift-in-default clause is ordinarily expected to take effect; it is not merely an after-thought just in case the power is not exercised. The power is not expected to be exercised, and in fact is often conferred mainly to gain a tax benefit — the federal estate-tax marital deduction under section 2056(b)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code or, now, inclusion of the property in the gross estate of a younger-generation beneficiary under section 2041 of the Internal Revenue Code, in order to avoid the possibly higher rates imposed by the new federal generation-skipping tax. See Blattmachr & Pennell, "Adventures in Generation Skipping, Or How We Learned to Love the 'Delaware Tax Trap,'" 24

Real Prop. Prob. & Tr. J. 75 (1989). A general power should not be exercised in such a case without clear evidence of an intent to appoint.

In poorly planned estates, on the other hand, there may be no gift-in-default clause. In the absence of a gift-in-default clause, it seems better to let the property pass under the donee's will than force it to return to the donor's estate, for the reason that the donor died before the donee died and it seems better to avoid forcing a reopening of the donor's estate.

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Will to Contain Specific Exercise of Power of Appointment: The decedent's husband had predeceased her, and in his will he had created a power of appointment in her that she did not specifically exercise in her will. The appellants argued that Montana law did not control because both parties had died in Minnesota and that the Minnesota court had ruled that the general residuary clause in the wife's will did constitute an exercise of the power granted to her by her husband. The Supreme Court ruled that the mineral royalty interests were an interest in land located in Montana and that the intention of a testator in devising land is controlled by the law of the situs. The court went on to find that Montana's law states that a power of appointment must be specifically exercised and is not exercised by a general residuary clause. 72-2-619. Ademption by satisfaction.

Official Comments

Scope and Purpose of Revisions. In addition to minor stylistic changes, this section is revised to delete the requirement that the gift in satisfaction of a devise be made to the devisee. The purpose is to allow the testator to satisfy a devise to A by making a gift to B. Consider why this might be desirable. G's will made a $20,000 devise to his child, A. G was a widower. Shortly before his death, G in consultation with his lawyer decided to take advantage of the $10,000 annual gift tax exclusion and sent a check for $10,000 to A and another check for $10,000 to A's spouse, B. The checks were accompanied by a letter from G explaining that the gifts were made for tax purposes and were in lieu of the $20,000 devise to A. The removal of the phrase "to that person" from the statute allows the $20,000 devise to be fully satisfied by the gifts to A and B.

This section parallels Section 2-109 [72-2-119] on advancements and follows the same policy of requiring written evidence that lifetime gifts are to be taken into account in the distribution of an estate, whether testate or intestate. Although courts traditionally call this "ademption by satisfaction" when a will is involved, and "advancement" when the estate is intestate, the difference in terminology is not significant.

Some wills expressly provide for lifetime advances by a hotchpot clause. Where the will contains no such clause, this section requires either the testator to declare in writing that the gift is in satisfaction of the devise or its value is to be deducted from the value of the devise or the devisee to acknowledge the same in writing.

To be a gift in satisfaction, the gift need not be an outright gift; it can be in the form of a will substitute, such as designating the devisee as the beneficiary of the testator's life-insurance policy or the beneficiary of the remainder interest in a revocable inter-vivos trust.

Subsection (b) [72-2-619(2)] on value accords with Section 2-109 [72-2-119] and applies if, for example, property such as stock is given. If the devise is specific, a gift of the specific property to the devisee during lifetime adeems the devise by extinction rather than by satisfaction, and this section would be inapplicable. Unlike the common law of satisfaction, however, specific devises are not excluded from the rule of this section. If, for example, the testator makes a devise of a specific item of property, and subsequently makes a gift of cash or other property to the devisee, accompanied by the requisite written intent that the gift satisfies the devise, the devise is satisfied under this section even if the subject of the specific devise is still in the testator's estate at death (and hence would not be adeemed under the doctrine of ademption by extinction).

Under subsection (c) [72-2-619(3)], if a devisee to whom a gift in satisfaction is made predeceases the testator and his or her descendants take under Section 2-603 [72-2-613] or 2-604 [72-2-614], they take the same devise as their ancestor would have taken had the ancestor survived the testator; if the devise is reduced by reason of this section as to the ancestor, it is automatically reduced as to the devisee's descendants. In this respect, the rule in testacy differs from that in intestacy; see Section 2-109(c) [72-2-119(3)].

Will Not Changed After Gift of Portion of Estate Prior to Death — Distribution of Remaining Shares: In her will, deceased made specific devise of 147 shares of stock to two nephews and a grandnephew. Prior to death, she distributed 44 shares but never changed the will to reflect the reduction in her estate. The Supreme Court held that deceased intended a specific devise of the securities rather than the equivalent value thereof, thus the specific devisees were entitled only to as much of the securities as remained in the estate at the time of death. Under this section, an inter vivos gift may be deducted from a devise only if such intent is expressed in the will. Absent such intent, the remaining 103 shares must be distributed on a proportional basis consistent with the percentages listed in the will. Part 7
Rules of Construction Applicable to Wills and Other Governing Instruments

Part Official Comments

GENERAL COMMENT

Part 7 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7] contains rules of construction applicable to wills, deeds, trusts, appointments, beneficiary designations, and so on. Like the rules of construction in Part 6 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 6] (which apply only to wills), the rules of construction in this Part [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7] yield to a finding of a contrary intention.

Some of the sections in Part 7 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7] are revisions of sections contained in Part 6 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 6] of the pre-1990 Code. Although these sections originally applied only to wills, their restricted scope was inappropriate.

Some of the sections in Part 7 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7] are new, having been added to the Code as desirable means of carrying out common intention.

72-2-711. Scope.

Official Comments

The rules of construction in this Part [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7] apply to governing instruments of any type, except as the application of a particular section is limited by its terms to a specific type or types of provision or governing instrument.

The term "governing instrument" is defined in Section 1-201 [72-1-103] as "a deed, will, trust, insurance or annuity policy, account with POD designation, security registered in beneficiary form (TOD), pension, profit-sharing, retirement, or similar benefit plan, instrument creating or exercising a power of appointment or a power of attorney, or a dispositive, appointive, or nominative instrument of any similar type."

Certain of the sections in this Part [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7] are limited in their application to provisions or governing instruments of a certain type or types. Section 2-704 [72-2-714], for example, applies only to a governing instrument creating a power of appointment. Section 2-706 [72-2-716] applies only to governing instruments that are "beneficiary designations," a term defined in Section 1-201 [72-1-103] as referring to "a governing instrument naming a beneficiary of an insurance or annuity policy, of an account with POD designation, of a security registered in beneficiary form (TOD), or of a pension, profit-sharing, retirement, or similar benefit plan, or other nonprobate transfer at death." Section 2-707 [72-2-717] applies only to governing instruments creating a future interest under the terms of a trust.

Cross References. See the Comment to Section 2-601 [72-2-611]. See Section 8-101(b) [an effective date provision not codified in Montana] for the application of the rules of construction in this Part [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7] to documents executed prior to the effective date of this Article [Title 72, chapter 2].

72-2-712. Requirement of survival by 120 hours.

Official Comments

Scope and Purpose of Revision. This section parallels Section 2-104 [72-2-114], which requires an heir to survive the intestate by 120 hours in order to inherit.

The scope of this section is expanded to cover all provisions of a governing instrument and this Code that relate to an individual surviving an event (including the death of another individual). As expanded, this section imposes the 120-hour requirement of survival in the areas covered by the Uniform Simultaneous Death Act.

In the case of a multiple-party account such as a joint checking account registered in the name of the decedent and his or her spouse with right of survivorship, the 120-hour requirement of survivorship will not, under the facility-of-payment provision of Section 6-222(1) [72-6-222(1)], interfere with the surviving spouse's ability to withdraw funds from the account during the 120-hour period following the decedent's death.

Note that subsection (d)(1) [72-2-712(4)(a)] provides that the 120-hour requirement of survival is inapplicable if the governing instrument "contains some language dealing explicitly with simultaneous deaths or deaths in a common disaster and that language is operable under the facts of the case." The application of this provision is illustrated by the following example.

Example. G died leaving a will devising her entire estate to her husband, H, adding that "in the event he dies before I do, at the same time that I do, or under circumstances as to make it doubtful who died first," my estate is to go to my brother Melvin. H died about 38 hours after G's death, both having died as a result of injuries sustained in an automobile accident.

Under subsection (b), G's estate passes under the alternative devise to Melvin because H's failure to survive G by 120 hours means that H is deemed to have predeceased G. The language in the governing instrument does not, under subsection (d)(1) [72-2-712(4)(a)], nullify the provision that causes H, because of his failure to survive G by 120 hours, to be deemed to have predeceased G. Although the governing instrument does contain language dealing with simultaneous deaths, that language is not operable under the facts of the case because H did not die before G, at the same time as G, or under circumstances as to make it doubtful who died first.

Note that subsection (d)(4) [72-2-712(4)(d)] provides that the 120-hour requirement of survival is inapplicable if "the application of this section to multiple governing instruments would result in an unintended failure or duplication of a disposition." The application of this provision is illustrated by the following example.

Example. Pursuant to a common plan, H and W executed mutual wills with reciprocal provisions. Their intention was that a $50,000 charitable devise would be made on the death of the survivor. To that end, H's will devised $50,000 to the charity if W predeceased him. W's will devised $50,000 to the charity if H predeceased her. Subsequently, H and W were involved in a common accident. W survived H by 48 hours.

Were it not for subsection (d)(4) [72-2-712(4)(d)], not only would the charitable devise in W's will be effective, because H in fact predeceased W, but the charitable devise in H's will would also be effective, because W's failure to survive H by 120 hours would result in her being deemed to have predeceased H. Because this would result in an unintended duplication of the $50,000 devise, subsection (d)(4) [72-2-712(4)(d)] provides that the 120-hour requirement of survival is inapplicable. Thus, only the $50,000 charitable devise in W's will is effective.

Subsection (d)(4) [72-2-712(4)(d)] also renders the 120-hour requirement of survival inapplicable had H and W died in circumstances in which it could not be established that either survived the other. In such a case, an appropriate result might be to give effect to the common plan by paying half of the intended $50,000 devise from H's estate and half from W's estate.

ERISA Preemption of State Law. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) federalizes pension and employee benefit law. Section 514(a) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a), provides that the provisions of Titles I and IV of ERISA "shall supersede any and all State laws insofar as they may now or hereafter relate to any employee benefit plan" governed by ERISA. See the Comment to Section 2-804 [72-2-814] for a discussion of the ERISA preemption question.

Revision of Uniform Simultaneous Death Act. The freestanding Uniform Simultaneous Death Act (USDA) was revised in 1991 in accordance with the revisions of this section. States that enact Sections 2-104 [72-2-114] and 2-702 [72-2-712] need not enact the USDA as revised in 1991 and should repeal the original version of the USDA if previously enacted in the state.

Case Notes

Right of Surviving Spouse to Homestead Allowance as Matter of Law: The primary purpose of the homestead allowance is to protect a decedent's family and ensure that the surviving spouse is not left penniless and abandoned by the death of a spouse. The plain statutory language creates an absolute benefit to the surviving spouse, and a District Court has no discretion to disallow or limit the homestead allowance. The only statutory condition for receipt of the homestead allowance by the surviving spouse is that the spouse survive the decedent by 120 hours, as provided in this section. There is no other requirement, qualification, or condition to receipt of the allowance by the surviving spouse, such as a showing of financial need. The definition of the homestead exception in Montana property law, 70-32-101, is unrelated to the homestead allowance in the Uniform Probate Code, 72-2-412, so the definition in 70-32-101 does not override otherwise inconsistent language in 72-2-412. Because the homestead allowance is an interest that may be satisfied in any type of property, it may be claimed from assets other than the dwelling house or land. It is an allowance off the top, which grants the decedent's family a vested interest apart from and in addition to any other rights flowing from the estate. 72-2-713. Choice of law as to meaning and effect of governing instrument.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. The scope of this section is expanded to cover all governing instruments, not just wills. As revised, this section enables a transferor to select the law of a particular state for purposes of interpreting his will or other governing instrument without regard to the location of property covered thereby. So long as local public policy is accommodated, the section should be accepted as necessary and desirable.

Cross Reference. Choice of law rules regarding formal validity of a will are in Section 2-506 [72-2-526]. See also Sections 3-202 [72-3-114] and 3-408 [72-3-312].

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning meaning and effect of governing instrument for former text that read: "The meaning and legal effect of a disposition in a will shall be determined by the local law of a particular state selected by the testator in his instrument unless the application of that law is contrary to the public policy of this state otherwise applicable to the disposition."

72-2-714. Power of appointment — meaning of specific reference requirement.

Official Comments

Rationale of New Section. In the creation of powers of appointment, it has become common estate-planning practice to require that the donee of the power can exercise the power only by making reference (or express or specific reference) to it. The question of whether the donee has made a sufficiently specific reference is much litigated. The precise question often is whether a so-called blanket-exercise clause (also called a blending clause) — a clause referring to "any property over which I have a power of appointment" — constitutes a sufficient reference to a particular power to exercise that power. E.g., First National Bank v. Walker, 607 S.W.2d 469 (Tenn. 1980), and cases cited therein.

Section 2-704 [72-2-714] sets forth the presumption that the donor's purpose in imposing a reference requirement was to prevent an inadvertent exercise of the power by the donee. Under this section, mere use by the donee of a blanket-exercise clause would be ineffective to exercise the power because such a clause would not make a sufficient reference to the particular power. If, however, it could be shown that the donee had knowledge of and intended to exercise the power, the blanket-exercise clause would be sufficient to exercise the power, unless the presumption of this section is overcome. Under Section 2-701 [72-2-711], the presumption of this section would be overcome if it could be shown that the donor's intention was not merely to prevent an inadvertent exercise of the power but was to prevent any exercise of the power, intentional or inadvertent, that failed to identify in explicit terms the specific power or the creating instrument.

Rev. 521, 583 n.223 (1982), suggesting that a donee's will that omits a sufficiently specific reference to a particular power can be reformed to include the necessary reference if it can be shown by clear and convincing evidence that the omission was caused by a scrivener's mistake. This approach is not inconsistent with Section 2-704 [72-2-714]. See Sections 2-601 [72-2-611] (and accompanying Comment); 2-701 [72-2-711]. See also Motes/Henes Trust v. Cross Reference. See Section 2-608 [72-2-618] for a provision governing whether a general residuary clause in the donee's will exercises a power of appointment that does not require a reference (or an express or specific reference) by the donee of the power.

72-2-715. Class gifts construed to accord with intestate succession.

Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revisions. This section facilitates a modern construction of gifts that identify the recipient by reference to a relationship to someone; usually these gifts will be class gifts. The rules set forth in this section are rules of construction, which under Section 2-701 [72-2-711] are controlling in the absence of a finding of a contrary intention. With two exceptions, Section 2-705 [72-2-715] invokes the rules pertaining to intestate succession as rules of construction for interpreting terms of relationship in private instruments.

The pre-1990 version of this section applied only to devises contained in wills. As revised and relocated in Part 7 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 7], this section is freed of that former restriction; it now applies to dispositive provisions of all governing instruments, as prescribed by Section 2-701 [72-2-711].

Subsections (b) and (c) [72-2-715(2) and (3)] are based on Cal. Prob. Code § 6152. These subsections impose requirements for inclusion that are additional to the requirement of subsection (a) [72-2-715(1)]. Put differently, a child must satisfy subsection (a) [72-2-715(1)] in all cases. In addition, if either subsection (b) or (c) [72-2-715(2) or (3)] applies, the child must also satisfy the requirements of that subsection to be included under the class gift or term of relationship.

The general theory of subsection (b) [72-2-715(2)] is that a transferor who is not the natural (biological) parent of a child would want the child to be included in a class gift as a child of the biological parent only if the child lived while a minor as a regular member of the household of that biological parent (or of specified relatives of that biological parent).

Example. G's will created a trust, income to G's son, A, for life, remainder in corpus to A's descendants who survive A, by representation. A fathered a child, X; A and X's mother, D, never married each other, and X never lived while a minor as a regular member of A's household or the household of A's parent, brother, sister, spouse, or surviving spouse. D later married E; D and E raised X as a member of their household.

Solution: Never having lived as a regular member of A's household or of the household of any of A's specified relatives, X would not be included as a member of the class of A's descendants who take the corpus of G's trust on A's death.

If, however, D's parent had created a similar trust, income to D for life, remainder in corpus to D's descendants who survive D, by representation, X would be included as a member of the class of D's descendants who take the corpus of this trust on D's death.

Also, if A executed a will containing a devise to his children or designated his children as beneficiary of his life insurance policy, X would be included in the class. Under Section 2-114 [72-2-124], X would be A's child for purposes of intestate succession. Subsection (b) [72-2-715(2)] is inapplicable because the transferor, A, is the biological parent.

The general theory of subsection (c) [72-2-715(3)] is that a transferor who is not the adopting parent of an adopted child would want the child to be included in a class gift as a child of the adopting parent only if the child lived while a minor, either before or after the adoption, as a regular member of the household of that adopting parent.

Example. G's will created a trust, income to G's daughter, A, for life, remainder in corpus to A's descendants who survive A, by representation. A and A's husband adopted a 47-year old man, X, who never lived while a minor as a regular member of A's household.

Solution: Never having lived while a minor as a regular member of A's household, X would not be included as a member of the class of A's descendants who take the corpus of G's trust on A's death.

If, however, A executed a will containing a devise to her children or designated her children as beneficiary of her life insurance policy, X would be included in the class. Under Section 2-114 [72-2-124], X would be A's child for purposes of intestate succession. Subsection (c) [72-2-715(3)] is inapplicable because the transferor, A, is an adopting parent.

Case Notes

Adopted Adult Child of Decedent's Child Not Considered Regular Member of Household of Adopting Parent for Intestate Succession Purposes: The decedent was survived by a son who adopted the adult daughter of his wife, whom he later divorced. Upon decedent's death, the son told a trust officer and a close family friend that he adopted the young woman for the purpose of exercising control over the residue of the trust and to prevent other relatives from getting his mother's property upon his death. Ultimately, the young woman was not included in the distribution of the residue of the decedent's estate, and she appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. For an adopted person to be eligible to take by intestate succession when the decedent was not the adopting parent, the person must meet the requirements of this section, which provide that when construing a dispositive provision of a transferor who is not the adopting parent, the adopted person is not considered the child of the adopting parent unless the adopted person, while a minor, either before or after the adoption, lived as a regular member of the adopting parent's household. Being a regular household member requires more than simple residence for a time at the adopting parent's home. The underlying policy of subsection (3) of this section is to limit the ability of the adopting parent to circumvent the testamentary intent of another person. In this case, there was substantial evidence in the record to support the District Court's finding that no relationship existed between the son and his adopted daughter during her minority sufficient to indicate that, as a matter of law, she was a regular member of the household. Therefore, the adopted daughter was not considered an heir at law of the decedent and was not entitled to a distribution from the estate. 72-2-716. Life insurance — retirement plan — account with POD designation — transfer-on-death registration — deceased beneficiary.

Official Comments

Purpose of New Section. This new section provides an antilapse statute for "beneficiary designations," a term defined in Section 1-201 [72-2-103] as "a governing instrument naming a beneficiary of an insurance or annuity policy, of an account with POD designation, of a security registered in beneficiary form (TOD), or of a pension, profit-sharing, retirement, or similar benefit plan, or other nonprobate transfer at death."

The terms of this section parallel those of Section 2-603 [72-2-613], except that the provisions relating to payor protection and personal liability of recipients have been added. The Comment to Section 2-603 [72-2-613] contains an elaborate exposition of Section 2-603 [72-2-613], together with the examples illustrating its application. That Comment should aid understanding of Section 2-706 [72-2-716]. For a discussion of the reasons why Section 2-706 [72-2-716] should not be preempted by federal law with respect to retirement plans covered by ERISA, see the Comment to Section 2-804 [72-2-814].

72-2-717. Survivorship with respect to future interests under terms of trust — substitute takers.

Official Comments

Rationale of New Section. This new section applies only to future interests under the terms of a trust. For shorthand purposes, references in this Comment to the term "future interest" refer to a future interest under the terms of a trust.

The objective of this section is to project the antilapse idea into the area of future interests. The structure of this section substantially parallels the structure of the regular antilapse statute, Section 2-603 [72-2-613], and the antilapse-type statute relating to beneficiary designations, Section 2-706 [72-2-716]. The rationale for restricting this section to future interests under the terms of a trust is that legal life estates in land, followed by indefeasibly vested remainder interests, are still created in some localities, often with respect to farmland. In such cases, the legal life tenant and the person holding the remainder interest can, together, give good title in the sale of the land. If the antilapse idea were injected into this type of situation, the ability of the parties to sell the land would be impaired if not destroyed because the antilapse idea would, in effect, create a contingent substitute remainder interest in the present and future descendants of the person holding the remainder interest.

Background. At common law, conditions of survivorship are not implied with respect to future interests (whether in trust or otherwise). For example, in the simple case of a trust, "income to husband, A, for life, remainder to daughter, B," B's interest is not defeated at common law if she predeceases A; B's interest would pass through her estate to her successors in interest (probably either her residuary legatees or heirs), who would become entitled to possession when A died. If any of B's successors in interest died before A, the interest held by that deceased successor in interest would likewise pass through his or her estate to his or her successors in interest; and so on.

The rationale for adopting a statutory provision reversing the common-law rule is to prevent cumbersome and costly distributions to and through the estates of deceased beneficiaries of future interests, who may have died long before the distribution date.

Subsection (b) [72-2-717(2)]: Subsection (b) [72-2-717(2)] imposes a condition of survivorship on future interests to the distribution date — defined as the time when the future interest is to take effect in possession or enjoyment.

The 120-hour Survivorship Period. In effect, the requirement of survival of the distribution date means survival of the 120-hour period following the distribution date. This is because, under Section 2-702(a) [72-2-712(1)], "an individual who is not established to have survived an event . . . by 120 hours is deemed to have predeceased the event." As made clear by subsection (a)(7) [72-2-717(1)(g)], for the purposes of Section 2-707 [72-2-717], the "event" to which Section 2-702(a) [72-2-712(1)] relates is the distribution date.

Note that the "distribution date" need not occur at the beginning or end of a calendar day, but can occur at a time during the course of a day, such as the time of death of an income beneficiary.

References in Section 2-707 [72-2-717] and in this Comment to survival of the distribution date should be understood as referring to survival of the distribution date by 120 hours.

Ambiguous Survivorship Language. Subsection (b) [72-2-717(2)] serves another purpose. It resolves a frequently litigated question arising from ambiguous language of survivorship, such as in a trust, "income to A for life, remainder in corpus to my surviving children." Although some case law interprets the word "surviving" as merely requiring survival of the testator (e.g., Nass' Estate, 320 Pa. 380, 182 A. 401 (1936)), the predominant position at common law interprets "surviving" as requiring survival of the life tenant, A. Hawke v. Lodge, 9 Del. Ch. 146, 77 A. 1090 (1910); Restatement of Property § 251 (1940). The first sentence of subsection (b) [72-2-717(2)], in conjunction with paragraph (3) [72-2-717(2)(c)], codifies the predominant common-law/Restatement position that survival relates to the distribution date.

The first sentence of subsection (b) [72-2-717(2)], in combination with paragraph (3) [72-2-717(2)(c)], imposes a condition of survivorship to the distribution date (the time of possession or enjoyment) even when an express condition of survivorship to an earlier time has been imposed. Thus, in a trust like "income to A for life, remainder in corpus to B, but if B predeceases A, to B's children who survive B," the first sentence of subsection (b) [72-2-717(2)] combined with paragraph (3) [72-2-717(2)(c)] requires B's children to survive (by 120 hours) the death of the income beneficiary, A.

Rule of Construction. Note that Section 2-707 [72-2-717] is a rule of construction. It is qualified by the rule set forth in Section 2-701 [72-2-711], and thus it yields to a finding of a contrary intention. Consequently, in trusts like "income to A for life, remainder in corpus to B whether or not B survives A," or "income to A for life, remainder in corpus to B or B's estate," this section would not apply and, should B predecease A, B's future interest would pass through B's estate to B's successors in interest, who would become entitled to possession or enjoyment at A's death.

Classification. Subsection (b) [72-2-717(2)] renders a future interest "contingent" on the beneficiary's survival of the distribution date. As a result, future interests are "nonvested" and subject to the Rule Against Perpetuities. To prevent an injustice from resulting because of this, the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities, which has a wait-and-see element, is incorporated into the Code as Part 9 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 10].

Substitute Gifts. Section 2-707 [72-2-717] not only imposes a condition of survivorship to the distribution date; like its antilapse counterparts, Sections 2-603 [72-2-613] and 2-706 [72-2-716], it provides substitute takers in cases of a beneficiary's failure to survive the distribution date.

The statutory substitute gift is divided among the devisee's descendants "by representation," a term defined in Section 2-709(b) [72-2-719(3)].

Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] — Future Interests Not in the Form of a Class Gift: Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] applies to non-class gifts, such as the "income to A for life, remainder in corpus to B" trust discussed above. If B predeceases A, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] creates a substitute gift with respect to B's future interest; the substitute gift is to B's descendants who survive A.

Subsection (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)] — Class Gift Future Interests. Subsection (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)] applies to class gifts, such as in a trust "income to A for life, remainder in corpus to A's children." Suppose that A had two children, X and Y. X predeceases A; Y survives A. Subsection (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)] creates a substitute gift with respect to any of A's children who predecease A leaving descendants who survive A. Thus, if X left descendants who survived A, X's descendants would take X's share; if X left no descendants living at A's death, Y would take it all.

Subsection (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)] does not apply to future interests to classes such as "issue," "descendants," "heirs of the body," "heirs," "next of kin," "distributees," "relatives," "family," or the like. The reason is that these types of class gifts have their own internal systems of representation, and so the substitute gift provided by subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] would be out of place with respect to these types of future interests. The first sentence of subsection (a) [72-2-717(1)] and subsection (d) [72-2-717(4)] do apply, however. For example, suppose a nonresiduary devise "to A for life, remainder to A's issue, by representation." If A leaves issue surviving him, they take. But if A leaves no issue surviving him, the testator's residuary devisees are the takers.

Subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)]. Subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)] provides that, if a governing instrument creates an alternative future interest with respect to a future interest for which a substitute gift is created by paragraph (1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] or (2) [72-2-717(2)(b)], the substitute gift is superseded by the alternative future interest only if an expressly designated beneficiary of the alternative future interest is entitled to take in possession or enjoyment. Consider, for example, a trust under the income is to be paid to A for life, remainder in corpus to B if B survives A, but if not to C if C survives A. If B predeceases A, leaving descendants who survive A, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] creates a substitute gift to B's descendants. But, if C survives A, the alternative future interest in C supersedes the substitute gift to B's descendants. Upon A's death, the trust corpus passes to C.

Subsection (c) [72-2-717(3)]. Subsection (c) [72-2-717(3)] is necessary because there can be cases in which subsections (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] or (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)] create substitute gifts with respect to two or more alternative future interests, and those substitute gifts are not superseded under the terms of subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)]. Subsection (c) [72-2-717(3)] provides the tie-breaking mechanism for such situations.

The initial step is to determine which of the alternative future interests would take effect had all the beneficiaries themselves survived the distribution date (by 120 hours). In subsection (c) [72-2-717(3)], this future interest is called the "primary future interest." Unless subsection (c)(2) [72-2-717(3)(b)] applies, subsection (c)(1) [72-2-717(3)(a)] provides that the property passes under substitute gift created with respect to the primary future interest. This substitute gift is called the "primary substitute gift." Thus, the property goes to the descendants of the beneficiary or beneficiaries of the primary future interest.

Subsection (c)(2) [72-2-717(3)(b)] provides an exception to this rule. Under subsection (c)(2) [72-2-717(3)(b)], the property does not pass under the primary substitute gift if there is a "younger-generation future interest" — defined as a future interest that (A) is to a descendant of a beneficiary of the primary future interest, (B) is an alternative future interest with respect to the primary future interest, (C) is a future interest for which a substitute gift is created, and (D) would have taken effect had all the deceased beneficiaries who left surviving descendants survived the distribution date except the deceased beneficiary or beneficiaries of the primary future interest. If there is a younger-generation future interest, the property passes under the "younger-generation substitute gift" — defined as the substitute gift created with respect to the younger-generation future interest.

Subsection (d) [72-2-717(4)]. Since it is possible that, after the application of subsections (b) [72-2-717(2)] and (c) [72-2-717(3)], there are no substitute gifts, a back-stop set of substitute takers is provided in subsection (d) [72-2-717(4)] — the transferor's residuary devisees or heirs. Note that the transferor's residuary clause is treated as creating a future interest and, as such, is subject to this section. Note also that the meaning of the back-stop gift to the transferor's heirs is governed by Section 2-711 [72-2-721], under which the gift is to the transferor's heirs determined as if the transferor died when A died. Thus there will always be a set of substitute takers, even if it turns out to be the state. If the transferor's surviving spouse has remarried after the transferor's death but before A's death, he or she would not be a taker under this provision.

Examples. The application of Section 2-707 [72-2-717] is illustrated by the following examples. Note that, in each example, the "distribution date" is the time of the income beneficiary's death. Assume, in each example, that an individual who is described as having "survived" the income beneficiary's death survived the income beneficiary's death by 120 hours or more.

Example 1. A nonresiduary devise in G's will created a trust, income to A for life, remainder in corpus to B if B survives A. G devised the residue of her estate to a charity. B predeceased A. At A's death, B's child, X, is living.

Solution: On A's death, the trust property goes to X, not to the charity. Because B's future interest is not in the form of a class gift, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] applies, not (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)]. Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] creates a substitute gift with respect to B's future interest; the substitute gift is to B's child, X. Under subsection (b)(3) [72-2-717(2)(c)], the words of survivorship attached to B's future interest ("to B if B survives A") do not indicate an intent contrary to the creation of that substitute gift. Nor, under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)], is that substitute gift superseded by an alternative future interest because, as defined in subsection (a)(1)[72-2-717(1)(a)], G's residuary clause does not create an alternative future interest. In the normal lapse situation, a residuary clause does not supersede the substitute gift created by the antilapse statute, and the same analysis applies to this situation as well.

Example 2. Same as Example 1, except that B left no descendants who survived A.

Solution: Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] does not create a substitute gift with respect to B's future interest because B left no descendants who survived A. This brings subsection (d) [72-2-717(4)] into operation, under which the trust property passes to the charity under G's residuary clause.

Example 3. G created an irrevocable inter-vivos trust, income to A for life, remainder in corpus to B if B survives A. B predeceased A. At A's death, G and X, B's child, are living.

Solution: X takes the trust property. Because B's future interest is not in the form of a class gift, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] applies, not (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)]. Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] creates a substitute gift with respect to B's future interest; the substitute gift is to B's child, X. Under subsection (b)(3) [72-2-717(2)(c)], the words of survivorship ("to B if B survives A") do not indicate an intent contrary to the creation of that substitute gift. Nor, under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)], is the substitute gift superseded by an alternative future interest; G's reversion is not an alternative future interest as defined in subsection (a)(1) [72-2-717(1)(a)] because it was not expressly created.

Example 4. G created an irrevocable inter-vivos trust, income to A for life, remainder in corpus to B if B survives A; if not, to C. B predeceased A. At A's death, C and B's child are living.

Solution: C takes the trust property. Because B's future interest is not in the form of a class gift, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] applies, not (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)]. Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] creates a substitute gift with respect to B's future interest; the substitute gift is to B's child, X. Under subsection (b)(3) [72-2-717(2)(c)], the words of survivorship ("to B if B survives A") do not indicate an intent contrary to the creation of that substitute gift. But, under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)], the substitute gift to B's child is superseded by the alternative future interest held by C because C, having survived A (by 120 hours), is entitled to take in possession or enjoyment.

Example 5. G created an irrevocable inter-vivos trust, income to A for life, remainder in corpus to B, but if B predeceases A, to the person B appoints by will. B predeceased A. B's will exercised his power of appointment in favor of C. C survives A. B's child, X, also survives A.

Solution: B's appointee, C, takes the trust property, not B's child, X. Because B's future interest is not in the form of a class gift, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] applies, not (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)]. Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] creates a substitute gift with respect to B's future interest; the substitute gift is to B's child, X. Under subsection (b)(3) [72-2-717(2)(c)], the words of survivorship ("to B if B survives A") do not indicate an intent contrary to the creation of that substitute gift. But, under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)], the substitute gift to B's child is superseded by the alternative future interest held by C because C, having survived A (by 120 hours), is entitled to take in possession or enjoyment. Because C's future interest was created in "a" governing instrument (B's will), it counts as an "alternative future interest."

Example 6. G creates an irrevocable inter-vivos trust, income to A for life, remainder in corpus to A's children who survive A; if none, to B. A's children predecease A, leaving descendants, X and Y, who survive A. B also survives A.

Solution: On A's death, the trust property goes to B, not to X and Y. Because the future interest in A's children is in the form of a class gift, subsection (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)] applies, not (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)]. Subsection (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)] creates a substitute gift with respect to the future interest in A's children; the substitute gift is to the descendants of A's children, X and Y. Under subsection (b)(3) [72-2-717(2)(c)], the words of survivorship ("to A's children who survive A") do not indicate an intent contrary to the creation of that substitute gift. But, under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)], the alternative future interest to B supersedes the substitute gift to the descendants of A's children because B survived A.

Alternative Facts: One of A's children, J, survives A; A's other child, K, predeceases A, leaving descendants, X and Y, who survive A. B also survives A.

Solution: J takes half the trust property and X and Y split the other half. Although there is an alternative future interest (in B) and although B did survive A, the alternative future interest was conditioned on none of A's children surviving A. Because that condition was not satisfied, the expressly designated beneficiary of that alternative future interest, B, is not entitled to take in possession or enjoyment. Thus, the alternative future interest in B does not supersede the substitute gift to K's descendants, X and Y.

Example 7. G created an irrevocable inter-vivos trust, income to A for life, remainder in corpus to B if B survives A; if not, to C. B and C predecease A. At A's death, B's child and C's child are living.

Solution: Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] produces substitute gifts with respect to B's future interest and with respect to C's future interest. B's future interest and C's future interest are alternative future interests, one to the other. B's future interest is expressly conditioned on B's surviving A. C's future interest is conditioned on B's predeceasing A and C's surviving A. The condition that C survive A does not arise from express language in G's trust but from the first sentence of subsection (b) [72-2-717(2)]; that sentence makes C's future interest contingent on C's surviving A. Thus, because neither B nor C survived A, neither B nor C is entitled to take in possession or enjoyment. So, under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)], neither substitute gift, created with respect to the future interests in B and C, is superseded by an alternative future interest. Consequently, resort must be had to subsection (c) [72-2-717(3)] to break the tie to determine which substitute gift takes effect.

Under subsection (c) [72-2-717(3)], B is the beneficiary of the "primary future interest" because B would have been entitled to the trust property had both B and C survived A. Unless subsection (c)(2) [72-2-717(3)(b)] applies, the trust property passes to B's child as the taker under the "primary substitute gift."

Subsection (c)(2) [72-2-717(3)(b)] would only apply if C's future interest qualifies as a "younger-generation future interest." This depends upon whether C is a descendant of B, for C's future interest satisfies the other requirements necessary to make it a younger-generation future interest. If C was a descendant of B, the substitute gift to C's child would be a "younger-generation substitute gift" and would become effective instead of the "primary substitute gift" to B's descendants. But if C was not a descendant of B, the property would pass under the "primary substitute gift" to B's descendants.

Example 8. G created an irrevocable inter-vivos trust, income to A for life, remainder in corpus to A's children who survive A; if none, to B. All of A's children predecease A. X and Y, who are descendants of one or more of A's children, survive A. B predeceases A, leaving descendants, M and N, who survive A.

Solution: On A's death, the trust property passes to X and Y under the "primary substitute gift," unless B was a descendant of any of A's children.

Subsection (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)] produces substitute gifts with respect to A's children who predeceased A leaving descendants who survived A. Subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] creates a substitute gift with respect to B's future interest. A's children's future interest and B's future interest are alternative future interests, one to the other. A's children's future interest is expressly conditioned on surviving A. B's future interest is conditioned on none of A's children surviving A and on B's surviving A. The condition of survivorship as to B's future interest does not arise because of express language in G's trust but because of the first sentence of subsection (b) [72-2-717(2)]; that sentence makes B's future interest contingent on B's surviving A. Thus, because none of A's children survived A, and because B did not survive A, none of A's children nor B is entitled to take in possession or enjoyment. So, under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)], neither substitute gift — i.e., neither the one created with respect to the future interest in A's children nor the one created with respect to the future interest in B — is superseded by an alternative future interest. Consequently, resort must be had to subsection (c) [72-2-717(3)] to break the tie to determine which substitute gift takes effect.

Under subsection (c) [72-2-717(3)], A's children are the beneficiaries of the "primary future interest" because they would have been entitled to the trust property had all of them and B survived A. Unless subsection (c)(2) [72-2-717(3)(b)] applies, the trust property passes to X and Y as the takers under the "primary substitute gift." Subsection (c)(2) [72-2-717(3)(b)] would only apply if B's future interest qualifies as a "younger-generation future interest." This depends upon whether B is a descendant of any of A's children, for B's future interest satisfies the other requirements necessary to make it a "younger-generation future interest." If B was a descendant of one of A's children, the substitute gift to B's children, M and N, would be a "younger-generation substitute gift" and would become effective instead of the "primary substitute gift" to X and Y. But if B was not a descendant of any of A's children, the property would pass under the "primary substitute gift" to X and Y.

Example 9. G's will devised property in trust, income to niece Lilly for life, corpus on Lilly's death to her children; should Lilly die without leaving children, the corpus shall be equally divided among my nephews and nieces then living, the child or children of nieces who may be deceased to take the share their mother would have been entitled to if living.

Lilly never had any children. G had 3 nephews and 2 nieces in addition to Lilly. All 3 nephews and both nieces predeceased Lilly. A child of one of the nephews survived Lilly. One of the nieces had 8 children, 7 of whom survived Lilly. The other niece had one child, who did not survive Lilly. (This example is based on the facts of Bomberger's Estate, 347 Pa. 465, 32 A.2d 729 (1943).)

Solution: The trust property goes to the 7 children of the nieces who survived Lilly. The substitute gifts created by subsection (b)(2) [72-2-717(2)(b)] to the nephew's son or to the nieces' children are superseded under subsection (b)(4) [72-2-717(2)(d)] because there is an alternative future interest (the "child or children of nieces who may be deceased") and expressly designated beneficiaries of that alternative future interest (the 7 children of the nieces) are living at Lilly's death and are entitled to take in possession or enjoyment.

Example 10. G devised the residue of his estate in trust, income to his wife, W, for life, remainder in corpus to their children, John and Florence; if either John or Florence should predecease W, leaving descendants, such descendants shall take the share their parent would have taken if living.

G's son, John, survived W. G's daughter, Florence, predeceased W. Florence never had any children. Florence's husband survived W. (This example is based on the facts of Matter of Kroos, 302 N.Y. 424, 99 N.E.2d 222 (1951).)

Solution: John, of course, takes his half of the trust property. Because Florence left no descendants who survived W, subsection (b)(1) [72-2-717(2)(a)] does not create a substitute gift with respect to Florence's future interest in her half. Subsection (d)(1) [72-2-717(4)(a)] is inapplicable because G's trust was not created in a nonresiduary devise or in a codicil to G's will. Subsection (d)(2) [72-2-717(4)(b)] therefore becomes applicable, under which Florence's half goes to G's heirs determined as if G died when W died, i.e., John. See Section 2-711 [72-2-721].

Purpose of New Section. This new section provides statutory definitions of "representation," "per capita at each generation," and "per stirpes." Subsection (b) [72-2-719(2)] applies to both private instruments and to provisions of applicable statutory law (such as Sections 2-603 [72-2-613], 2-706 [72-2-716], and 2-707 [72-2-717]) that call for property to be divided "by representation." The system of representation employed is the same as that which is adopted in Section 2-106 [72-2-116] for intestate succession.

Part 8
General Provisions Concerning Probate and Nonprobate Transfers

Part Official Comments

GENERAL COMMENT

Part 8 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 8] contains four general provisions that cut across probate and nonprobate transfers. Section 2-801 [72-2-811] is the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act; this Act replaces the narrower Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers By Will, Intestacy or Appointment Act, which was incorporated into the pre-1990 Code. The broader disclaimer act is now appropriate, given the broadened scope of Article II [Title 72, chapter 2] in covering nonprobate as well as probate transfers.

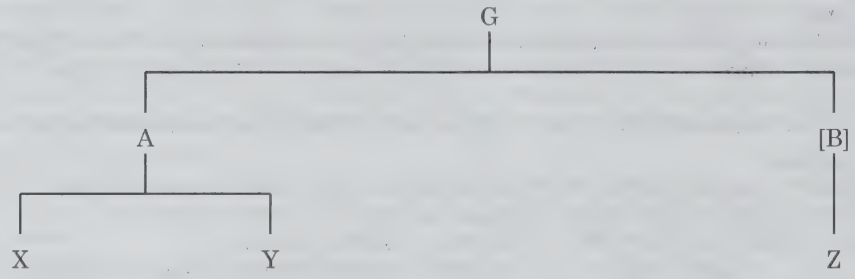
Section 2-802 [72-2-812] deals with the effect of divorce and separation on the right to elect against a will, exempt property and allowances, and an intestate share.

Section 2-803 [72-2-813] spells out the legal consequence of intentional and felonious killing on the right of the killer to take as heir and under wills and revocable inter-vivos transfers, such as revocable trusts and life-insurance beneficiary designations.

Section 2-804 [72-2-814] deals with the consequences of a divorce on the right of the former spouse (and relatives of the former spouse) to take under wills and revocable inter-vivos transfers, such as revocable trusts and life-insurance beneficiary designations.

72-2-811. Disclaimer of property interests.

Official Comments



Purpose and Scope of Revisions. This section brings into the Code the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act, replacing the prior incorporation of the Uniform Disclaimer of Transfers by Will, Intestacy or Appointment Act. The reason for incorporating the broader Act is that the scope of Article II [Title 72, chapter 2] has now been expanded to cover dispositive provisions not contained in wills.

Explanation of Revisions. Only three revisions of the Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act are adopted at this time, though the Joint Editorial Board believes that this and the other Uniform Disclaimer Acts are in need of revision in other respects.

Subsection (a) [72-2-811(1)]. Subsection (a) [72-2-811(1)] is revised in two respects. First, the right to disclaim is extended to a decedent through his or her personal representative. The Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act does not authorize disclaimers on behalf of a deceased person. Second, the sentence authorizing a disclaimer despite a limitation or restriction in the governing instrument is clarified to leave no doubt that an explicit restriction or limitation on the right to disclaim in the governing instrument is ineffective.

Subsection (d) [72-2-811(4)]. The third revision clarifies the effect of a disclaimer. The Uniform Disclaimer of Property Interests Act states that "it" shall devolve "as if the disclaimant had predeceased the decedent." Literally interpreted, the word "it" refers to "the disclaimed interest," not to the estate as a whole. (One of the changes above is to make this point unmistakable by replacing "it" with "the disclaimed interest.")

Unfortunately, even though the word "it" refers to the disclaimed interest, not to the estate as a whole, there is still a plausible interpretation of the phrase "the disclaimed interest devolves as if the disclaimant had predeceased the decedent" that does not produce the desired result. The desired result is to prevent an heir, for example, from using a disclaimer to effect a change in the division of an intestate's estate. To illustrate this point, consider the following example:

Under these facts, G's intestate estate is divided into two equal parts: A takes half and B's child, Z, takes the other half. Suppose, however, that A files a disclaimer. The desired effect of that disclaimer is to prevent A from affecting the basic division of G's intestate estate by this maneuver. If, however, the disclaimer statute merely provides that the "disclaimed interest" devolves as though the disclaimant (A) had predeceased the decedent, then A's one half interest would not pass only to X and Y, but to X, Y, and Z. To prevent this possible interpretation of that language, the "but if" phrase is added to (d)(1) [72-2-811(4)(a)] and (d)(2) [72-2-811(4)(b)]. This added phrase explicitly provides that A's disclaimed interest passes to A's descendants, if A left any descendants.

Time Allowed for Filing Disclaimer. It should be noted that there may be a discrepancy between the time allowed for filing a disclaimer under this section (and under the freestanding Uniform Acts) and the time allowed for filing a qualified disclaimer under the Internal Revenue Code § 2518. Lawyers are cautioned to check both the state and federal disclaimer statutes before advising clients, especially with respect to disclaimers of future interests.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 290 in (2)(c) near beginning after "devolving to the" inserted "surviving" and inserted "within 9 months after the death of the deceased joint owner, regardless of whether the surviving joint tenant contributed to the purchase of jointly held property or benefited from the jointly held property prior to the other joint tenant's death" and at end deleted sentence that read: "A surviving joint tenant may disclaim the entire interest in any property or interest in the property that is the subject of a joint tenancy devolving to the joint tenant if the joint tenancy was created by act of a deceased joint tenant, the survivor did not join in creating the joint tenancy, and the survivor has not accepted a benefit under it." Amendment effective April 9, 1999.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 in first sentence of (4)(a) and (4)(b) substituted "share in the disclaimed interest by representation or otherwise" for "take the disclaimant's share by representation" and near end of both sentences, after "representation", inserted "or passes as directed by the governing instrument"; and made minor changes in style.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning disclaimer of property interests for former text that read: "(1) A person or his personal representative or the representative of an incapacitated or protected person who is an heir, devisee, person succeeding to a renounced interest, donee, appointee, grantee, recipient, or beneficiary under a trust or other nontestamentary instrument or under a power of appointment exercised by a testamentary or nontestamentary instrument, surviving joint owner or surviving joint tenant, or beneficiary or owner of an insurance contract or any incident of ownership therein may renounce, in whole or in part, the right of succession to any property or interest therein, including a future interest, by filing a written renunciation under this section. The instrument shall:

(a) describe the property or interest renounced;

(b) be signed by the person renouncing; and

(c) declare the renunciation and the extent thereof.

(2) The court may direct or permit a trustee under a testamentary or nontestamentary instrument to renounce, modify, amend, or otherwise deviate from any restriction on or power of administration, management, or allocation of benefit upon finding that such restriction on the exercise of the power may defeat or impair the accomplishment of the purposes of the trust, whether by the imposition of tax, the allocation of beneficial interest inconsistent with such purposes, or by other reason. Such authority shall be exercised, after hearing and upon notice to all known persons beneficially interested in such trust, in the manner directed by the court.

(3) The instrument of renunciation must be received by the transferor of the interest, his legal representative, the personal representative of a deceased transferor, the trustee of any trust in which the interest being renounced exists, or the holder of the legal title to the property to which the interest relates. To be effective for purposes of determining inheritance and estate taxes, the instrument must be received not later than the date which is 9 months after the later of the date on which the transfer creating the interest in a person is made or the date on which the person attains 18 years of age. If the circumstances that establish the right of a person to renounce an interest arise as a result of the death of an individual, the instrument must also be filed in the court of the county where proceedings concerning the decedent's estate are pending or where they would be pending if commenced. If real property or an interest therein is renounced, a copy of the renunciation may be recorded in the office of the county clerk and recorder of the county in which the real estate is situated. No person entitled to a copy of the instrument is liable for any proper distribution or disposition made without actual notice of the renunciation, and no person making a proper distribution or disposition in reliance upon the renunciation is liable for any such distribution or disposition in the absence of actual notice that an action has been instituted contesting the validity of the renunciation.

(4) Unless the transferor of the interest has otherwise provided, the property or interest renounced devolves as though the person renouncing had predeceased the decedent or, if the appointment was exercised by a testamentary instrument, as though the person renouncing had predeceased the donee of the power. A future interest that takes effect in possession or enjoyment after the termination of the estate or interest renounced takes effect as though the person renouncing had predeceased the decedent or the donee of the power. A renunciation relates back for all purposes to the date of the death of the decedent or the donee of the power.

(5) (a) The right to renounce property or an interest therein is barred by:

(i) an assignment, conveyance, encumbrance, pledge, or transfer of property or interest, or a contract therefor;

(ii) a written waiver of the right to renounce;

(iii) an acceptance of the property or interest or benefit thereunder; or

(iv) a sale of the property or interest under judicial sale made before the renunciation is effected.

(b) The right to renounce exists notwithstanding any limitation on the interest of the person renouncing in the nature of a spendthrift provision or similar restriction.

(c) A renunciation or a written waiver of the right to renounce is binding upon the person renouncing or person waiving and all persons claiming through or under him.

(6) This section does not abridge the right of a person to waive, release, disclaim, or renounce property or an interest therein under any other statute.

(7) Within 30 days of receipt of a written instrument of renunciation by the transferor of the interest, the renouncer, his legal representative, the personal representative of the decedent, the trustee of any trust in which the interest being renounced exists, or the holder of the legal title to the property to which the interest relates, as the case may be, shall attempt to notify in writing those persons who are known or ascertainable with reasonable diligence who are recipients or potential recipients of the renounced interest of the renunciation and the interest or potential interest such recipient will receive as a result of the renunciation.

(8) Any interest in property which exists on July 1, 1983, may be renounced after October 1, 1983, as provided in this section. An interest that has arisen prior to July 1, 1983, in any person other than the person renouncing is not destroyed or diminished by any action of the person renouncing taken under this section."

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1983 Amendment: In (1), after "renounced interest" substituted "donee, appointee, grantee, recipient, or beneficiary under a ... ownership therein" (see 1983 Session Law for complete text) for "beneficiary under a testamentary instrument, or appointee under a power of appointment exercised by a testamentary instrument"; deleted former (2), which read: "(a) An instrument renouncing a present interest shall be filed within 9 months after the death of the decedent or the donee of the power.

(b) An instrument renouncing a future interest may be filed not later than 9 months after the event determining that the taker of the property or interest is finally ascertained and his interest is indefeasibly vested.

(c) The renunciation must be filed in the court of the county in which proceedings have been commenced for the administration of the estate of the deceased owner or deceased donee of the power or, if they have not been commenced, in which they could be commenced. A copy of the renunciation shall be delivered in person or mailed by registered or certified mail to any personal representative or other fiduciary of the decedent or donee of the power. If real property or an interest therein is renounced, a copy of the renunciation may be recorded in the office of the county clerk of the county in which the real estate is situated."; inserted (2) allowing trustee renunciation; inserted (3) relating to receipt of instrument of renunciation and date of renunciation; in (4) near beginning of first sentence substituted "transferor of the interest" for "decedent or donee of the power"; deleted former (6), which read: "An interest in property which exists on July 1, 1975, as to which, if a present interest, the time for filing a renunciation under the Uniform Probate Code has not expired, or if a future interest, the interest has not become indefeasibly vested or the taker finally ascertained, may be renounced within 9 months after July 1, 1975."; inserted (7) concerning notice of renunciation; and inserted (8) concerning renunciation of interest in property arising prior to and existing on July 1, 1983.

1981 Amendment: Generally revised this section (see 1981 Session Law for text). DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Property Settlement Agreement Ineffective as to Renunciation of Beneficiary's Right to IRA: Upon dissolution of her marriage to Glendon, Isabel agreed to a property settlement awarding Glendon sole ownership of an IRA in which she was named as beneficiary. Later, Glendon died without having removed Isabel as the named beneficiary of the IRA and Isabel filed a renunciation of her interest in the IRA. The District Court held that Isabel could not renounce her interest in the IRA because the property settlement agreement deprived her of her interest in the IRA. Therefore, the District Court ruled that the contingent beneficiaries were not entitled to the IRA. Citing Sowell v. Teachers' Retirement Sys., 214 M 200, 693 P2d 1222 (1984), and Eschler v. Eschler, 257 M 360, 849 P2d 196 (1993), the Supreme Court held that under the property settlement agreement, Isabel lost only her marital interest in the IRA but not her interest as a beneficiary. Her renunciation of her interest was therefore operative against her interest as a beneficiary, and Isabel's interest in the IRA as a beneficiary vested in the contingent beneficiaries. DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Disclaimer of Surviving Spouse's Interest Filed Simultaneously With Instrument Revoking Disclaimer: The surviving spouse entered into an agreement with the decedent's son whereby she disclaimed her interest in the family business. She subsequently changed her mind and filed the disclaimer and an instrument revoking the disclaimer at the same time. The Supreme Court held that this section requires the disclaimer to be filed to take effect and that because it was filed simultaneously with a revoking document it was not valid. Probate Law in Montana—Changes by 1981 Legislature, Marcott, 42 Mont. L. Rev. 315 (1981).

72-2-812. Effect of divorce, annulment, or decree of separation.

Official Comments

Clarifying Revision. The only substantive revision of this section is a clarifying revision of subsection (b)(2) [72-2-812(2)(b)], making it clear that this subsection refers to an invalid decree of divorce or annulment.

Rationale. Although some existing statutes bar the surviving spouse for desertion or adultery, the present section requires some definitive legal act to bar the surviving spouse. Normally, this is divorce. Subsection (a) [72-2-812(1)] states an obvious proposition, but subsection (b) [72-2-812(2)] deals with the difficult problem of invalid divorce or annulment, which is particularly frequent as to foreign divorce decrees but may arise as to a local decree where there is some defect in jurisdiction; the basic principle underlying these provisions is estoppel against the surviving spouse. Where there is only a legal separation, rather than a divorce, succession patterns are not affected; but if the separation is accompanied by a complete property settlement, this may operate under Section 2-204 [72-2-224] as a waiver or renunciation of benefits under a prior will and by intestate succession.

Cross Reference. See Section 2-804 [72-2-814] for similar provisions relating to the effect of divorce to revoke devises and other revocable provisions to a former spouse.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Absence of Final Divorce Order — Oral Settlement Agreement Not Binding — Equitable Estoppel Inapplicable: Barbara and Michael orally agreed to settle all marital property rights, but a final decree of dissolution was not issued before Michael died. The trial court was not bound by the oral agreement, and even though both parties had considered themselves divorced, absent a final order of dissolution terminating all marital property rights, Barbara's status as a surviving spouse was not terminated pursuant to this section. Further, equitable estoppel would have required that Barbara's representation that the parties were divorced be made with the intention or expectation that Michael would act on the representation and rely on it to his detriment and that he not be aware that the divorce was not final. Uncontradicted testimony showed that these facts did not apply, so Barbara was not equitably estopped from claiming that she was the surviving spouse. Purpose and Scope of Revisions. This section is substantially revised. Although the revised version does make a few substantive changes in certain subsidiary rules (such as the treatment of multiple party accounts, etc.), it does not alter the main thrust of the pre-1990 version. The major change is that the revised version is more comprehensive than the pre-1990 version. The structure of the section is also changed so that it substantially parallels the structure of Section 2-804 [72-2-814], which deals with the effect of divorce on revocable benefits to the former spouse.

The pre-1990 version of this section was bracketed to indicate that it may be omitted by an enacting state without difficulty. The revised version omits the brackets because the Joint Editorial Board/Article II Drafting Committee believes that uniformity is desirable on the question.

As in the pre-1990 version, this section is confined to felonious and intentional killing and excludes the accidental manslaughter killing. Subsection (g) [72-2-813(7)] leaves no doubt that, for purposes of this section, a killing can be "felonious and intentional," whether or not the killer has actually been convicted in a criminal prosecution. Under subsection (g) [72-2-813(7)], after all right to appeal has been exhausted, a judgment of conviction establishing criminal accountability for the felonious and intentional killing of the decedent conclusively establishes the convicted individual as the decedent's killer for purposes of this section. Acquittal, however, does not preclude the acquitted individual from being regarded as the decedent's killer for purposes of this section. This is because different considerations as well as a different burden of proof enter into the finding of criminal accountability in the criminal prosecution. Hence it is possible that the defendant on a murder charge may be found not guilty and acquitted, but if the same person claims as an heir, devisee, or beneficiary of a revocable beneficiary designation, etc.

of the decedent, the probate court, upon the petition of an interested person, may find that, under a preponderance of the evidence standard, he or she would be found criminally accountable for the felonious and intentional killing of the decedent and thus be barred under this section from sharing in the affected property. In fact, in many of the cases arising under this section there may be no criminal prosecution because the killer has committed suicide.

It is now well accepted that the matter dealt with is not exclusively criminal in nature but is also a proper matter for probate courts. The concept that a wrongdoer may not profit by his or her own wrong is a civil concept, and the probate court is the proper forum to determine the effect of killing on succession to the decedent's property covered by this section. There are numerous situations where the same conduct gives rise to both criminal and civil consequences. A killing may result in criminal prosecution for murder and civil litigation by the decedent's family under wrongful death statutes. Another analogy exists in the tax field, where a taxpayer may be acquitted of tax fraud in a criminal prosecution but found to have committed the fraud in a civil proceeding.

The phrases "criminal accountability" and "criminally accountable" for the felonious and intentional killing of the decedent not only include criminal accountability as an actor or direct perpetrator, but also as an accomplice or co-conspirator.

Unlike the pre-1990 version, the revised version contains a subsection protecting payors who pay before receiving written notice of a claimed forfeiture or revocation under this section, and imposing personal liability on the recipient or killer.

The pre-1990 version's provision on the severance of joint tenancies and tenancies by the entirety also extended to "joint and multiple party accounts in banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions and other institutions, and any other form of co-ownership with survivorship incidents." Under subsection (c)(2) [72-2-813(3)(b)] of the revised version, the severance applies only to "property held by [the decedent and killer] as joint tenants with the right of survivorship [or as community property with the right of survivorship]." The terms "joint tenants with the right of survivorship" and "community property with the right of survivorship" are defined in Section 1-201 [72-1-103]. That definition includes tenancies by the entirety, but excludes "forms of co-ownership registration in which the underlying ownership of each party is in proportion to that party's contribution." Under subsection (c)(1) [72-2-813(3)(a)], any portion of the decedent's contribution to the co-ownership registration running in favor of the killer would be treated as a revocable and revoked disposition.

ERISA Preemption of State Law. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) federalizes pension and employee benefit law. Section 514(a) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a), provides that the provisions of Titles I and IV of ERISA "shall supersede any and all State laws insofar as they may now or hereafter relate to any employee benefit plan" governed by ERISA. See the Comment to Section 2-804 [72-2-814] for a discussion of the ERISA preemption question.

Cross References. See Section 1-201 [72-1-103] for definitions of "beneficiary designated in a governing instrument," "governing instrument," "joint tenants with the right of survivorship," "community property with the right of survivorship," and "payor."

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 in (5), after "instrument", deleted "that are not revoked by this section" and after "all" substituted "provisions revoked by this section" for "revoked provisions"; in (8)(a) inserted second sentence concerning determination of homicide, substituted third sentence concerning liability for actions taken 2 or more business days after notice for "A payor or other third party is liable for a payment made or other action taken after the payor or other third party received written notice of a claimed forfeiture or revocation under this section", and inserted last sentence concerning liability for form of service described in subsection (8)(b); in (8)(b) inserted first sentence concerning information in written notice, inserted third sentence concerning notice to sales representative, inserted fifth through seventh sentences concerning other authorized actions, filing with court, and prohibiting filing fee, and inserted ninth sentence authorizing filing fee; in (9)(a), at beginning, substituted "bona fide purchaser who purchases property" for "person who purchases property for value and without notice"; and in (9)(b) inserted second clause concerning ERISA.

1993 Amendment: Chapter 494 substituted current text concerning effect of homicide on intestate succession, wills, trusts, joint assets, life insurance, and beneficiary designation for former text that read: "(1) A surviving spouse, heir, or devisee who feloniously and intentionally kills the decedent is not entitled to any benefits under the will or under this chapter, and the estate of the decedent passes as if the killer had predeceased the decedent. Property appointed by the will of the decedent to or for the benefit of the killer passes as if the killer had predeceased the decedent.

(2) Any joint tenant who feloniously and intentionally kills another joint tenant thereby effects a severance of the interest of the decedent so that the share of the decedent passes as his property and the killer has no rights by survivorship. This provision applies to joint tenancies in real and personal property, joint accounts in banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions, and other institutions, and any other form of co-ownership with survivorship incidents.

(3) A named beneficiary of a bond, life insurance policy, or other contractual arrangement who feloniously and intentionally kills the principal obligee or the person upon whose life the policy is issued is not entitled to any benefit under the bond, policy, or other contractual arrangement, and it becomes payable as though the killer had predeceased the decedent.

(4) Any other acquisition of property or interest by the killer shall be treated in accordance with the principles of this section.

(5) A final judgment of conviction of felonious and intentional killing is conclusive for purposes of this section. In the absence of a conviction of felonious and intentional killing, the court may determine by a preponderance of evidence whether the killing was felonious and intentional for purposes of this section.

(6) This section does not affect the rights of any person who, before rights under this section have been adjudicated, purchases from the killer for value and without notice property which the killer would have acquired except for this section, but the killer is liable for the amount of the proceeds or the value of the property. Any insurance company, bank, or other obligor making payment according to the terms of its policy or obligation is not liable by reason of this section unless prior to payment it has received at its home office or principal address written notice of a claim under this section.

(7) For the purposes of this section, a felonious and intentional killing includes a deliberate homicide as defined in 45-5-102 and a mitigated deliberate homicide as defined in 45-5-103."

Saving Clause: Section 136, Ch. 494, L. 1993, was a saving clause.

1989 Amendment: Inserted (7) relating to deliberate homicide and mitigated deliberate homicide.

1989 Editorial Comment: Subsection (1) comes verbatim from the national Uniform Probate Code section 2-803. However, the Montana statutes dealing with homicide refer to a "purposely or knowingly" killing, rather than an "intentional killing". See 45-5-102. The new subsection (7) provides that a felonious and intentional killing includes a deliberate homicide as defined in 45-5-102 and a mitigated deliberate homicide as defined in 45-5-103.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 2-803.

Case Notes

Guilty Plea in Criminal Case Not Conclusive of Defendant's Felonious Intent for Inheritance Purposes: While suffering from a mental disease or defect, Swanson killed her two children. Swanson pleaded guilty and was sentenced to a life term in the state hospital. Swanson's husband served as the personal representative for the children's estates, and he petitioned the District Court to forfeit Swanson's interest in the estates pursuant to this section, which provides that a slayer who feloniously and intentionally kills another may not take from the decedent's estate. The District Court found as a matter of law that Swanson had forfeited her right of inheritance to the children's estates and granted the petition, and the mother appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. The District Court summarily denied Swanson the right to inherit by treating her guilty plea as conclusive evidence that she feloniously and intentionally killed her children, without expressly addressing the issue of collateral estoppel, which effectively precluded Swanson from litigating whether she acted with the requisite intent and whether the killings were felonious. Pursuant to this section, if there has been a judgment of conviction that establishes criminal accountability for the felonious and intentional killing of the decedent, the convicted person is presumed to be the killer, but if a killer's criminal accountability has not yet been established through litigation, as when a defendant pleads guilty, this section explicitly directs the District Court to consider the issues of intent and whether the killing was felonious in a civil proceeding. Without determining whether Swanson was entitled to inherit, the Supreme Court remanded for a District Court determination of whether the killing was done with a mind bent on doing wrong. On remand, the husband had the burden of proving that Swanson acted with the requisite intent, taking into account Swanson's mental condition as required by 46-14-101, and evidence of Swanson's guilty plea was admissible on the independent ground that it was an admission but without giving it conclusive effect. Presumption of Undivided Equal Interests in Property Subject to Rebuttal: The estate of Nina Garland argued that the lower court erred in determining that her husband, who had killed her, owned an undivided equal interest in the proceeds of the sale of the couple's house. The Supreme Court agreed, reversing the District Court on the grounds that the husband's interest was as a tenant in common and that the estate should have been given the opportunity to prove that Nina's contribution to the purchase and maintenance of the property entitled her estate to more than an equal share of the proceeds. In re Estate of Garland, 279 M 269, 928 P2d 928, 53 St. Rep. 1146 (1996).

Husband and Wife Joint Tenancy — Intentional Killing — Constructive Trust: A husband and wife were owners of real property as joint tenants with rights of survivorship. The intentional killing of the husband by the wife effected a severance of the joint tenancy with a one-half interest being retained by the wife and the remaining one-half interest passing to the estate of the decedent husband. Because the wife's interest vested at the creation of the joint tenancy, her retention of a one-half interest was not a benefit resulting from her killing of her husband. The court was not required to impose a constructive trust on the wife's interest, only upon the decedent husband's interest. With respect to the husband's estate, the wife was not entitled to any portion. Official Comments

Purpose and Scope of Revision. The revisions of this section, pre-1990 Section 2-508 [former 72-2-322, renumbered 72-2-528], intend to unify the law of probate and nonprobate transfers. As originally promulgated, pre-1990 Section 2-508 [former 72-2-322, renumbered 72-2-528] revoked a predivorce devise to the testator's former spouse. The revisions expand the section to cover "will substitutes" such as revocable inter-vivos trusts, life-insurance and retirement-plan beneficiary designations, transfer-on-death accounts, and other revocable dispositions to the former spouse that the divorced individual established before the divorce (or annulment). As revised, this section also effects a severance of the interests of the former spouses in property that they held at the time of the divorce (or annulment) as joint tenants with the right of survivorship; their co-ownership interests become tenancies in common.

As revised, this section is the most comprehensive provision of its kind, but many states have enacted piecemeal legislation tending in the same direction. For example, Michigan and Ohio have statutes transforming spousal joint tenancies in land into tenancies in common upon the spouses' divorce. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 552.102; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 5302.20(c)(5). Ohio, Oklahoma, and Tennessee have recently enacted legislation effecting a revocation of provisions for the settlor's former spouse in revocable inter-vivos trusts. Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1339.62; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 60, § 175; Tenn. Code Ann. § 35-50-115 (applies to revocable and irrevocable inter-vivos trusts). Statutes in Michigan, Ohio, Oklahoma, and Texas relate to the consequence of divorce on life-insurance and retirement-plan beneficiary designations. Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 552.101; Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 1339.63; Okla. Stat. Ann. tit. 15, § 178; Tex. Fam. Code §§ 3.632-.633.

The courts have also come under increasing pressure to use statutory construction techniques to extend statutes like the pre-1990 version of Section 2-508 [former 72-2-322, renumbered 72-2-528] to various will substitutes. In Clymer v. Mayo, 393 Mass. 754, 473 N.E.2d 1084 (1985), the Massachusetts court held the statute applicable to a revocable inter-vivos trust, but restricted its "holding to the particular facts of this case specifically the existence — of a revocable pour-over trust funded entirely at the time of the decedent's death." 473 N.E.2d at 1093. The trust in that case was an unfunded life-insurance trust; the life insurance was employer-paid life insurance. In Miller v. First Nat'l Bank & Tr. Co., 637 P.2d 75 (Okla. 1981), the court also held such a statute to be applicable to an unfunded life-insurance trust. The testator's will devised the residue of his estate to the trustee of the life-insurance trust. Despite the absence of meaningful evidence of intent to incorporate, the court held that the pour-over devise incorporated the life-insurance trust into the will by reference, and thus was able to apply the revocation-upon-divorce statute. In Equitable Life Assurance Society v. Stitzel, 1 Pa.

Fiduc.2d 316 (C.P. 1981), however, the court held a statute similar to the pre-1990 version of Section 2-508 [former 72-2-322, renumbered 72-2-528] to be inapplicable to effect a revocation of a life-insurance beneficiary designation of the former spouse.

Revoking Benefits of the Former Spouse's Relatives. In several cases, including Clymer v. Mayo, 393 Mass. 754, 473 N.E.2d 1084 (1985), and Estate of Coffed, 46 N.Y.2d 514, 414 N.Y.S.2d 893, 387 N.E.2d 1209 (1979), the result of treating the former spouse as if he or she predeceased the testator was that a gift in the governing instrument was triggered in favor of relatives of the former spouse who, after the divorce, were no longer relatives of the testator. In the Massachusetts case, the former spouse's nieces and nephews ended up with an interest in the property. In the New York case, the winners included the former spouse's child by a prior marriage. For other cases to the same effect, see Porter v. Porter, 286 N.W.2d 649 (Iowa 1979); Bloom v. Selfon, 520 Pa. 519, 555 A.2d 75 (1989); Estate of Graef, 124 Wis.2d 25, 368 N.W.2d 633 (1985). Given that, during divorce process or in the aftermath of the divorce, the former spouse's relatives are likely to side with the former spouse, breaking down or weakening any former ties that may previously have developed between the transferor and the former spouse's relatives, seldom would the transferor have favored such a result. This section, therefore, also revokes these gifts.

Consequence of Revocation. The effect of revocation by this section is, of course, that the governing instrument is given effect as if the revoked provisions were removed or stricken therefrom at the time of the divorce or annulment. The remaining or unrevoked provisions of the governing instrument take effect as if the divorced individual's former spouse (and relatives of the former spouse) disclaimed the revoked provisions (see Section 2-801(d) [72-2-811(4)] for the effect of a disclaimer) or, in the case of a revoked nomination in a fiduciary or representative capacity, as if the former spouse and relatives of the former spouse died immediately before the divorce or annulment. If the divorced individual (or relative of the divorced individual) is the donee of an unexercised power of appointment that is revoked by this section, the gift-in-default clause, if any, is to take effect, to the extent that the gift-in-default clause is not itself revoked by this section.

ERISA Preemption of State Law. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) federalizes pension and employee benefit law. Section 514(a) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a), provides that the provisions of Titles I and IV of ERISA "shall supersede any and all State laws insofar as they may now or hereafter relate to any employee benefit plan" governed by ERISA.

ERISA's preemption clause is extraordinarily broad. ERISA Section 514(a) does not merely preempt state laws that conflict with specific provisions in ERISA. Section 514(a) preempts "any and all State laws" insofar as they "relate to" any ERISA-governed employee benefit plan.

A complex case law has arisen concerning the question of whether to apply ERISA Section 514(a) to preempt state law in circumstances in which ERISA supplies no substantive regulation. For example, until 1984, ERISA contained no authorization for the enforcement of state domestic relations decrees against pension accounts, but the federal courts were virtually unanimous in refusing to apply ERISA preemption against such state decrees. See, e.g., American Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Merry, 592 F.2d 118 (2d Cir. 1979). The Retirement Equity Act of 1984 amended ERISA to add Sections 206(d)(3) and 514(b)(7), confirming the judicially created exception for state domestic relations decrees.

The federal courts have been less certain about whether to defer to state probate law. In Board of Trustees of Western Conference of Teamsters Pension Trust Fund v. H.F. Johnson, Inc., 830 F.2d 1009 (9th Cir. 1987), the court held that ERISA preempted the Montana nonclaim statute (which is Section 3-803 of the Uniform Probate Code). On the other hand, in Mendez-Bellido v. Board of Trustees, 709 F. Supp. 329 (E.D. N.Y. 1989), the court applied the New York "slayer-rule" against an ERISA preemption claim, reasoning that "state laws prohibiting murderers from receiving death benefits are relatively uniform [and therefore] there is little threat of creating a 'patchwork scheme of regulations'" that ERISA sought to avoid.

It is to be hoped that the federal courts will continue to show sensitivity to the primary role of state law in the field of probate and nonprobate transfers. To the extent that the federal courts think themselves unable to craft exceptions to ERISA's preemption language, it is open to them to apply state law concepts as federal common law. Because the Uniform Probate Code contemplates multistate applicability, it is well suited to be the model for federal common law absorption.

Another avenue of reconciliation between ERISA preemption and the primacy of state law in this field is envisioned in subsection (h)(2) [72-2-814(8)(b)] of this section. It imposes a personal liability for pension payments that pass to a former spouse or relative of a former spouse. This provision respects ERISA's concern that federal law govern the administration of the plan, while still preventing unjust enrichment that would result if an unintended beneficiary were to receive the pension benefits. Federal law has no interest in working a broader disruption of state probate and nonprobate transfer law than is required in the interest of smooth administration of pension and employee benefit plans.

Part 9
Uniform International Will Act

Part Official Comments

Introduction

The purpose of the Washington Convention of 1973 concerning international wills is to provide testators with a way of making wills that will be valid as to form in all countries joining the Convention. As proposed by the Convention, the objective would be achieved through uniform local rules of form, rather than through local or international law that makes recognition of foreign wills turn on choice of law rules involving possible application of foreign law. The international will provisions, prepared for the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws by the Joint Editorial Board for the Uniform Probate Code which has functioned as a special committee of the Conference for the project, should be enacted by all states, including those that have not accepted the Uniform Probate Code. To that end, this statute is framed both as a free-standing Act and as an added part of the Uniform Probate Code.

The bracketed headings and numbers fit the proposal into UPC; the others present the proposal as a free-standing Act.

Uniform state enactment of these provisions will permit the Washington Convention of 1973 to be implemented through state legislation familiar to will draftsmen. Thus, local proof of foreign law and reliance on federal legislation regarding wills can be avoided when foreign wills come into our states to be implemented. Also, the citizens of all states will have a will form available that should greatly reduce perils of proof and risks of invalidity that attend proof of American wills abroad.

History of the International Will

Discussions about possible international accord on an acceptable form of will led the Governing Council of UNIDROIT (International Institute for the Unification of Private Law) in 1960 to appoint a small committee of experts from several countries to develop proposals. Following week-long meetings at the Institute's quarters in Rome in 1963, and on two occasions in 1965, the Institute published and circulated a Draft Convention of December 1966 with an annexed uniform law that would be required to be enacted locally by those countries agreeing to the convention. The package and accompanying explanations were reviewed in this country by the Secretary of State's Advisory Committee on Private International Law. In turn, it referred the proposal to a special committee of American probate specialists drawn from member of NCCUSL's Special Committee on the Uniform Probate Code and its advisers and reporters. The resulting reports and recommendations were affirmative and urged the State Department to cooperate in continuing efforts to develop the 1966 Draft Convention, and to endeavor to interest other countries in the subject.

Encouraged by support for the project from this country and several others, UNIDROIT served as host for a 1971 meeting in Rome of an expanded group that included some of the original panel of experts and others from several countries that were not represented in the early drafting sessions. The result of this meeting was a revised draft of the proposed convention and annexed uniform law and this, in turn, was the subject of study and discussion by many more persons in this country. In mid-1973, the proposal from UNIDROIT was discussed in a joint program of the Real Property Probate and Trust Law Section, and the Section of International Law at the American Bar Association's annual meeting held that year in Washington, D.C. By late 1973, the list of published, scholarly discussions of the International Will proposals included Fratcher, "The Uniform Probate Code and the International Will", 66 Mich.L.Rev. 469 (1968); Wellman, "Recent Unidroit Drafts on the International Will", 6 The International Lawyer 205 (1973); and Wellman, "Proposed International Convention Concerning Wills", 8/4 Real Property, Probate and Trust Journal 622 (1973).

In October 1973, pursuant to a commitment made earlier to UNIDROIT representatives that it would provide leadership for the international will proposal if sufficient interest from other countries became evident, the United States served as host for the diplomatic Conference on Wills which met in Washington from October 10 to 26, 1973. 42 governments were represented by delegations, 6 by observers. The United States delegation of 8 persons plus 2 Congressional advisers and 2 staff advisers, was headed by Ambassador Richard D. Kearney, Chairman of the Secretary of State's Advisory Committee on Private International Law who also was selected president of the Conference. The result of the Conference was the Convention of October 26, 1973 Providing a Uniform Law on the Form of an International Will, an appended Annex, Uniform Law on the Form of an International Will, and a Resolution recommending establishment of state assisted systems for the safekeeping and discovery of wills. These three documents are reproduced at the end of these preliminary comments.

A more detailed account of the UNIDROIT project and the 1973 Convention, together with recommendations regarding United States implementation of the Convention, appears in Nadelmann, "The Formal Validity of Wills and the Washington Convention 1973 Providing the Form of an International Will", XXII The American Journal of Comparative Law, 365 (1974).

Description of the Proposal

The 1973 Convention obligates countries becoming parties to make the annexed uniform law a part of their local law. The proposed uniform law contemplates the involvement in will executions under this law of a state recognized expert who is referred to throughout the proposals as the "authorized person". Hence, the local law called for by the Convention must designate authorized persons, and prescribe the formalities for an international will and the role of authorized persons relating thereto. The Convention binds parties to respect the authority of another party's authorized persons and this obligation, coupled with local enactment of the common statute prescribing the role of such persons and according finality to their certificates regarding due execution of wills, assures recognition of international wills under local law in all countries joining the Convention.

The Convention and the annexed uniform law deal only with the formal validity of wills. Thus, the proposal is entirely neutral in relation to local laws dealing with revocation of wills, or those defining the scope of testamentary power, or regulating the probate, interpretation, and construction of wills, and the administration of decedents' estates. The proposal describes a highly formal mode of will execution; one that is sufficiently protective against imposition and mistake to command international approval as being safe enough. However, failure to meet the requirements of an international will does not necessarily result in invalidity, for the mode of execution described for an international will does not pre-empt or exclude other standards of testamentary validity.

The details of the prescribed mode of execution reflect a blend of common and civil law elements. Two attesting witnesses are required in the tradition of the English Statute of Wills of 1837 and its American counterparts. The authorized person whose participation in the ceremony of execution is required, and whose certificate makes the will self-proved, plays a role not unlike that of the civil law notary, though he is not required to retain custody of the will as is customary with European notaries.

The question of who should be given state recognition as authorized persons was resolved by designation of all licensed attorneys. The reasons for this can be seen in the observations about the role of Kurt H. Nadelmann, writing in The American Journal of Comparative Law:

The duties imposed by the Uniform Law upon the person doing the certifying go beyond legalization of signatures, the domain of the notary public. At least paralegal training is a necessity. Abroad, in countries with the law trained notary, the designation is likely to go to this class or at least to include it. Similarly, in countries with a closely supervised class of solicitors, their designation may be expected.

Attorneys are subject to training and licensing requirements everywhere in this country. The degree to which they are supervised after qualification varies considerably from state to state, but the trend is definitely in the direction of more rather than less supervision. Designation of attorneys in the uniform law permits a state to bring the statute into its local law books without undue delay.

Roles for Federal and State Law in Relation to International Will

Several alternatives are available for arranging federal and state laws on the subject of international wills. The 1973 Convention obligates nations becoming parties to introduce the annexed uniform law into their local law, and to recognize the authority, vis a vis will executions and certificates relating to wills, of persons designated as authorized by other parties to the Convention. But, the Convention includes a clause for federal states that may be used by the United States as it moves, through the process of Senate Advice and Consent, to accept the international compact. Through it, the federal government may limit the areas in this country to which the Convention will be applicable. Thus, Article XIV of the 1973 Convention provides:

1. If a state has two or more territorial units in which different systems of law apply in relation to matters respecting the form of wills, it may at the time of signature, ratification, or accession, declare that this Convention shall extend to all its territorial units or only to one or more of them, and may modify its declaration by submitting another declaration at any time.

2. These declarations shall be notified to the Depositary Government and shall state expressly the territorial units to which the Convention applies.

One alternative would be for the federal government to refrain from use of Article XIV and to accept the Convention as applicable to all areas of the country. The obligation to introduce the uniform law into local law then could be met by passage of a federal statute incorporating the uniform law and designating authorized persons who can assist testators desiring to use the international format, possibly leaving it open for state legislatures, if they wish, to designate other or additional groups of authorized persons. As to constitutionality, the federal statute on wills could be rested on the power of the federal government to bind the states by treaty and to implement a treaty obligation to bring agreed upon rules into local law by any appropriate method. Missouri v. Holland, 252 U.S. 416 (1920); Nadelmann, "The Formal Validity of Wills and the Washington Convention 1973 Providing the Form of An International Will", XXII The Am. Jn'l of Comp.L. 365, 375 (1974). Prof. Nadelmann favors this approach, arguing that new risks of invalidity of wills would arise if the treaty were limited so as to be applicable only in designated areas of the country, presumably those where state enactment of the uniform law already had occurred.

One disadvantage of this approach is that it would place a potentially important method for validating wills in federal statutes where probate practitioners, long accustomed to finding the statutes pertinent to their specialty in state compilations, simply would not discover it. Another, of course, relates to more generalized concerns that would attend any move by the federal government into an area of law traditionally reserved to the states.

Alternatively, the federal government might accept the Convention and uniform law as applicable throughout the land, so that international wills executed with the aid of authorized persons of other countries would be good anywhere in this country, but refrain from any designation of authorized persons, other than possibly of some minimum federal cadre, or of those who could function within the District of Columbia, leaving the selection of more useful groups of authorized persons entirely to the states. One result would be to greatly narrow the advantage of international wills to American testators who wanted to execute their instruments at home. In probable consequence, there would be pressure on state legislatures to enact the uniform law so as to make the advantages of the system available to local testators. Assuming some state legislatures respond to the pressure affirmatively and others negatively, a crazyquilt pattern of international will states would develop, leading possibly to some of the confusion and risk of illegality feared by Prof. Nadelmann. On the other hand, since execution of an international will involves use of an authorized person who derives authority from (on this assumption) state legislation, it seem somewhat unlikely that testators in states which have not designated authorized persons will be led to believe that they can make an international will unless they go to a state where authorized persons have been designated. Hence, the confusion may not be as great as if the Convention were inapplicable to portions of the country.

Finally, the federal government might use Article XIV as suggested earlier, and designate some but not all states as areas of the country in which the Convention applied. This seems the least desirable of all alternatives because it subjects international wills from abroad to the risk of non-recognition in some states, and offers the risk of confusion of American testators regarding the areas of the country where they can execute a will that will be received outside this country as an international will.

Under any of the approaches, the desirability of widespread enactment of state statutes embodying the uniform law and designating authorized persons, seems clear, as does the necessity for this project of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws.

Style

In preparing the International Will proposal, the special committee, after considerable discussion and consideration of alternatives, decided to stick as closely as possible to the wording of the Annex to the Convention of October 26, 1973. The Convention and its Annex were written in the English, French, Russian and Spanish languages, each version, as declared by Article XVI of the Convention, being equally authentic. Not surprisingly, the English version of the Annex has a style that is somewhat different than that to which the National Conference is accustomed. Nonetheless, from the view of those using languages other than English who may be reviewing our state statutes on the International Will to see if they adhere to the Annex, it is more important to stick with the agreed formulations than it is to re-style these expressions to suit our traditions. However, some changes from the Annex were made in the interests of clarity, and because some of the language of the Annex is plainly inappropriate in a local enactment. These changes are explained in the Comments.

Will Registration

A bracketed Section 10 [2-1010] [72-2-909], is included in the International Will proposal to aid survivors in locating international and other wills that have been kept secret by testators during their lives. Differing from the Section 2-901 [72-2-1002] of the Uniform Probate Code and the many existing statutes from which Section 2-901 [72-2-1002] was derived which constitute the probate court as an agency for the safekeeping of wills deposited by living testators, the bracketed proposal is for a system of registering certain minimum information about wills, including where the instrument will be kept pending the death of the testator. It can be separated or omitted from the rest of the Act.

This provision for a state will registration system is derived from recommendations by the Council of Europe for common market countries. These recommendations were urged on the group that assembled in Rome in 1971, and were received with interest by representatives of United Kingdom, Canada and United States, where will-making laws and customs have not included any officially sanctioned system for safekeeping of wills or for locating information about wills, other than occasional statutes providing for ante-mortem deposit of wills with probate courts. Interest was expressed also by the notaries from civil law countries who have traditionally aided will-making both by formalizing execution and by being the source thereafter of official certificates about wills, the originals of which are retained with the official records of the notary and carefully protected and regulated by settled customs of the profession. All recognized that acceptance of the international will would tend to increase the frequency with which owners of property in several different countries relied on a single will to control all of their properties. This prospect, plus increasing mobility of persons between countries, indicates that new methods for safekeeping and locating wills after death should be developed. The Resolution adopted as the final act of the 1973 Conference on Wills shows that the problem also attracted the interest and attention of that assembly.

Apart from problems of wills that may have effect in more than one country, Americans are moving from state to state with increasing frequency. As the international will statute becomes enacted in most if not all states, our laws will tend to induce persons to rely on a single will as sufficient even though they may own land in two or more states, and to refrain from making new wills when they change domicile from one state to another. The spread of the Uniform Probate Code, tending as it does to give wills the same meaning and procedural status in all states, will have a similar effect.

General enactment of the will registration section should lead to development of new state and interstate systems to meet the predictable needs of testators and survivors that will follow as the law of wills is detached from provincial restraints. It is offered with the international will provisions because both meet obvious needs of the times.

Documents from 1973 Convention

Three documents representing the work of the 1973 Convention are reproduced here for the convenience of members of the Conference.

CONVENTION PROVIDING A UNIFORM LAW ON THE FORM OF AN INTERNATIONAL WILL

The States signatory to the present Convention,

DESIRING to provide to a greater extent for the respecting of last wills by establishing an additional form of will hereinafter to be called an "international will" which, if employed, would dispense to some extent with the search for the applicable law;

HAVE RESOLVED to conclude a Convention for this purpose and have agreed upon the following provisions:

Article I 1. Each Contracting Party undertakes that not later than six months after the date of entry into force of this Convention in respect of that Party it shall introduce into its law the rules regarding an international will set out in the Annex to this Convention.

2. Each Contracting Party may introduce the provisions of the Annex into its law either by reproducing the actual text, or by translating it into its official language or languages.

3. Each Contracting Party may introduce into its law such further provisions as are necessary to give the provisions of the Annex full effect in its territory.

4. Each Contracting Party shall submit to the Depositary Government the text of the rules introduced into its national law in order to implement the provisions of this Convention.

Article II 1. Each Contracting Party shall implement the provisions of the Annex in its law, within the period provided for in the preceding article, by designating the persons who, in its territory, shall be authorized to act in connection with international wills. It may also designate as a person authorized to act with regard to its nationals its diplomatic or consular agents abroad insofar as the local law does not prohibit it.

2. The Party shall notify such designation, as well as any modifications thereof, to the Depositary Government.

Article III The capacity of the authorized person to act in connection with an international will, if conferred in accordance with the law of a Contracting Party, shall be recognized in the territory of the other Contracting Parties.

Article IV The effectiveness of the certificate provided for in Article 10 of the Annex shall be recognized in the territories of all Contracting Parties.

Article V 1. The conditions requisite to acting as a witness of an international will shall be governed by the law under which the authorized person was designated. The same rule shall apply as regards an interpreter who is called upon to act.

2. Nonetheless no one shall be disqualified to act as a witness of an international will solely because he is an alien.

Article VI 1. The signature of the testator, of the authorized person, and of the witnesses to an international will, whether on the will or on the certificate, shall be exempt from any legalization or like formality.

2. Nonetheless, the competent authorities of any Contracting Party may, if necessary, satisfy themselves as to the authenticity of the signature of the authorized person.

Article VII The safekeeping of an international will shall be governed by the law under which the authorized person was designated.

Article VIII No reservation shall be admitted to this Convention or to its Annex.

Article IX 1. The present Convention shall be open for signature at Washington from October 26, 1973, until December 31, 1974.

2. The Convention shall be subject to ratification.

3. Instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall be the Depositary Government.

Article X 1. The Convention shall be open indefinitely for accession.

2. Instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Depositary Government.

Article XI 1. The present Convention shall enter into force six months after the date of deposit of the fifth instrument of ratification or accession with the Depositary Government.

2. In the case of each State which ratifies this Convention or accedes to it after the fifth instrument of ratification or accession has been deposited, this Convention shall enter into force six months after the deposit of its own instrument of ratification or accession.

Article XII 1. Any Contracting Party may denounce this Convention by written notification to the Depositary Government.

2. Such denunciation shall take effect twelve months from the date on which the Depositary Government has received the notification, but such denunciation shall not affect the validity of any will made during the period that the Convention was in effect for the denouncing State.

Article XIII 1. Any State may, when it deposits its instrument of ratification or accession or at any time thereafter, declare, by a notice addressed to the Depositary Government, that this Convention shall apply to all or part of the territories for the international relations of which it is responsible.

2. Such declaration shall have effect six months after the date on which the Depositary Government shall have received notice thereof or, if at the end of such period the Convention has not yet come into force, from the date of its entry into force.

3. Each Contracting Party which has made a declaration in accordance with paragraph 1 of this Article may, in accordance with Article XII, denounce this Convention in relation to all or part of the territories concerned.

Article XIV 1. If a State has two or more territorial units in which different systems of law apply in relation to matters respecting the form of wills, it may at the time of signature, ratification, or accession, declare that this Convention shall extend to all its territorial units or only to one or more of them, and may modify its declaration by submitting another declaration at any time.

2. These declarations shall be notified to the Depositary Government and shall state expressly the territorial units to which the Convention applies.

Article XV If a Contracting Party has two or more territorial units in which different systems of law apply in relation to matters respecting the form of wills, any reference to the internal law of the place where the will is made or to the law under which the authorized person has been appointed to act in connection with international wills shall be construed in accordance with the constitutional system of the Party concerned.

Article XVI 1. The original of the present Convention, in the English, French, Russian and Spanish languages, each version being equally authentic, shall be deposited with the Government of the United States of America, which shall transmit certified copies thereof to each of the signatory and acceding States and to the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law.

2. The Depositary Government shall give notice to the signatory and acceding States, and to the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law, of:

(a) any signature;

(b) the deposit of any instrument of ratification or accession;

(c) any date on which this Convention enters into force in accordance with Article XI;

(d) any communication received in accordance with Article I, paragraph 4;

(e) any notice received in accordance with Article II, paragraph 2;

(f) any declaration received in accordance with Article XIII, paragraph 2, and the date on which such declaration takes effect;

(g) any denunciation received in accordance with Article XII, paragraph 1, or Article XIII, paragraph 3, and the date on which the denunciation takes effect;

(h) any declaration received in accordance with Article XIV, paragraph 2, and the date on which the declaration takes effect.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries, being duly authorized to that effect, have signed the present Convention.

RESOLUTION

The Conference

Considering the importance of measures to permit the safeguarding of wills and to find them after the death of the testator;

Emphasizing the special interest in such measures with respect to the international will, which is often made by the testator far from his home;

RECOMMENDS to the States that participated in the present Conference

-that they establish an internal system, centralized or not, to facilitate the safekeeping, search and discovery of an international will as well as the accompanying certificate, for example, along the lines of the Convention on the Establishment of a Scheme of Registration of Wills, concluded at Basel on May 16, 1972;

-that they facilitate the international exchange of information in these matters and, to this effect, that they designate in each state an authority or a service to handle such exchanges.

NUMBERING SECTIONS OF ACT

The Uniform International Wills Act may be adopted as a separate Act or as part of the Uniform Probate Code. If adopted as a separate Act, the unbracketed section numbers would govern. If adopted as part of the Probate Code, i.e., as Part 10 of Article 2, the section numbers in brackets would govern. [Montana adopted the Uniform International Wills Act in 1991 and codified the Act as Title 72, chapter 2, part 9. The 1991 codification has been retained.]

72-2-901. Definitions.

Official Comments

The term "international will" connotes only that a will has been executed in conformity with this Act [Title 72, chapter 2, part 9]. It does not indicate that the will was planned for implementation in more than one country, or that it relates to an estate that has or may have international implications. Thus, it will be entirely appropriate to use an "international will" whenever a will is desired.

The reference in subsection (2) [72-2-901(2)] to persons who derive their authority to act from federal law, including Foreign Service Regulations, anticipates that the United States will become a party to the 1973 Convention, and that Congress, pursuant to the obligation of the Convention, will enact the annexed uniform law and include therein some designation, possibly of a cadre only, of authorized persons. See the discussion under "Roles for Federal and State Law in Relation to International Will", in the Prefatory Note, supra. If all states enact similar laws and designate all attorneys as authorized persons, the need for testators to resort to those designated by federal law may be minimal. It seems desirable, nonetheless, to associate whoever may be designated by federal law as suitable authorized persons for purposes of implementing state enactments of the Uniform Act. The resulting "borrowing" of those designated federally should minimize any difficulties that might arise from variances in the details of execution of international wills that may develop in the state and federal enactment process.

In the Explanatory Report of the 1973 Convention prepared by Mr. Jean-Pierre Plantard, Deputy Secretary-General of the International Institute for the Unification of Private Law (UNIDROIT) as published by the Institute in 1974, the following paragraphs that are relevant to this section appear:

"The Uniform Law gives no definition of the term will. The preamble of the Convention also uses the expression 'last wills'. The material contents of the document are of little importance as the Uniform Law governs only its form. There is, therefore, nothing to prevent this form being used to register last wishes that do not involve the naming of an heir and which in some legal systems are called by a special name, such as 'Kodizill' in Austrian Law (ABGB §553).

"Although it is given the qualification 'international', the will dealt with by the Uniform Law can easily be used for a situation without any international element, for example, by a testator disposing in his own country of his assets, all of which are situated in that same country. The adjective 'international', therefore, only indicates what was had in mind at the time when this new will was conceived. Moreover, it would have been practically impossible to define a satisfactory sphere of application, had one intended to restrict its use to certain situations with an international element. Such an element could only be assessed by reference to several factors (nationality, residence, domicile of the testator, place where the will was drawn up, place where the assets are situated) and, moreover, these might vary considerably between when the will was drawn up and the beginning of the inheritance proceedings.

"Use of the international will should, therefore, be open to all testators who decide they want to use it. Nothing should prevent it from competing with the traditional forms if it offers advantages of convenience and simplicity over the other forms and guarantees the necessary certainty."

72-2-902. Validity.

Official Comments

This section combines what appears in Articles 1 and 2 of the Annex [see part official comment] into a single section. Except for the reference to later sections, the first sentence is identical to Article 1, Section 1 of the Annex, the second sentence is identical to Article 1, Section 2, and the third is identical to Article 2.

Mr. Plantard's commentary that is pertinent to this section is as follows:

"The Uniform Law is intended to be introduced into the legal system of each Contracting State. Article 1, therefore, introduces into the internal law of each Contracting State the new, basic principle according to which the international will is valid irrespective of the country in which it was made, the nationality, domicile or residence of the testator and the place where the assets forming the estate are located.

"The scope of the Uniform Law is thus defined in the first sentence. As was mentioned above, the idea behind it was to establish a new type of will, the form of which would be the same in all countries. The Law obviously does not affect the subsistence of all the other forms of will known under each national law . . .

"Some of the provisions relating to form laid down by the Uniform Law are considered essential. Violation of these provisions is sanctioned by the invalidity of the will as an international will. These are: that the will must be made in writing, the presence of two witnesses and of the authorized person, signature by the testator and by the persons involved (witnesses and authorized person) and the prohibition of joint wills. The other formalities, such as the position of the signature and date, the delivery and form of the certificate, are laid down for reasons of convenience and uniformity but do not affect the validity of the international will.

"Lastly, even when the international will is declared invalid because one of the essential provisions contained in Articles 2 to 5 has not been observed, it is not necessarily deprived of all effect. Paragraph 2 of Article 1 specifies that it may still be valid as a will of another kind, if it conforms with the requirements of the applicable national law. Thus, for example, a will written, dated and signed by the testator but handed over to an authorized person in the absence of witnesses or without the signature of the witnesses and the authorized person could quite easily be considered a valid holograph will. Similarly, an international will produced in the presence of a person who is not duly authorized might be valid as a will witnessed in accordance with Common law rules.

"However, in these circumstances, one could no longer speak of an international will and the validity of the document would have to be assessed on the basis of the rules of internal law or of private international law.

"A joint will cannot be drawn up in the form of an international will. This is the meaning of Article 2 of the Uniform Law which does not give an opinion as to whether this prohibition on joint wills, which exists in many legal systems, is connected with its form or its substance.

"A will made in this international form by several people together in the same document would, therefore, be invalid as an international will but could possibly be valid as another kind of will, in accordance with Article 1, paragraph 2 of the Uniform Law.

"The terminology used in Article 2 is in harmony with that used in Article 4 of The Hague Convention on the Conflicts of Laws Relating to the Form of Testamentary Dispositions."

72-2-903. Requirements.

Official Comments

The five subsections of this section correspond in content to Articles 3 through 5 of the Annex to the 1973 Convention [see part official comment]. Article 1, Section 1 makes it clear that compliance with all requirements listed in Articles 3 through 5 is necessary in order to achieve an international will. As re-organized for enactment in the United States, all mandatory requirements have been grouped in this section. Except for subsection (d) [72-2-903(4)], each of the sentences in the subsections corresponds exactly with a sentence in the Annex. Subsection (d) [72-2-903(4)], derived from Article 5, Section 2 of the Annex, was re-worded for the sake of clarity.

Mr. Plantard's comments on the requirements are as follows:

"Paragraph 1 of Article 3 lays down an essential condition for a will's validity as an international will: it must be made in writing.

"The Uniform Law does not explain what is meant by 'writing'. This is a word of everyday language which, in the opinion of the Law's authors, does not call for any definition but which covers any form of expression made by signs on a durable substance.

"Paragraphs 2 and 3 show the very liberal approach of the draft.

"Under paragraph 2, the will does not necessarily have to be written by the testator himself. This provision marks a moving away from the holograph will toward the other types of will: the public will or the mystic will and especially the Common law will. The latter, which is often very long, is only in exceptional cases written in the hand of the testator, who is virtually obliged to use a lawyer, in order to use the technical formulae necessary to give effect to his wishes. This is all the more so as wills frequently involve inter vivos family arrangements, and fiscal considerations play a very important part in this matter.

"This provision also allows for the will of illiterate persons, or persons who, for some other reason, cannot write themselves, for example paralysed or blind persons.

"According to paragraph 3 a will may be written in any language. This provision is in contrast with the rules accepted in various countries as regards public wills. It will be noted that the Uniform Law does not even require the will to be written in a language known by the testator. The latter is, therefore, quite free to choose according to whichever suits him best: it is to be expected that he will usually choose his own language but, if he thinks it is better, he will sometimes also choose the language of the place where the will is drawn up or that of the place where the will is mainly to be carried out. The important point is that he have full knowledge of the contents of his will, as is guaranteed by Articles 4 and 10.

"Lastly, a will may be written by hand or by any other method. This provision is the corollary of paragraph 2. What is mainly had in mind is a typewriter, especially in the case of a will drawn up by a lawyer advising the testator.

"The liberal nature of the principles set out in Article 3 calls for certain guarantees on the other hand. These are provided by the presence of three persons, already referred to in the context of Articles III and V of the Convention, that is to say, the authorized person and the two witnesses. It is evident that these three persons must all be simultaneously present with the testator during the carrying out of the formalities laid down in Articles 4 and 5.

"Paragraph 1 of Article 4 requires, first of all, that the testator declare, in the presence of these persons, that the document produced by him is his will and that he knows the contents thereof. The word 'declares' covers any unequivocal expression of intention, by way of words as well as by gestures or signs, as, for example, in the case of a testator who is dumb. This declaration must be made on pain of the international will being invalid. This is justified by the fact that the will produced by the testator might have been materially drawn up by a person other than the testator and even, in theory, in a language which is not his own.

"Paragraph 2 of the article specifies that this declaration is sufficient: the testator does not need to 'inform' the witnesses or the authorized person 'of the contents of the will'. This rule makes the international will differ from the public will and brings it closer to the other types of will: the holograph will and especially the mystic will and the Common law will.

"The testator can, of course, always ask for the will to be read, a precaution which can be particularly useful if the testator is unable to read himself. The paragraph under consideration does not in any way prohibit this; it only aims at ensuring respect for secrecy, if the testator should so wish. The international will can therefore be a secret will without being a closed will.

"The declaration made by the testator under Article 4 is not sufficient: under Article 5, paragraph 1, he must also sign his will. However, the authors of the Uniform Law presumed that, in certain cases, the testator might already have signed the document forming his will before producing it. To require a second signature would be evidence of an exaggerated formalism and a will containing two signatures by the testator would be rather strange. That is why the same paragraph provides that, when he has already signed the will, the testator can merely acknowledge it. This acknowledgement is completely informal and is normally done by a simple declaration in the presence of the authorized person and witnesses.

"The Uniform Law does not explain what is meant by 'signature'. This is once more a word drawn from everyday language, the meaning of which is usually the same in the various legal systems. The presence of the authorized person, who will necessarily be a practicing lawyer will certainly guarantee that there is a genuine signature correctly affixed.

"Paragraph 2 was designed to give persons incapable of signing the possibility of making an international will. All they have to do is indicate their incapacity and the reason therefore to the authorized person. The authorized person must then note this declaration on the will which will then be valid, even though it has not been signed by the testator. Indication of the reason for incapacity is an additional guarantee as it can be checked. The certificate drawn up by the authorized person in the form prescribed in Article 10 again reproduces this declaration.

"The authors of the Uniform Law were also conscious of the fact that in some legal systems-for example, English law-persons who are incapable of signing can name someone to sign in their place. Although this procedure is completely unknown to other systems in which a signature is exclusively personal, it was accepted that the testator can ask another person to sign in his name, if this is permitted under the law from which the authorized person derives his authority. This amounts to nothing more than giving satisfaction to the practice of certain legal systems, as the authorized person must, in any case, indicate on the will that the testator declared that he could not sign, and give the reason therefor. This indication is sufficient to make the will valid. There will, therefore simply be a signature affixed by a third person instead of that of the testator. Although there is nothing stipulating this in the Uniform Law, one can expect the authorized person to explain the source of this signature on the document, all the more so as the signature of this substitute for the testator must also appear on the other pages of the will, by virtue of Article 6.

"This method over which there were some differences of opinion at the Diplomatic Conference, should not however interfere in any way with the legal systems which do not admit a signature in the name of someone else. Besides, its use is limited to the legal systems which admit it already and it is now implicitly accepted by the others when they recognize the validity of a foreign document drawn up according to this method. However, this situation can be expected to arise but rarely, as an international will made by a person who is incapable of signing it will certainly be a rare event.

"Lastly, Article 5 requires that the witnesses and authorized person also sign the will there and then in the presence of the testator. By using the words 'attest the will by signing', when only the word 'sign' had been used when referring to the testator, the authors of the Uniform Law intended to make a distinction between the person acknowledging the contents of a document and those who have only to affix their signature in order to certify their participation and presence.

"In conclusion, the international will will normally contain four signatures: that of the testator, that of the authorized person and those of the two witnesses. The signature of the testator might be missing: in this case, the will must contain a note made by the authorized person indicating that the testator was incapable of signing, adding his reason. All these signatures and notes must be made on pain of invalidity. Finally, if the signature of the testator is missing, the will could contain the signature of a person designated by the testator to sign in his name, in addition to the above-mentioned note made by the authorized person."

Official Comments

Mr. Plantard's commentary about Articles 6, 7 and 8 of the Annex [supra] [see part official comment] relate to subsections (a) [72-2-904(1)], (b) [72-2-904(2)] and (c) [72-2-904(3)] respectively of this section. Subsections (a) [72-2-904(1)] and (b) [72-2-904(2)] are identical to Articles 6 and 7; subsection (c) [72-2-904(3)] is the same as Article 8 of the Annex except that the prefatory language "In the absence of any mandatory rule pertaining to the safekeeping of the will . . . " has been deleted because it is inappropriate for inclusion in a local statute designed for enactment by a state that has had no tradition or familiarity with mandatory rules regarding the safekeeping of the wills. Subsection (d) [72-2-904(4)] embodies the sense of Article 1, Section 1 of the Annex which states that compliance with Articles 2 to 5 is necessary and so indicates that compliance with the remaining articles prescribing formal steps is not necessary.

Mr. Plantard's commentary is as follows:

"The provisions of Article 6 and those of the following articles are not imposed on pain of invalidity. They are nevertheless compulsory legal provisions which can involve sanctions, for example, the professional, civil and even criminal liability of the authorized person, according to the provisions of the law from which he derives his authority.

"The first paragraph, to guarantee a uniform presentation for international wills, simply indicates that signatures shall be placed at the end of international wills, that is, at the end of the text.

"Paragraph 2 provides for the frequent case in which the will consists of several sheets. Each sheet has to be signed by the testator, to guarantee its authenticity and to avoid substitutions. The use of the word 'signed' seems to imply that the signature must be in the same form as that at the end of the will. However, in the legal systems which merely require that the individual sheets be paraphed, usually by means of initials, this would certainly have the same value as signature, as a signature itself could simply consist of initials.

"The need for a signature on each sheet, for the purpose of authentifying each such sheet, led to the introduction of a special system for the case when the testator is incapable of signing. In this case it will generally be the authorized person who will sign each sheet in his place, unless, in accordance with Article 5, paragraph 2, the testator has designated another person to sign in his name. In this case, it will of course be this person who will sign each sheet.

"Lastly, it is prescribed that the sheets shall be numbered. Although no further details are given on this subject, it will in practice be up to the authorized person to check if they have already been numbered and, if not, to number them or ask the testator to do so.

"The aim of this provision is obviously to guarantee the orderliness of the document and to avoid losses, subtractions or substitutions.

"The date is an essential element of the will and its importance is quite clear in the case of successive wills. Paragraph 1 of Article 7 indicates that the date of the will in the case of an international will is the date on which it was signed by the authorized person, this being the last of the formalities prescribed by the Uniform Law on pain of invalidity (Article 5, paragraph 3). It is therefore, from the moment of this signature that the international will is valid.

"Paragraph 2 stipulates that the date shall be noted at the end of the will by the authorized person. Although this is compulsory for the authorized person, this formality is not sanctioned by the invalidity of the will which, as is the case in many legal systems such as English, German and Austrian law, remains fully valid even if it is not dated or is wrongly dated. The date will then have to be proved by some other means. It can happen that the will has two dates, that of its drawing up and the date on which it was signed by the authorized person as a result of which it became an international will. Evidently only this last date is to be taken into consideration.

"During the preparatory work it had been intended to organize the safekeeping of the international will and to entrust its care to the authorized person. This plan caused serious difficulties both for the countries which do not have the notary as he is known in Civil law systems and for the countries in which wills must be deposited with a public authority, as is the case, for example, in the Federal Republic of Germany, where wills must be deposited with a court.

"The authors of the Uniform Law therefore abandoned the idea of introducing a unified system for the safekeeping of international wills. However, where a legal system already has rules on this subject, these rules of course also apply to the international will as well as to other types of will. Finally, the Washington Conference adopted, at the same time as the Convention, a resolution recommending States, in particular, to organize a system facilitating the safekeeping of international wills (see the commentary on this resolution, at the end of this Report). It should lastly be underlined that States desiring to give testators an additional guarantee as regards the international will will organize its safekeeping by providing, for example, that it shall be deposited with the authorized person or with a public officer. Complementary legislation of this kind could be admitted within the framework of paragraph 3 of Article 1 of the Convention, as was mentioned in our commentary on that article.

"These considerations explain why Article 8 starts by stipulating that it only applies 'in the absence of any mandatory rule pertaining to the safekeeping of the will'. If there happens to be such a rule in the national law from which the authorized person derives his authority this rule shall govern the safekeeping of the will. If there is no such rule, Article 8 requires the authorized person to ask the testator whether he wishes to make a declaration in this regard. In this way, the authors of the Uniform Law sought to reconcile the advantage of exact information so as to facilitate the discovery of the will after the death of the testator, on the one hand, and respect for the secrecy which the testator may want as regards the place where his will is kept, on the other hand. The testator is therefore quite free to make or not to make a declaration in this regard, but his attention is nevertheless drawn to the possibility left open to him, and particular to the opportunity he has, if he expressly asks for it, to have the details he thinks appropriate in this regard mentioned on the certificate provided for in Article 9. It will thus be easier to find the will again at the proper time, by means of the certificate made out in three copies, one of which remains in the hands of the authorized person."

72-2-905. Certificate.

Official Comments

This section embodies the content of Articles 9, 10 and 11 of the Annex [see part official comment] with only minor, clarifying changes. Those familiar with the pre-proved will authorized by Uniform Probate Code §2-504 [72-2-524] should be comfortable with Sections 5 [72-2-905] and 6 [72-2-906] of this Act. Indeed, inclusion of these provisions in the Annex was the result of a concession by those familiar with civil law approaches to problems of execution and proof of wills, to the English speaking countries where will ceremonies are divided between those occurring as testator acts, and those occurring later when the will is probated. Further, since English and Canadian practices reduce post-mortem probate procedures down to little more than the presentation of the will to an appropriate registry and so, approach civil law customs, the concession was largely to accommodate American states where post-mortem probate procedures are very involved. Thus, the primary purpose of the certificate, which provides conclusive proof of the formal validity of the will, is to put wills executed before a civil law notary and wills executed in the American tradition on a par; with the certificate, both are good without question insofar as formal requirements are concerned.

It should be noted that Article III of the Convention binds countries becoming parties to recognize the capacity of an authorized person to act in relation to an international will, as conferred by the law of another country that is a party. This means that an international will coming into one of our states that has enacted the uniform law will be entirely good under local law, and that the certificate from abroad will provide conclusive proof of its validity.

May an international will be contested? The answer is clearly affirmative as to contests based on lack of capacity, fraud, undue influence, revocation or ineffectiveness based on the contents of the will or substantive restraints on testamentary power. Contests based on failure to follow mandatory requirements of execution are not precluded because the next section provides that the certificate is conclusive only "in the absence of evidence to the contrary". However, the Convention becomes relevant when one asks whether a probate court may require additional proof of the genuineness of signatures by testators and witnesses. It provides:

Article VI 1. The signature of the testator, of the authorized person, and of the witnesses to an international will, whether on the will or on the certificate, shall be exempt from any legalization or like formality.

2. Nonetheless, the competent authorities of any Contracting Party may, if necessary, satisfy themselves as to the authenticity of the signature of the authorized person.

Presumably, the prohibition against legalization would not preclude additional proof of genuineness if evidence tending to show forgery is introduced, but without contrary proof, the certificate proves the will.

The authorized person is directed to attach the certificate to the will, and to keep a copy. The sense of "keep" intended by the draftsman is "continuously keep," or "preserve."

If the will with attached certificate is to be retained by the authorized person or otherwise placed for safekeeping out of the possession of the testator, good practice would involve an unexecuted copy of the will that could be given to the testator for disposition or retention as he saw fit. It would seem that good practice in these cases also would involve attachment of the testator's copy of the certificate to testator's copy of the will. The statute is silent on this point, however.

Mr. Plantard's commentary on the articles of the Annex that are pertinent to Section 5 [72-2-905], are as follows:

"This provision specifies that the authorized person must attach to the international will a certificate drawn up in accordance with the form set out in Article 10, establishing that the Uniform Law's provisions have been complied with. The term 'joint au testament' means that the certificate must be added to the will, that is, fixed thereto. The English text which uses the work 'attach' is perfectly clear on this point. Furthermore, it results from Article 11 that the certificate must be made out in three copies. This document, the contents of which are detailed in Article 10, is proof that the formalities required for the validity of the international will have been complied with. It also reveals the identity of the persons who participated in drawing up the document and may, in addition, contain a declaration by the testator as to the place where he intends his will to be kept. It should be stressed that the certificate is drawn up under the entire responsibility of the authorized person who is the only person to sign it.

"Article 10 sets out the form for the certificate. The authorized person must abide by it, in accordance with the provisions of Article 10 itself, laying down this or a substantially similar form. This last phrase could not be taken as authorizing him to depart from this form: it only serves to allow for small changes of detail which might be useful in the interests of improving its comprehensibility or presentation, for example, the omission of the particulars marked with an asterisk indicating that they are to be completed where appropriate when in fact they do not need to be completed and thus become useless.

"Including the form of a certificate in one of the articles of a Uniform Law is unusual. Normally these appear in the annexes to Conventions. However, in this way, the authors of the Uniform Law underlined the importance of the certificate and its contents. Moreover, the Uniform Law already forms the Annex to the Convention itself.

"The 14 particulars indicated on the certificate are numbered. These numbers must be reproduced on each certificate, so as to facilitate its reading, especially when the reader speaks a foreign language, as they will help him to find the relevant details more easily: the name of the authorized person and the testator, addresses, etc.

"The certificate contains all the elements necessary for the identification of the authorized person, testator and witnesses. It expressly mentions all the formalities which have to be carried out in accordance with the provisions of the Uniform Law. Furthermore, the certificate contains all the information required for the will's registration according to the system introduced by the Council of Europe Convention on the Establishment of a Scheme of Registration of Wills, signed at Basle on 16 May 1972.

"The authorized person must keep a copy of the certificate and deliver one to the testator. Seeing that another copy has to be attached to the will in accordance with Article 9, it may be deduced that the authorized person must make out altogether three copies of the certificate. These cannot be simple copies but have to be three signed originals. This provision is useful for a number of reasons. The fact that the testator keeps a copy of the certificate is a useful reminder for him, especially when his will is being kept by the authorized person or deposited with someone designated by national law. Moreover, discovery of the certificate among the testators' papers will inform his heirs of the existence of a will and will enable them to find it more easily. The fact that the authorized person keeps a copy of the certificate enables him to inform the heirs as well, if necessary. Lastly, the fact that there are several copies of the certificate is a guarantee against changes being made to one of them and even, to a certain extent, against certain changes to the will itself, for example as regards its date."

72-2-906. Effect of certificate.

Official Comments

This section, which corresponds to Articles 11 and 12 of the Annex [see part official comment], must be read with the definition of "authorized person" in Section 1 [72-2-901], and Articles III and IV of the 1973 Convention which will become binding on all states if and when the United States joins that treaty. Articles III and IV of the Convention provide:

Article III The capacity of the authorized person to act in connection with an international will, if conferred in accordance with the law of a Contracting Party, shall be recognized in the territory of the other Contracting Parties.

Article IV The effectiveness of the certificate provided for in Article 10 of the Annex shall be recognized in the territories of all Contracting Parties.

In effect, the state enacting this law will be recognizing certificates by authorized persons designated, not only by this State, but by the United States and other parties to the 1973 Convention. Once the identity of one making a certificate on an international will is established, the will may be proved without more, assuming the presence of the recommended form of certificate. Article IX (3) of the 1973 Convention constitutes the United States as the Depositary under the Convention, and Article II obligates each country joining the Convention to notify the Depositary Government of the persons designated by its law as authorized to act in connection with international wills. Hence, persons interested in local probate of an international will from another country will be enabled to determine from the Department of State whether the official making the certificate in which they are interested had the requisite authority.

In this connection, it should be noted that under Article II of the Convention, each contracting country may designate its diplomatic or consular representatives abroad as authorized persons insofar as the local law does not prohibit it. Since the Uniform Act will be the law locally, and since it does not prohibit persons designated by foreign states that are parties to the Convention from acting locally in respect to international wills, there should be a considerable amount of latitude in selecting authorized persons to assist with wills and a correlative reduction in the chances of local non-recognition of an authorized person from abroad. Also, it should be noted that the Uniform Act does not restrict the persons which it constitutes as authorized persons in relation to the places where they can so function. This supports the view that local law as embodied in this statute should not be construed as restrictive in relation to local activities concerning international wills of foreign diplomatic and consular representatives who are resident here.

The certificate requires the authorized person to state that the witnesses had the requisite capacity. If the authorized person derives his authority from the law of a state other than that where he is acting, it would be advisable to have the certificate identify the applicable law.

The Uniform Act is silent in regard to methods of meeting local probate requirements contemplating deposit of the original will with the court. Section 3-409 [72-3-313, 72-3-316] of the Uniform Probate Code, or its counterpart in a state that has not adopted the uniform law on the point, becomes pertinent. The last sentence of UPC 3-409 [72-2-316] provides:

A will from a place which does not provide for probate of a will after death, may be proved for probate in this State by a duly authenticated certificate of its legal custodian that the copy introduced is a true copy and that the will has become effective under the law of the other place.

One final matter warrants mention. Implicit in local proof of an instrument by means of authentication provided by a foreign official, is the problem of proving the authority of the official. The traditional, exceedingly formalistic, method of accomplishing this has been through what has been known as "legalization", a process that involves a number of certificates. The capacity of the official who authenticates the signature of the party to the document, if derived from his status as a county official, is proved by the certificate of a high county official. In turn, the county official's status is proved by the certificate of the area's secretary of state, whose status is established by another and so on until, ultimately, the Department of State certifies to the identity of the highest state official in a format that will be persuasive to the receiving country's foreign relations representative.

Article VI of the 1973 Convention forbids legalization of the signature of testators and witnesses. It provides:

1. The signature of the testator, of the authorized person, and of the witnesses to an international will, whether on the will or on the certificate, shall be exempt from any legalization or like formality.

2. Nonetheless, the competent authorities of any Contracting Party may, if necessary, satisfy themselves as to the authenticity of the signature of the authorized person.

Thus, it would appear that if the United States, as contracting party, satisfies itself that the signature of a foreign authorized person is authentic, and so indicates to those interested in local probate of the document, the local court, though presumably able to receive and to act upon evidence to the contrary, cannot reject an international will for lack of proof. This is not to say, of course, that the authenticity of the signature of the foreign authorized person must be shown through the aid of the State Department; plainly, the point may be implied from the face of the document unless and until challenged.

Mr. Plantard's commentary on this portion of the uniform law is as follows:

"Article 12 states that the certificate is conclusive of the formal validity of the international will. It is therefore a kind of proof supplied in advance.

"This provision is only really understandable in those legal systems, like the United States, where a will can only take effect after it has been subjected to a preliminary procedure of verification ('Probate') designed to check on its validity. The mere presentation of the certificate should suffice to satisfy the requirements of this procedure.

"However, the certificate is not always irrefutable as proof, as is indicated by the words 'in the absence of evidence to the contrary'. If it is challenged, then the ensuing litigation will be solved in accordance with the legal procedure applicable in the Contracting State where the will and certificate are presented.

"The principle set out in Article 13 is already implied by Article 1, as only the provisions of Articles 2 to 5 are prescribed on pain of invalidity. Besides, it is perfectly logical that the absence of or irregularities in a certificate should not affect the formal validity of the will, as the certificate is a document serving essentially for purposes of proof drawn up by the authorized person, without the testator taking any part either in drawing it up or in checking it. This provision is in perfect harmony with Article 12 which by the terms 'in the absence of evidence to the contrary' means that one can challenge what is stated in the certificate.

"In consideration of the fact that the authorized person will be a practicing lawyer officially designated by each Contracting State, it is difficult to imagine him omitting or neglecting to draw up the certificate provided for by the national law to which he is subject. Besides, he would lay himself open to an action based on his professional and civil liability. He could even expose himself to sanctions laid down by his national law.

"However, the international will subsists, even if, by some quirk, the certificate which is a means of proof but not necessarily the only one, should be missing, be incomplete or contain particulars which are manifestly erroneous. In these undoubtedly very rare circumstances, proof that the formalities prescribed on pain of invalidity have been carried out will have to be produced in accordance with the legal procedures applicable in each State which has adopted the Uniform Law."

Official Comments

Mr. Plantard's commentary on this portion of the uniform law is as follows:

"The authors of the Uniform Law did not intend to deal with the subject of the revocation of wills. There is indeed no reason why the international will should be submitted to a regime different from that of other kinds of wills. Article 14 [see part official comment] therefore merely gives expression to this idea. Whether or not there has been revocation-for example, by a subsequent will-is to be assessed in accordance with the law of each State which has adopted the Uniform Law, by virtue of Article 14. Besides, this is a question mainly concerning rules of substance which would thus overstep the scope of the Uniform Law."

Official Comments

The subject of who should be designated to be authorized persons under the Uniform Law is discussed under the heading "Description of the Proposal" in the Prefatory Note [see part official comment].

The first draft of the Uniform Law presented to the National Conference at its 1975 meeting in Quebec City included provision for a special new licensing procedure through which others than attorneys might become qualified. The ensuing discussion resulted in rejection of this approach in favor of the simpler approach of Section 9 [72-2-908]. Among other difficulties with the special licensee approach, representatives of the State Department expressed concern about the attendant burden on the U.S. as Depositary Government, of receiving, keeping up to date, and interpreting to foreign governments the results of fifty different state licensing systems.

Official Comments

The relevance of this optional, bracketed section to the other sections constituting the uniform law concerning international wills is explained in the Prefatory Note [see part official comment]. Also, Mr. Plantard's observations regarding the Resolution attached to the 1973 Convention are pertinent. He writes:

"The Resolution adopted by the Washington Conference and annexed to its Final Act encourages States which adopt the Uniform Law to make additional provisions for the registering and safekeeping of the international will. The authors of the Uniform Law considered that it was not possible to lay down uniform rules on this subject on account of the differences in tradition and outlook, but several times, both during the preparatory work and during the final diplomatic phase, they underlined the importance of States making such provisions.

"The Resolution recommends organizing a system enabling . . . 'the safekeeping, search and discovery of an international will as well as the accompanying certificate' . . .

"Indeed lawyers know that many wills are never carried out because the very existence of the will itself remains unknown or because the will is never found or is never produced. It would be quite possible to organize a register or index which would enable one to know after the death of a person whether he had drawn up a will. Some countries have already done something in this field, for example, Quebec, Spain, the Federal Republic of Germany, where this service is connected with the Registry of Births, Marriages and Deaths. Such a system could perfectly well be fashioned so as to ensure respect for the legitimate wish of testators to keep the very existence of their will secret.

"The Washington Conference also underlined that there is already an International Convention on this subject, namely the Council of Europe Convention on the Establishment of a Scheme of Registration of Wills, concluded at Basle on 16 May 1972, to which States which are not members of the Council of Europe may accede.

"In this Convention the Contracting States simply undertake to create an internal system for registering wills. The Convention stipulates the categories of will which should be registered, in terms which include the international will. Apart from national bodies in charge of registration, the Convention also provides for the designation by each Contracting State of a national body which must remain in contact with the national bodies of other States and communicate registrations and any information asked for. The Convention specifies that registration must remain secret during the life of the testator. This system, which will come into force between a number of European States in the near future, interested the authors of the Convention, even if they do not accede to it. The last paragraph of the Resolution follows the pattern of the Basle Convention by recommending, in the interests of facilitating an international exchange of information on this matter, the designation in each State of authorities or services to handle such exchanges.

"As for the organization of the safekeeping of international wills, the resolution merely underlies the importance of this, without making any specific suggestions in this regard. This problem has already been discussed in connection with Article 8 of the Uniform Law.

"The Council of Europe Convention on the Establishment of a Scheme of Registration of Wills of May 16, 1972 and related documents were available to the reporter and provided the guidelines for Section 10 [72-2-909] of this Act."

Mr. Plantard's commentary on this portion of the uniform law is as follows:

"This Article [see part official comment] contains a provision which is to be found in a similar form in several conventions or draft Uniform Laws. It seeks to avoid practicing lawyers interpreting the Uniform Law solely in terms of the principles of their respective internal law, as this would prejudice the international unification being sought after. It requests judges to take the international character of the Uniform Law into consideration and to work towards elaborating a sort of common caselaw, taking account of the foreign legal systems which provided the foundation for the Uniform Law and the decisions handed down on the same text by the courts of other countries. The effort toward unification must not be limited to just bringing about the Law's adoption, but should be carried on into the process of putting it into operation."

Part 10
Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities — Honorary Trusts

Part Official Comments

GENERAL COMMENT

Simplified Wait-and-See/Deferred-Reformation Approach Adopted. The Uniform Statutory Rule reforms the common-law Rule Against Perpetuities (common-law Rule) by adding a simplified wait-and-see element and a deferred-reformation element.

Wait-and-see is a two-step strategy. Step One (Section 2-901(a)(1)) [72-2-1002(1)(a)] preserves the validating side of the common-law Rule. By satisfying the common-law Rule, a nonvested future interest in property is valid at the moment of its creation. Step Two (Section 2-901(a)(2)) [72-2-1002(1)(b)] is a salvage strategy for future interests that would have been invalid at common law. Rather than invalidating such interests at creation, wait-and-see allows a period of time, called the permissible vesting period, during which the nonvested interests are permitted to vest according to the trust's terms.

The traditional method of measuring the permissible vesting period has been by reference to lives in being at the creation of the interest (the measuring lives) plus 21 years. There are, however, various difficulties and costs associated with identifying and tracing a set of actual measuring lives to see which one is the survivor and when he or she dies. In addition, it has been documented that the use of actual measuring lives plus 21 years does not produce a period of time that self-adjusts to each disposition, extending dead-hand control no further than necessary in each case; rather, the use of actual measuring lives (plus 21 years) generates a permissible vesting period whose length almost always exceeds by some arbitrary margin the point of actual vesting in cases traditionally validated by the wait-and-see strategy. The actual-measuring-lives approach, therefore, performs a margin-of-safety function. Given this fact, and given the costs and difficulties associated with the actual-measuring-lives approach, the Uniform Statutory Rule forgoes the use of actual measuring lives and uses instead a permissible vesting period of a flat 90 years.

The philosophy behind the 90-year period is to fix a period of time that approximates the average period of time that would traditionally be allowed by the wait-and-see doctrine. The flat-period-of-years method was not used as a means of increasing permissible dead-hand control by lengthening the permissible vesting period beyond its traditional boundaries. In fact, the 90-year period falls substantially short of the absolute maximum period of time that could theoretically be achieved under the common-law Rule itself, by the so-called "twelve-healthy-babies ploy" — a ploy that would average out to a period of about 115 years,[1] 25 years or 27.8% longer than the 90 years allowed by USRAP. The fact that the traditional period roughly averages out to a longish-sounding 90 years is a reflection of a quite different phenomenon: the dramatic increase in longevity that society as a whole has experienced in the course of the twentieth century.

The framers of the Uniform Statutory Rule derived the 90-year period as follows. The first point recognized was that if actual measuring lives were to have been used, the length of the permissible vesting period would, in the normal course of events, be governed by the life of the youngest measuring life. The second point recognized was that no matter what method is used to identify the measuring lives, the youngest measuring life, in standard trusts, is likely to be the transferor's youngest descendant living when the trust was created.[2] The 90-year period was premised on these propositions. Using four hypothetical families deemed to be representative of actual families, the framers of the Uniform Statutory Rule determined that, on average, the transferor's youngest descendant in being at the transferor's death — assuming the transferor's death to occur between ages 60 and 90, which is when 73 percent of the population die — is about 6 years old. See Waggoner, "Perpetuities: A Progress Report on the Draft Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities," 20 U. Miami Inst. on Est. Plan. Ch. 7 at 7-17 (1986). The remaining life expectancy of a 6-year-old is about 69 years. The 69 years, plus the 21-year tack-on period, gives a permissible vesting period of 90 years.

Acceptance of the 90-year-period Approach under the Federal Generation-skipping Transfer Tax. Federal regulations, to be promulgated by the U.S. Treasury Department under the generation-skipping transfer tax, will accept the Uniform Statutory Rule's 90-year period as a valid approximation of the period that, on average, would be produced by lives in being plus 21 years. See Temp. Treas. Reg. § 26.2601-1(b)(1)(v)(B)(2) (as to be revised). When originally promulgated in 1988, this regulation was prepared without knowledge of the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities, which had been promulgated in 1986; as first promulgated, the regulation only recognized a period measured by actual lives in being plus 21 years. After the 90-year approach of the Uniform Statutory Rule was brought to the attention of the U.S. Treasury Department, the Department issued a letter of intent to amend the regulation to treat the 90-year period as the equivalent of a lives-in-being-plus-21-years period. Letter from Michael J. Graetz, Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Treasury (Tax Policy), to Lawrence J. Bugge, President, National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (Nov. 16, 1990). For further discussion of the coordination of the federal generation-skipping transfer tax with the Uniform Statutory Rule, see the Comment to Section 2-901(e) [72-2-1002(5)], infra, and the Comment to Section 1(e) [72-2-1002(5)] of the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities.

The 90-year Period Will Seldom be Used Up. Nearly all trusts (or other property arrangements) will terminate by their own terms long before the 90-year permissible vesting period expires, leaving the permissible vesting period to extend unused (and ignored) into the future long after the contingencies have been resolved and the property distributed. In the unlikely event that the contingencies have not been resolved by the expiration of the permissible vesting period, Section 2-903 [72-2-1004] requires the disposition to be reformed by the court so that all contingencies are resolved within the permissible period.

In effect, wait-and-see with deferred reformation operates similarly to a traditional perpetuity saving clause, which grants a margin-of-safety period measured by the lives of the transferor's descendants in being at the creation of the trust or other property arrangement (plus 21 years).

No New Learning Required. The Uniform Statutory Rule does not require the practicing bar to learn a new and unfamiliar set of perpetuity principles. The effect of the Uniform Statutory Rule on the planning and drafting of documents for clients should be distinguished from the effect on the resolution of actual or potential perpetuity-violation cases. The former affects many more practicing lawyers than the latter.

[1] Actuarially, the life expectancy of the longest living member of a group of twelve new-born babies is about 94 years; with the 21-year tack-on period, the "twelve-healthy-babies ploy" would produce, on average, a period of about 115 years (94 + 21).

[2] Under Section 2-707 [72-2-717], the descendants of a beneficiary of a future interest are presumptively made substitute beneficiaries, almost certainly making those descendants in being at the creation of the interest measuring lives, were measuring lives to have been used.

With respect to the planning and drafting end of the practice, the Uniform Statutory Rule requires no modification of current practice and no new learning. Lawyers can and should continue to use the same traditional perpetuity-saving/termination clause, using specified lives in being plus 21 years, they used before enactment. Lawyers should not shift to a "later of" type clause that purports to operate upon the later of (A) 21 years after the death of the survivor of specified lives in being or (B) 90 years. As explained in more detail in the Comment to Section 2-901 [72-2-1002], such a clause is not effective. If such a "later of" clause is used in a trust that contains a violation of the common-law rule against perpetuities, Section 2-901(a) [72-2-1002(1)], by itself, would render the clause ineffective, limit the maximum permissible vesting period to 90 years, and render the trust vulnerable to a reformation suit under Section 2-903 [72-2-1004]. Section 2-901(e) [72-2-1002(5)], however, saves documents using this type of clause from this fate. By limiting the effect of such clauses to the 21-year period following the death of the survivor of the specified lives, subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)] in effect transforms this type of clause into a traditional perpetuity-saving/termination clause, bringing the trust into compliance with the common-law rule against perpetuities and rendering it invulnerable to a reformation suit under Section 2-903 [72-2-1004].

Far fewer in number are those lawyers (and judges) who have an actual or potential perpetuity-violation case. An actual or potential perpetuity-violation case will arise very infrequently under the Uniform Statutory Rule. When such a case does arise, however, lawyers (or judges) involved in the case will find considerable guidance for its resolution in the detailed analysis contained in the commentary accompanying the Uniform Statutory Rule itself. In short, the detailed analysis in the commentary accompanying the Uniform Statutory Rule need not be part of the general learning required of lawyers in the drafting and planning of dispositive documents for their clients. The detailed analysis is supplied in the commentary for the assistance in the resolution of an actual violation. Only then need that detailed analysis be consulted and, in such a case, it will prove extremely helpful.

Part Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Justiciable Controversy Required: When a declaratory judgment had been sought on the issue of whether a right of first refusal of real property was invalid under the rule against perpetuities, it should have been dismissed by the District Court because no justiciable controversy existed. Relying on Hardy v. Krutzfeldt, 206 M 521, 672 P2d 274, 40 St. Rep. 1823 (1983), the Supreme Court noted that in this case there was no pending sale or offer for sale or purchase or offer to purchase the affected property. Neither had a third party challenged the clause's application to him. Parker v. Weed, 220 M 49, 713 P2d 535, 43 St. Rep. 162 (1986).

Operating Agreement Not Violation of Rule Against Perpetuities: Where the plaintiffs and defendants entered into an agreement for the operation of a mine that provided for two extensions of the 5-year primary term of the agreement only if the defendants were "engaged in commercial production of minerals" and only if "active mining operations" were in progress, the District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for the defendants and holding that the agreement did not violate the rule against perpetuities. Under the rationale of Consol. Mines Corp. v. O'Connell, 107 M 273, 85 P2d 345 (1938), the lease could be perpetually renewed but was limited by the required facts being found to exist at time of renewal. This is not a perpetuity. Lewis v. St., 207 M 361, 675 P2d 107, 41 St. Rep. 9 (1984).

Subdivision of Land Benefiting by Reversionary Clause — Effect Upon Rule: The reversionary clause here created a shifting executory grant because a possibility of reverter exists only in the creator of the interest or his heirs and the creator here subdivided the land into tracts. Klawitter v. U.S., 423 F. Supp. 1349, 33 St. Rep. 1369 (D.C. Mont. 1976).

Lives in Being: Under former section allowing suspension of absolute power of alienation for period during continuance of lives of persons in being at creation of limitation or condition and no longer, duration of lives in being and not merely time alone was ultimate measure of period of suspension. In re Hartwig's Estate, 119 M 359, 175 P2d 178 (1946).

Declaration of Trust Held Not Invalid: Where under terms of declaration of a common-law trust trustees had absolute power of alienation of the property of the trust at any time in their discretion, the trust may not be declared invalid as in violation of statutes prohibiting restraints on power of alienation. Hodgkiss v. Northland Petroleum Consol., 104 M 328, 67 P2d 811 (1937).

Minority of Children: Mere minority of children, which under the provisions of a will prevents a postponement of the vesting of title to property bequeathed or devised to them until reaching majority, does not work a suspension of the power of alienation for the period prescribed in the statutes; nor does postponement of possession or enjoyment thereof prevent the interest of the heir from vesting or from being conveyed or transferred. In re Murphy's Estate, 99 M 114, 43 P2d 233 (1935).

Rule Against Perpetuities: The rule against perpetuities is directed toward the prevention of the vesting of estates at remote periods of time and is distinguished from statutes prohibiting the suspension of the power of alienation for a prescribed period, such statutes not insisting upon the vesting of estates but only upon their alienability. In re Murphy's Estate, 99 M 114, 43 P2d 233 (1935).

Official Comments

Section 2-901 [72-2-1002] codifies the validating side of the common-law Rule and implements the wait-and-see feature of the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities. As provided in Section 2-906 [not adopted in Montana, but see 1-1-108], this section and the other sections in Subpart 1 of Part 9 [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007] supersede the common-law Rule Against Perpetuities (common-law Rule) in jurisdictions previously adhering to it (or repeals any statutory version or variation thereof previously in effect in the jurisdiction). The common-law Rule (or the statutory version or variation thereof) is replaced by the Statutory Rule in Section 2-901 [72-2-1002] and by the other provisions of Subpart 1 of Part 9 [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007].

Section 2-901(a) [72-2-1002(1)] covers nonvested property interests, and will be the subsection most often applicable. Subsections (b) [72-2-1002(2)] and (c) [72-2-1002(3)] cover powers of appointment.

Paragraph (1) of subsections (a) [72-2-1002(1)(a)], (b) [72-2-1002(2)(a)], and (c) [72-2-1002(3)(a)] is a codified version of the validating side of the common-law Rule. In effect, paragraph (1) of these subsections provides that nonvested property interests and powers of appointment that are valid under the common-law Rule Against Perpetuities, including those that are rendered valid because of a perpetuity saving clause, continue to be valid under the Statutory Rule and can be declared so at their inceptions. This means that no new learning is required of competent estate planners: The practice of lawyers who competently draft trusts and other property arrangements for their clients is undisturbed.

Paragraph (2) of subsections (a) [72-2-1002(1)(b)], (b) [72-2-1002(2)(b)], and (c) [72-2-1002(3)(b)] establishes the wait-and-see rule. Paragraph (2) provides that an interest or a power of appointment that is not validated by paragraph (1), and hence would have been invalid under the common-law Rule, is given a second chance: Such an interest is valid if it does not actually remain in existence and nonvested when the 90-year permissible vesting period expires; such a power of appointment is valid if it ceases to be subject to a condition precedent or is no longer exercisable when the permissible 90-year period expires.

Subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)]. The rule established in subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)] deserves a special comment. Subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)] declares that the possibility that a child will be born to an individual after the individual's death is to be disregarded. It is important to note that this rule applies only for the purpose of determining the validity of an interest (or a power of appointment) under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) [72-2-1002(1)(a)], (b) [72-2-1002(2)(a)], or (c) [72-2-1002(3)(a)]. The rule of subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)] does not apply, for example, to questions such as whether a child who is born to an individual after the individual's death qualifies as a taker of a beneficial interest — as a member of a class or otherwise. Neither subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)], nor any other provision of Part 9 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 10], supersedes the widely accepted common-law principle, codified in Section 2-109 [72-2-119], that a child in gestation (a child sometimes described as a child en ventre sa mere) who is later born alive (and, under Section 2-109 [72-2-119], lives for 120 hours or more after birth) is regarded as alive during gestation.

The limited purpose of subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)] is to solve a perpetuity problem created by advances in medical science. The problem is illustrated by a case such as "to A for life, remainder to A's children who reach 21." When the common-law Rule was developing, the possibility was recognized, strictly speaking, that one or more of A's children might reach 21 more than 21 years after A's death. The possibility existed because A's wife (who might not be a life in being) might be pregnant when A died. If she was, and if the child was born viable a few months after A's death, the child could not reach his or her 21st birthday within 21 years after A's death. The device then invented to validate the interest of A's children was to "extend" the allowable perpetuity period by tacking on a period of gestation, if needed. As a result, the common-law perpetuity period was comprised of three components: (1) a life in being (2) plus 21 years (3) plus a period of gestation, when needed. Today, thanks to sperm banks, frozen embryos, and even the possibility of artificially maintaining the body functions of a deceased pregnant woman long enough to develop the fetus to viability — advances in medical science unanticipated when the common-law Rule was in its developmental stages — having a pregnant wife at death is no longer the only way of having children after death. These medical developments, and undoubtedly others to come, make the mere addition of a period of gestation inadequate as a device to confer initial validity under Section 2-901(a)(1) [72-2-1002(1)(a)] on the interest of A's children in the above example. The rule of subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)], however, does insure the initial validity of the children's interest. Disregarding the possibility that children of A will be born after his death allows A to be the validating life. None of his children, under this assumption, can reach 21 more than 21 years after his death.

Note that subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)] subsumes not only the case of children conceived after death, but also the more conventional case of children in gestation at death. With subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)] in place, the third component of the common-law perpetuity period is unnecessary and has been jettisoned. The perpetuity period recognized in paragraph (1) of subsections (a) [72-2-1002(1)(a)], (b) [72-2-1002(2)(a)], and (c) [72-2-1002(3)(a)] has only two components: (1) a life in being (2) plus 21 years.

As to the legal status of conceived-after-death children, that question has not yet been resolved. For example, if in the above example A leaves sperm on deposit at a sperm bank and after A's death a woman (A's widow or another) becomes pregnant as a result of artificial insemination, the child or children produced thereby might not be included at all in the class gift. Cf. Restatement (Second) of Property (Donative Transfers) Introductory Note to Ch. 26 (1988). Without trying to predict how that question will be resolved in the future, the best way to handle the problem from the perpetuity perspective is the rule in subsection (d) [72-2-1002(4)] requiring the possibility of post-death children to be disregarded.

Subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)] —Effect of Certain "Later-of" Type Language. Subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)] was added to the Uniform Statutory Rule in 1990. It primarily applies to a non-traditional type of "later of" clause (described below). Use of that type of clause might have produced unintended consequences, which are now rectified by the addition of subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)].

In general, perpetuity saving or termination clauses can be used in either of two ways. The predominant use of such clauses is as an override clause. That is, the clause is not an integral part of the dispositive terms of the trust, but operates independently of the dispositive terms; the clause provides that all interests must vest no later than at a specified time in the future, and sometimes also provides that the trust must then terminate, but only if any interest has not previously vested or if the trust has not previously terminated. The other use of such a clause is as an integral part of the dispositive terms of the trust; that is, the clause is the provision that directly regulates the duration of the trust. Traditional perpetuity saving or termination clauses do not use a "later of" approach; they mark off the maximum time of vesting or termination only by reference to a 21-year period following the death of the survivor of specified lives in being at the creation of the trust.

Subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)] applies to a non-traditional clause called a "later of" (or "longer of") clause. Such a clause might provide that the maximum time of vesting or termination of any interest or trust must occur no later than the later of (A) 21 years after the death of the survivor of specified lives in being at the creation of the trust or (B) 90 years after the creation of the trust.

Under the Uniform Statutory Rule as originally promulgated, this type of "later of" clause would not achieve a "later of" result. If used as an override clause in conjunction with a trust whose terms were, by themselves, valid under the common-law rule against perpetuities (common-law Rule), the "later of" clause did no harm. The trust would be valid under the common-law Rule as codified in subsection (a)(1) [72-2-1002(1)(a)] because the clause itself would neither postpone the vesting of any interest nor extend the duration of the trust. But, if used either (1) as an override clause in conjunction with a trust whose terms were not valid under the common-law Rule or (2) as the provision that directly regulated the duration of the trust, the "later of" clause would not cure the perpetuity violation in case (1) and would create a perpetuity violation in case (2). In neither case would the clause qualify the trust for validity at common law under subsection (a)(1) [72-2-1002(1)(a)] because the clause would not guarantee that all interests will be certain to vest or terminate no later than 21 years after the death of an individual then alive.[1] In any given case, 90 years can turn out to be longer than the period produced by the specified-lives-in-being-plus-21-years language.

Because the clause would fail to qualify the trust for validity under the common-law Rule of subsection (a)(1) [72-2-1002(1)(a)], the nonvested interests in the trust would be subject to the wait-and-see element of subsection (a)(2) [72-2-1002(1)(b)] and vulnerable to a reformation suit under Section 2-903 [72-2-1004]. Under subsection (a)(2) [72-2-1002(1)(b)], an interest that is not valid at common law is invalid unless it actually vests or terminates within 90 years after its creation. Subsection (a)(2) [72-2-1002(1)(b)] does not grant such nonvested interests a permissible vesting period of either 90 years or a period of 21 years after the death of the survivor of specified lives in being. Subsection (a)(2) [72-2-1002(1)(b)] only grants such interests a period of 90 years in which to vest.

The operation of subsection (a) [72-2-1002(1)], as outlined above, is also supported by perpetuity policy. If subsection (a) [72-2-1002(1)] allowed a "later of" clause to achieve a "later of" result, it would authorize an improper use of the 90-year permissible vesting period of subsection (a)(2) [72-2-1002(1)(b)]. The 90-year period of subsection (a)(2) [72-2-1002(1)(b)] is designed to approximate the period that, on average, would be produced by using actual lives in being plus 21 years. Because in any given case the period actually produced by lives in being plus 21 years can be shorter or longer than 90 years, an attempt to utilize a 90-year period in a "later of" clause improperly seeks to turn the 90-year average into a minimum.

Set against this background, the addition of subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)] is quite beneficial. Subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)] limits the effect of this type of "later of" language to 21 years after the death of the survivor of the specified lives, in effect transforming the clause into a traditional perpetuity saving/termination clause. By doing so, subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)] grants initial validity to the trust under the common-law Rule as codified in subsection (a)(1) [72-2-1002(1)(a)] and precludes a reformation suit under Section 2-903 [72-2-1004].

Note that subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)] covers variations of the "later of" clause described above, such as a clause that postpones vesting until the later of (A) 20 years after the death of the survivor of specified lives in being or (B) 89 years. Subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)] does not, however, apply to all dispositions that incorporate a "later of" approach. To come under subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)], the specified-lives prong must include a tack-on period of up to 21 years. Without a tack-on period, a "later of" disposition, unless valid at common law, comes under subsection (a)(2) [72-2-1002(1)(b)] and is given 90 years in which to vest. An example would be a disposition that creates an interest that is to vest upon "the later of the death of my widow or 30 years after my death."

[1]By substantial analogous authority, the specified-lives-in-being-plus-21-years prong of the "later of" clause under discussion is not sustained by the separability doctrine (described in Part H of the Comment to §1 of the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities). See, e.g., Restatement of Property §376 comments e & f & illustration 3 (1944); Easton v. Hall, 323 Ill. 397, 154 N.E. 216 (1926); Thorne v. Continental Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 305 Ill. App. 222, 27 N.E.2d 302 (1940). The inapplicability of the separability doctrine is also supported by perpetuity policy, as described in the text above.

Coordination of the Federal Generation-skipping Transfer Tax with the Uniform Statutory Rule. In 1990, the Treasury Department announced a decision to coordinate the tax regulations under the "grandfathering" provisions of the federal generation-skipping transfer tax with the Uniform Statutory Rule. Letter from Michael J. Graetz, Deputy Assistant Secretary of the Treasury (Tax Policy), to Lawrence J. Bugge, President, National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (Nov. 16, 1990) (hereinafter Treasury Letter).

Section 1433(b)(2) of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 generally exempts ("grandfathers") trusts from the federal generation-skipping transfer tax that were irrevocable on September 25, 1985. This section adds, however, that the exemption shall apply "only to the extent that such transfer is not made out of corpus added to the trust after September 25, 1985." The provisions of Section 1433(b)(2) were first implemented by Temp. Treas. Reg. § 26.2601-1, promulgated by T.D. 8187 on March 14, 1988. Insofar as the Uniform Statutory Rule is concerned, a key feature of that temporary regulation is the concept that the statutory reference to "corpus added to the trust after September 25, 1985" not only covers actual post-9/25/85 transfers of new property or corpus to a grandfathered trust but "constructive" additions as well. Under the temporary regulation as first promulgated, a "constructive" addition occurs if, after 9/25/85, the donee of a nongeneral power of appointment exercises that power "in a manner that may postpone or suspend the vesting, absolute ownership or power of alienation of an interest in property for a period, measured from the date of creation of the trust, extending beyond any life in being at the date of creation of the trust plus a period of 21 years. If a power is exercised by creating another power it will be deemed to be exercised to whatever extent the second power may be exercised." Temp. Treas. Reg. § 26.2601-1(b)(1)(v)(B)(2) (1988).

Because the Uniform Statutory Rule was promulgated in 1986 and applies only prospectively, any "grandfathered" trust would have become irrevocable prior to the enactment of USRAP in any state. Nevertheless, the second sentence of Section 2-905(a) [72-2-1006(1)] extends USRAP's wait-and-see approach to post-effective-date exercises of nongeneral powers even if the power itself was created prior to USRAP's effective date. Consequently, a post-USRAP-effective-date exercise of a nongeneral power of appointment created in a "grandfathered" trust could come under the provisions of the Uniform Statutory Rule.

The literal wording, then, of Temp. Treas. Reg. § 26.2601-1(b)(1)(v)(B)(2) (1988), as first promulgated, could have jeopardized the grandfathered status of an exempt trust if (1) the trust created a nongeneral power of appointment, (2) the donee exercised that nongeneral power, and (3) USRAP is the perpetuity law applicable to the donee's exercise. This possibility arose not only because the donee's exercise itself might come under the 90-year permissible vesting period of subsection (a)(2) [72-2-1002(1)(b)] if it otherwise violated the common-law Rule and hence was not validated under subsection (a)(1) [72-2-1002(1)(a)]. The possibility also arose in a less obvious way if the donee's exercise created another nongeneral power. The last sentence of the temporary regulation states that "if a power is exercised by creating another power it will be deemed to be exercised to whatever extent the second power may be exercised."

In late March 1990, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws (NCCUSL) and the Joint Editorial Board for the Uniform Probate Code (JEB-UPC) filed a formal request with the Treasury Department asking that measures be taken to coordinate the regulation with USRAP. By the Treasury Letter referred to above, the Treasury Department responded by stating that it "will amend the temporary regulations to accommodate the 90-year period under USRAP as originally promulgated [in 1986] or as amended [in 1990 by the addition of subsection (e)] [72-2-1002(5)]." This should effectively remove the possibility of loss of grandfathered status under the Uniform Statutory Rule merely because the donee of a nongeneral power created in a grandfathered trust inadvertently exercises that power in violation of the common-law Rule or merely because the donee exercises that power by creating a second nongeneral power that might, in the future, be inadvertently exercised in violation of the common-law Rule.

The Treasury Letter states, however, that any effort by the donee of a nongeneral power in a grandfathered trust to obtain a "later of" specified-lives-in-being-plus-21-years or 90-years approach will be treated as a constructive addition, unless that effort is nullified by state law. As explained above, the Uniform Statutory Rule, as originally promulgated in 1986 or as amended in 1990 by the addition of subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)], nullifies any direct effort to obtain a "later of" approach by the use of a "later of" clause.

The Treasury Letter states that an indirect effort to obtain a "later of" approach would also be treated as a constructive addition that would bring grandfathered status to an end, unless the attempt to obtain the later-of approach is nullified by state law. The Treasury Letter indicates that an indirect effort to obtain a "later of" approach could arise if the donee of a nongeneral power successfully attempts to prolong the duration of a grandfathered trust by switching from a specified-lives-in-being-plus-21-years perpetuity period to a 90-year perpetuity period, or vice versa. Donees of nongeneral powers in grandfathered trusts would therefore be well advised to resist any temptation to wait until it becomes clear or reasonably predictable which perpetuity period will be longer and then make a switch to the longer period if the governing instrument creating the power utilized the shorter period. No such attempted switch and no constructive addition will occur if in each instance a traditional specified-lives-in-being-plus-21-years perpetuity saving clause is used.

Any such attempted switch is likely in any event to be nullified by state law and, if so, the attempted switch will not be treated as a constructive addition. For example, suppose that the original grandfathered trust contained a standard perpetuity saving clause declaring that all interests in the trust must vest no later than 21 years after the death of the survivor of specified lives in being. In exercising a nongeneral power created in that trust, any indirect effort by the donee to obtain a "later of" approach by adopting a 90-year perpetuity saving clause will likely be nullified by subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)]. If that exercise occurs at a time when it has become clear or reasonably predictable that the 90-year period will prove longer, the donee's exercise would constitute language in a governing instrument that seeks to operate in effect to postpone the vesting of any interest until the later of the specified-lives-in-being-plus-21-years period or 90 years. Under subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)], "that language is inoperative to the extent it produces a period of time that exceeds 21 years after the death of the survivor of the specified lives."

Quite apart from subsection (e) [72-2-1002(5)], the relation-back doctrine generally recognized in the exercise of nongeneral powers stands as a doctrine that could potentially be invoked to nullify an attempted switch from one perpetuity period to the other perpetuity period. Under that doctrine, interests created by the exercise of a nongeneral power are considered created by the donor of that power. See, e.g., Restatement (Second) of Property, Donative Transfers § 11.1 comment b (1986). As such, the maximum vesting period applicable to interests created by the exercise of a nongeneral power would apparently be covered by the perpetuity saving clause in the document that created the power, notwithstanding any different period the donee purports to adopt.

72-2-1003. When nonvested property interest or power of appointment created.

Official Comments

Section 2-902 [72-2-1003] defines the time when, for purposes of Subpart 1 of Part 9 [72-2-1001 through 72-10-1007], a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment is created. The period of time allowed by Section 2-901 [72-2-1002] is measured from the time of creation of the nonvested property interest or power of appointment in question. Section 2-905 [72-2-1006], with certain exceptions, provides that Subpart 1 of Part 9 [72-2-1001 through 72-10-1007] applies only to nonvested property interests and powers of appointment created on or after the effective date of Subpart 1 of Part 9 [72-2-1001 through 72-10-1007].

Subsection (a) [72-2-1003(1)]. Subsection (a) [72-2-1003(1)] provides that, with certain exceptions, the time of creation of nonvested property interests and powers of appointment is determined under general principles of property law. Because a will becomes effective as a dispositive instrument upon the decedent's death, not upon the execution of the will, general principles of property law determine that a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment created by will is created at the decedent's death. With respect to an inter-vivos transfer, an interest or power is created on the date the transfer becomes effective for purposes of property law generally, normally the date of delivery of the deed or the funding of the trust.

Nonvested Property Interests and Powers of Appointment Created by the Exercise of a Power of Appointment. If a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment was created by the testamentary or inter-vivos exercise of a power of appointment, general principles of property law adopt the "relation-back" doctrine. Under that doctrine, the appointed interests or powers are created when the power was created, not when it was exercised, if the exercised power was a nongeneral power or a general testamentary power. If the nonvested property interest or power of appointment was created by the exercise of a nongeneral or a testamentary power of appointment that was itself created by the exercise of a nongeneral or a testamentary power of appointment, the relation-back doctrine is applied twice and the nonvested property interest or power of appointment was created when the first power of appointment was created, not when the second power was created or exercised.

Example 1. G's will created a trust that provided for the income to go to G's son, A, for life, remainder to such of A's descendants as A shall by will appoint.

A died leaving a will that exercised his nongeneral power of appointment, providing that the trust is to continue beyond A's death, paying the income to A's daughter, X, for her lifetime, remainder in corpus to such of X's descendants as X shall by will appoint; in default of appointment, to X's descendants who survive X, by representation.

A's exercise of his nongeneral power of appointment gave a nongeneral power of appointment to X and a nonvested property interest to X's descendants. For purposes of Section 2-901 [72-2-1002], X's power of appointment and the nonvested property interest in X's descendants is deemed to have been "created" at G's death when A's nongeneral power of appointment was created, not at A's death when he exercised his power of appointment.

Suppose that X subsequently dies leaving a will that exercises her nongeneral power of appointment. For purposes of Section 2-901 [72-2-1002], any nonvested property interest or power of appointment created by an exercise of X's nongeneral power of appointment is deemed to have been "created" at G's death, not at A's death or at X's death.

If the exercised power was a presently exercisable general power, the relation-back doctrine is not followed; the time of creation of the appointed property interests or appointed powers is regarded as the time when the power was irrevocably exercised, not when the power was created.

Example 2. The same facts as Example 1, except that A's will exercised his nongeneral power of appointment by providing that the trust is to continue beyond A's death, paying the income to A's daughter, X, for her lifetime, remainder in corpus to such person or persons, including X, her estate, her creditors, and the creditors of her estate, as X shall appoint; in default of appointment, to X's descendants who survive X, by representation.

A's exercise of his nongeneral power of appointment gave a presently exercisable general power of appointment to X. For purposes of Section 2-901 [72-2-1002], any nonvested property interest or power of appointment created by an exercise of X's presently exercisable general power of appointment is deemed to be "created" when X irrevocably exercises her power of appointment, not when her power of appointment or A's power of appointment was created.

A's exercise of his nongeneral power also granted a nonvested property interest to X's descendants (under the gift-in-default clause). Were it not for the presently exercisable general power granted to X, the nonvested property interest in X's surviving descendants would, under the relation-back doctrine, be deemed "created" for purposes of Section 2-901 [72-2-1002] at the time of G's death. However, under Section 2-902(b) [72-2-1003(2)], the fact that X is granted the presently exercisable general power postpones the time of creation of the nonvested property interest of X's descendants. Under Section 2-902(b) [72-2-1003(2)], that nonvested property interest is deemed not to have been "created" for purposes of Section 2-901 [72-2-1002] at G's death but rather when X's presently exercisable general power "terminates." Consequently, the time of "creation" of the nonvested interest of X's descendants is postponed as of the time that X was granted the presently exercisable general power (upon A's death) and continues in abeyance until X's power terminates. X's power terminates by the first to happen of the following: X's irrevocable exercise of her power; X's release of her power; X's entering into a contract to exercise or not to exercise her power; X's dying without exercising her power; or any other action or nonaction that would have the effect of terminating her power.

Subsection (b) [72-2-1003(2)]. Subsection (b) [72-2-1003(2)] provides that, if one person can exercise a power to become the unqualified beneficial owner of a nonvested property interest (or a property interest subject to a power of appointment described in Section 2-901(b) [72-2-1002(2)] or 2-901(c) [72-2-1002(3)], the time of creation of the nonvested property interest (or the power of appointment) is postponed until the power to become the unqualified beneficial owner ceases to exist. This is in accord with existing common law. The standard example of the application of this subsection is a revocable inter-vivos trust. For perpetuity purposes, both at common law and under Subpart 1 of Part 9 [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007], the nonvested property interests and powers of appointment created in the trust are created when the power to revoke expires, usually at the settlor's death. For another example of the application of subsection (b) [72-2-1003(2)], see the last paragraph of Example 2, above.

Subsection (c) [72-2-1003(3)]. Subsection (c) [72-2-1003(3)] provides that nonvested property interests and powers of appointment arising out of transfers to a previously funded trust or other existing property arrangement are created when the nonvested property interest or power of appointment arising out of the original contribution was created. This avoids an administrative difficulty that can arise at common law when subsequent transfers are made to an existing irrevocable inter-vivos trust. Arguably, at common law, each transfer starts the period of the Rule running anew as to each transfer. The prospect of staggered periods is avoided by subsection (c) [72-2-1003(3)]. Subsection (c) [72-2-1003(3)] is in accord with the saving-clause principle of wait-and-see embraced by Part 9 [Title 72, chapter 2, part 10]. If the irrevocable inter-vivos trust had contained a saving clause, the perpetuity-period component of the clause would be measured by reference to lives in being when the original contribution to the trust was made, and the clause would cover subsequent contributions as well.

72-2-1004. Reformation.

Official Comments

Section 2-903 [72-2-1004] implements the deferred-reformation feature of the Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities. Upon the petition of an interested person, the court is directed to reform a disposition within the limits of the allowable 90-year period, in the manner deemed by the court most closely to approximate the transferor's manifested plan of distribution, in any one of three circumstances. The "interested person" who would frequently bring the reformation suit would be the trustee.

Section 2-903 [72-2-1004] applies only to dispositions the validity of which is governed by the wait-and-see element of Section 2-901(a)(2) [72-2-1002(1)(b)], 2-901(b)(2) [72-2-1002(2)(b)], or 2-901(c)(2) [72-2-1002(3)(b)]; it does not apply to dispositions that are initially valid under Section 2-901(a)(1) [72-2-1002(1)(a)], 2-901(b)(1) [72-2-1002(2)(a)], or 2-901(c)(1) [72-2-1002(3)(a)] — the codified version of the validating side of the common-law Rule.

Section 2-903 [72-2-1004] will seldom be applied. Of the fraction of trusts and other property arrangements that fail to meet the requirements for initial validity under the codified version of the validating side of the common-law Rule, almost all of them will have been settled under their own terms long before any of the circumstances requisite to reformation under Section 2-903 [72-2-1004] arise.

If, against the odds, one of the circumstances requisite to reformation does arise, it will be found easier than perhaps anticipated to determine how best to reform the disposition. The court is given two criteria to work with: (i) the transferor's manifested plan of distribution, and (ii) the allowable 90-year period. Because governing instruments are where transferors manifest their plans of distribution, the imaginary horrible of courts being forced to probe the minds of long-dead transferors will not materialize.

Subsection (1) [72-2-1004(1)]. The theory of Section 2-903 [72-2-1004] is to defer the right to reformation until reformation becomes truly necessary. Thus, the basic rule of Section 2-903(1) [72-2-1004(1)] is that the right to reformation does not arise until a nonvested property interest or a power of appointment becomes invalid; under Section 2-901 [72-2-1002], this does not occur until the expiration of the 90-year permissible vesting period. This approach is more efficient than the "immediate cy pres" approach to perpetuity reform because it substantially reduces the number of reformation suits. It also is consistent with the saving-clause principle embraced by the Statutory Rule. Deferring the right to reformation until the permissible vesting period expires is the only way to grant every reasonable opportunity for the donor's disposition to work itself out without premature interference.

Subsection (2) [72-2-1004(2)]. Although, generally speaking, reformation is deferred until an invalidity has occurred, Section 2-903 [72-2-1004] grants an earlier right to reformation when it becomes necessary to do so or when there is no point in waiting the full 90-year period out. Thus subsection (2) [72-2-1004(2)], which pertains to class gifts that are not yet but still might become invalid under the Statutory Rule, grants a right to reformation whenever the share of any class member whose share had vested within the permissible vesting period might otherwise have to wait out the remaining part of the 90 years before obtaining his or her share. Reformation under this subsection will seldom be needed, however, because of the common practice of structuring trusts to split into separate shares or separate trusts at the death of each income beneficiary, one such separate share or separate trust being created for each of the income beneficiary's then-living children; when this pattern is followed, the circumstances described in subsection (2) [72-2-1004(2)] will not arise.

Subsection (3) [72-2-1004(3)]. Subsection (3) [72-2-1004(3)] also grants a right to reformation before the 90-year permissible vesting period expires. The circumstances giving rise to the right to reformation under subsection (3) [72-2-1004(3)] occurs if a nonvested property interest can vest but not before the 90-year period has expired. Though unlikely, such a case can theoretically arise. If it does, the interest — unless it terminates by its own terms earlier — is bound to become invalid under Section 2-901 [72-2-1002] eventually. There is no point in deferring the right to reformation until the inevitable happens. Section 2-903 [72-2-1004] provides for early reformation in such a case, just in case it arises.

Infectious Invalidity. Given the fact that this section makes reformation mandatory, not discretionary with the court, the common-law doctrine of infectious invalidity is superseded by this section. In a state in which the courts have been particularly zealous about applying the infectious-invalidity doctrine, however, an express codification of the abrogation of this doctrine might be thought desirable. If so, the above section could be made subsection (a), with the following new subsection (b) added:

(b) The common-law rule known as the doctrine of infectious invalidity is abolished. [Montana has not adopted this option.]

72-2-1005. Exclusions from statutory rule against perpetuities.

Official Comments

This section lists the interests and powers that are excluded from the Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities. This section is in part declaratory of existing common law but in part not. Under subsection (7) [72-2-1005(7)], all the exclusions from the common-law Rule recognized at common law and by statute in the state are preserved.

The major departure from existing common law comes in subsection (1) [72-2-1005(1)]. In line with long-standing scholarly commentary, subsection (1) [72-2-1005(1)] excludes nondonative transfers from the Statutory Rule. The Rule Against Perpetuities is an inappropriate instrument of social policy to use as a control of such arrangements. The period of the Rule — a life in being plus 21 years — is suitable for donative transfers only, and this point applies with equal force to the 90-year allowable waiting period under the wait-and-see element of Section 2-901 [72-2-1002]. That period, as noted, represents an approximation of the period of time that would be produced, on average, by tracing a set of actual measuring lives and adding a 21-year period following the death of the survivor.

Certain types of transactions — although in some sense supported by consideration, and hence arguably nondonative — arise out of a domestic situation, and should not be excluded from the Statutory Rule. To avoid uncertainty with respect to such transactions, subsection (1) [72-2-1005(1)] lists and restores such transactions, such as premarital or postmarital agreements, contracts to make or not to revoke a will or trust, and so on, to the donative-transfers category that does not qualify for an exclusion.

72-2-1006. Prospective application.

Official Comments

Section 2-905 [72-2-1006] provides that, except for Section 2-905(b) [72-2-1006(2)], this Part [Title 72, chapter 2, part 10] applies only to nonvested property interests or powers of appointment created on or after the effective date of this Subpart [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007, effective October 1, 1989]. The second sentence of subsection (a) [72-2-1006(1)] establishes a special rule for nonvested property interests (and powers of appointment) created by the exercise of a power of appointment. The import of this special rule, which applies to the exercise of all types of powers of appointment (general testamentary powers and nongeneral powers as well as presently exercisable general powers), is that all the provisions of this Subpart [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007] except Section 2-905(b) [72-2-1006(2)] apply if the donee of a power of appointment exercises the power on or after the effective date of this Subpart [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007, effective October 1, 1989], whether the donee's exercise is revocable or irrevocable. In addition, all the provisions of Subpart 1 [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007] except Section 2-905(b) [72-2-1006(2)] apply if the donee exercised the power before the effective date of this Subpart [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007, effective October 1, 1989] if (i) that pre-effective-date exercise was revocable and (ii) that revocable exercise becomes irrevocable on or after the effective date of this Subpart [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007, effective October 1, 1989]. The special rule, in other words, prevents the common-law doctrine of relation back from inappropriately shrinking the reach of this Subpart [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007].

Although the Uniform Statutory Rule does not apply retroactively, Section 2-905(b) [72-2-1006(2)] authorizes a court to exercise its equitable power of reform instruments that contain a violation of the state's former rule against perpetuities and to which the Uniform Statutory Rule does not apply because the offending property interest or power of appointment was created before the effective date of this Subpart [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007, effective October 1, 1989]. Courts are urged to consider reforming such dispositions by judicially inserting a perpetuity saving clause, because a perpetuity saving clause would probably have been used at the drafting stage of the disposition had it been drafted competently. To obviate any possibility of an inequitable exercise of the equitable power to reform, Section 2-905(b) [72-2-1006(2)] limits the authority to reform to situations in which the violation of the former rule against perpetuities is determined in a judicial proceeding that is commenced on or after the effective date of this Subpart [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007, effective October 1, 1989]. The equitable power to reform would typically be exercised in the same judicial proceeding in which the invalidity is determined.

72-2-1017. Honorary trusts — trusts for pets.

Official Comments

Subpart 2 [72-2-1017] contains an optional provision on honorary trusts and trusts for pets. If this optional provision is enacted, a new subsection (8) [not adopted in Montana] should be added to Section 2-904 [72-2-1005] to avoid an overlap or conflict between Subpart 1 of Part 9 [72-2-1001 through 72-2-1007] (USRAP) and Subpart 2 of Part 9 [72-2-1017]. Subsection (8) [not adopted in Montana] makes it clear that Subpart 2 of Part 9 [72-2-1017] is the exclusive provision applicable to the property interests or arrangements subjected to a time limit by the provisions of Subpart 2 [72-2-1017]. Subsection (8) [not adopted in Montana] states:

(8) a property interest or arrangement subjected to a time limit under Subpart 2 of Part 9 [72-2-1017].

Additionally, the "or" at the end of Section 2-904(6) [72-2-1005(6)] should be removed and placed after Section 2-904(7) [72-2-1005(7)]. [Montana has not implemented this recommendation.]

Subsection (a) of this section [72-2-1017(1)] authorizes so-called honorary trusts and places a 21-year limit on their duration. The figure "21" is bracketed to indicate that an enacting state may select a different figure.

Subsection (b) [72-2-1017(2)] provides more elaborate provisions for a particular type of honorary trust, the trust for the care of pets. Under subsection (b) [72-2-1017(2)], a trust for the care of a designated domestic or pet animal and the animal's offspring is valid for a period of up to 21 years. Again, the figure "21" is bracketed to indicate that an enacting state may select a different figure.

The normal life span of some animal species exceeds 21 years. If a state would prefer to allow the trust to continue until the death of the animal, subsection (b) [72-2-1017(2)] can easily be adapted to that purpose. If a state chooses to take this approach, it would probably be desirable not to allow the trust to continue for the lifetime of the animal's offspring. Appropriate adjustments for achieving this approach are to delete the phrase "and the animal's offspring" from the introductory portion of subsection (b) [72-2-1017(2)] and to modify subsection (b)(2) [72-2-1017(2)(b)] to read: "The trust terminates at the death of the animal."

Subsection (b) [72-2-1017(2)] meets a concern of many pet owners by providing them a means for leaving funds to be used for the pet's care.

(a) No portion of the principal or income may be converted to the use of the trustee or to any use other than for the benefit of a covered animal", in second sentence, after "terminates", deleted "at the earlier of 21 years after the trust was created or", inserted third sentence concerning liberal construction, and inserted fourth sentence concerning extrinsic evidence; inserted (3) and (3)(a) concerning prohibition on converting principal or income to another use; deleted former (2)(g) that read: "(g) A governing instrument must be liberally construed to bring the transfer within the applicability of this section, to presume against the merely precatory or honorary nature of the disposition, and to carry out the general intent of the transferor. Extrinsic evidence is admissible in determining the transferor's intent"; adjusted subsection references; and made minor changes in style.

CHAPTER 3
UPC — PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION

Chapter Official Comments

The provisions of this [chapter] describe the Flexible System of Administration of Decedents' Estates. Designed to be applicable to both intestate and testate estates and to provide persons interested in decedents' estates with as little or as much by way of procedural and adjudicative safeguards as may be suitable under varying circumstances, this system is the heart of the Uniform Probate Code.

The organization and detail of the system here described may be expressed in varying ways and some states may see fit to reframe parts of this article to better accommodate local institutions. Variations in language from state to state can be tolerated without loss of the essential purposes of procedural uniformity and flexibility, if the following essential characteristics are carefully protected in the re-drafting process:

(1) Post-mortem probate of a will must occur to make a will effective and appointment of a personal representative by a public official after the decedent's death is required in order to create the duties and powers attending the office of personal representative. Neither is compelled, however, but both are left to be obtained by persons having an interest in the consequence of probate or appointment. Estates descent at death to successors identified by any probated will, or to heirs if no will is probated, subject to rights which may be implemented through administration.

(2) Two methods of securing probate of wills which include a nonadjudicative determination (informal probate) on the one hand, and a judicial determination after notice to all interested persons (formal probate) on the other, are provided.

(3) Two methods of securing appointment of a personal representative which include appointment without notice and without final adjudication of matters relevant to priority for appointment (informal appointment), on the one hand, and appointment by judicial order after notice to interested persons (formal appointment) on the other, are provided.

(4) A five-day waiting period from death preventing informal probate or informal appointment of any but a special administrator is required.

(5) Probate of a will by informal or formal proceedings or an adjudication of intestacy may occur without any attendant requirement of appointment of a personal representative.

(6) One judicial, in rem, proceeding encompassing formal probate of any wills (or a determination after notice that the decedent left no will), appointment of a personal representative and complete settlement of an estate under continuing supervision of the court (supervised administration) is provided for testators and persons interested in a decedent's estate, whether testate or intestate, who desire to use it.

(7) Unless supervised administration is sought and ordered, persons interested in estates (including personal representatives, whether appointed informally or after notice) may use an "in and out" relationship to the court so that any question or assumption relating to the estate, including the status of an estate as testate or intestate, matters relating to one or more claims, disputed titles, accounts of personal representatives, and distribution, may be resolved or established by adjudication after notice without necessarily subjecting the estate to the necessity of judicial orders in regard to other or further questions or assumptions.

(8) The status of a decedent in regard to whether he left a valid will or died intestate must be resolved by adjudication after notice in proceedings commenced within three years after his death. If not so resolved, any will probated informally becomes final, and if there is no such probate, the status of the decedent as intestate is finally determined, by a statute of limitations which bars probate and appointment unless requested within three years after death.

(9) Personal representatives appointed informally or after notice, and whether supervised or not, have statutory powers enabling them to collect, protect, sell, distribute and otherwise handle all steps in administration without further order of the court, except that supervised personal representatives may be subjected to special restrictions on power as endorsed on their letters.

(10) Purchasers from personal representatives and from distributees of personal representatives are protected so that adjudications regarding the testacy status of a decedent or any other question going to the propriety of a sale are not required in order to protect purchasers.

(11) Provisions protecting a personal representative who distributes without adjudication are included to make nonadjudicated settlements feasible.

(12) Statutes of limitation bar creditors of the decedent who fail to present claims within four months after legal advertising of the administration and unsecured claims not previously barred by nonclaim statutes are barred after three years from the decedent's death.

Overall, the system accepts the premise that the court's role in regard to probate and administration, and its relationship to personal representatives who derive their power from public appointment, is wholly passive until some interested person invokes its power to secure resolution of a matter. The state, through the court, should provide remedies which are suitable and efficient to protect any and all rights regarding succession, but should refrain from intruding into family affairs unless relief is requested, and limit its relief to that sought.

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Distribution of Decedent's Personal Property Located in Another State: Decedent was domiciled and prepared his will in another state. His personal representative was properly discharged, and the estate closed after property located in this state was distributed. The laws of decedent's domicile apply to decedent's personal assets; therefore, Montana courts do not have jurisdiction to order the personal representative to gather and distribute decedent's personal property located in the state of decedent's domicile. Deduction of Devisee's Expenses for Upkeep of Real Property From Devisee's Share of Estate: Mary was bequeathed her mother's house and lived in it after her mother died. The question arose whether the estate, or Mary as devisee, was responsible for necessary expenses related to upkeep of the real property during the will contest. The Supreme Court cited the general rule from 34 C.J.S. Executors and Administrators 542 (2003), that unauthorized advancements and disbursements made in good faith by the representative for the benefit of legatees or distributees of the estate are to be reimbursed from their respective portions of the estate. The house immediately devolved to Mary, and only if the personal representative had determined that it was necessary to take possession of the house for administration purposes, would the estate have been responsible for related expenses. However, because the personal representative did not take possession of the house, payments made by the personal representative for upkeep on the property were solely for Mary's benefit and thus chargeable to Mary's portion of the estate. Real Property Subject to Contract as Personalty: Wooten, an attorney, made and executed a holographic will which appointed Grafft as personal representative. The will gave Grafft personalty and a life estate in real property with several charities as remaindermen. Wooten died, and Grafft was appointed personal representative. At the time of death, a portion of the land was subject to a contract for deed. After the death, the buyer defaulted and her interest in the contract and the property was terminated. In response to a petition filed by the remaindermen, the District Court held that all of the land was to pass to the remaindermen, thereby holding that the testator held the property subject to the contract as real property rather than personalty at the time of his death. The Supreme Court overruled that decision, saying that applying statutory rules, the right of decedent in the contracted land was that of a seller under contract and so was personalty. The personal property was specifically devised to Grafft. The decedent's security interest (the default provisions of the contract) also passed to Grafft, and the default after decedent's death was a default in a contract vested in Grafft, subject to the administration of the estate. 72-3-102. Necessity of probate of will.

Official Comments

The basic idea of this section follows Section 85 of the Model Probate Code. The exception referring to [72-3-1101] relates to affidavit procedures which are authorized for collection of estates worth less than $5,000.

Section [72-3-121] and various sections in Parts 3 and 4 of this [chapter] make it clear that a will may be probated without appointment of a personal representative, including any nominated by the will.

The requirement of probate stated here and the limitations on probate provided in [72-3-122] mean that questions as to testacy may be eliminated simply by the running of time. Under these sections, an informally probated will cannot be questioned after the later of three years from the decedent's death or one year from the probate whether or not an executor was appointed, or, if an executor was appointed, without regard to whether the estate has been distributed. If the decedent is believed to have died without a will, the running of three years from death bars probate of a late-discovered will and so makes the assumption of intestacy conclusive.

The exceptions to the section (other than the exception relevant to small estates) are not intended to accommodate cases of late-discovered wills. Rather, they are designed to make the probate requirement inapplicable where circumstances led survivors of a decedent to believe that there was no point to probating a will of which they may have had knowledge. If any will was probated within three years of death, or if letters of administration were issued in this period, the exceptions to the section are inapplicable. If there has been no proceeding in probate, persons seeking to establish title by an unprobated will must show, with reference to the estate they claim, either that it has been possessed by those to whom it was devised or that it has been unknown to the decedent's heirs or devisees and not possessed by any.

It is to be noted, also, that devisees who are able to claim under one of the exceptions to this section may not obtain probate of the will or administration of the estate to assist them in their efforts to obtain the estate in question. The exceptions are to a rule which bars admission of a will into evidence, rather than to the section barring late probate and late appointment of personal representatives. Still, the exceptions should serve to prevent two "hard" cases which can be imagined readily. In one, a surviving spouse fails to seek probate of a will, giving her the entire estate of the decedent because she is informed or believes that all of her husband's property was held by them jointly, with right of survivorship. Later, it is discovered that she was mistaken as to the nature of her husband's title. The other case involves a devisee who sees no point to securing probate of a will in his favor because he is unaware of any estate. Subsequently, valuable rights of the decedent are discovered.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 at end deleted "except that a duly executed and unrevoked will which has not been probated may be admitted as evidence of a devise if:

(1) no court proceeding concerning the succession or administration of the estate has occurred; and

(2) either:

(a) the devisee or his successors and assigns possessed the property devised in accordance with the provisions of the will; or

(b) the property devised was not possessed or claimed by anyone by virtue of the decedent's title during the time period for testacy proceedings".

DECISIONS UNDER 1975 MONTANA UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Promissory Estoppel Requiring Reversal of Summary Judgment — No Will Produced: The Supreme Court reversed summary judgment, finding that genuine issues of material fact existed regarding testimony that an original will had been altered, yet no changed will was ever produced, and that all parties agreed to abide by deceased's wishes, but there was some disagreement as to what those wishes were. Further, appellant's reliance on the promise to abide resulted in potential injury and invoked the doctrine of promissory estoppel, precluding summary judgment. Tope v. Taylor, 224 M 131, 728 P2d 789, 43 St. Rep. 2074 (1986).

72-3-103. Necessity of appointment for administration.

Official Comments

This section makes it clear that appointment by a public official is required before one can acquire the status of personal representative. "Qualification" is dealt with in [72-3-512]. "Letters" are the subject of section [72-1-204]. Section [72-3-601] is also related, since it deals with the time of accrual of duties and powers of personal representatives.

See [72-3-122] for the time limit on requests for appointment of personal representatives.

72-3-104. Claims against decedent — necessity of administration.

Official Comments

This and sections of Part 8 [Chapter 3], are designed to force creditors of decedents to assert their claims against duly appointed personal representatives. Creditors of a decedent are interested persons who may seek the appointment of a personal representative ([72-3-201 through 72-3-205]). If no appointment is granted to another within 45 days after the decedent's death, a creditor may be eligible to be appointed if other persons with priority decline to serve or are ineligible ([72-3-501 through 72-3-505]). But, if a personal representative has been appointed and has closed the estate under circumstances which leave a creditor's claim unbarred, the creditor is permitted to enforce his claims against distributees, as well as against the personal representative if any duty owed to creditors under [72-3-808 or 72-3-1004] has been breached. The methods for closing estates are outlined in [72-3-1001 through 72-3-1004]. Termination of appointment under [72-3-521, et seq.] may occur though the estate is not closed and so may be irrelevant to the question of whether creditors may pursue distributees.

Deceased Defendant in Tort Action — Unmarried Without Children or Estate — Action Against Parents as Successors in Interest: Where the defendant in a tort action was deceased, it was not error to dismiss the deceased and his estate and substitute his parents as successors in interest to the deceased. The deceased was unmarried and childless at the time of his death and left no estate; thus, there was no representative, and under 27-1-501 his parents, as successors in interest, are the proper parties. Such substitution is permitted under former Rule 17(a), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), without adversely affecting any applicable Statute of Limitations. Simonson v. Hospital Expenses: In action to recover unpaid hospital expenses from decedent's heirs at law who had distributed assets of decedent's estate without having administrator appointed, Trial Court improperly granted relief to plaintiff hospital since it could not sue upon its claim until it first presented such claim to administrator; thus, proper remedy would have been for hospital to apply for letters of administration as creditor, and hospital's attempted remedy circumvented statutory priorities for payment of debts. 72-3-105. Interested persons' rights of application and petition.

Official Comments

This and other sections of [Chapter 3] contemplate a nonjudicial officer who will act on informal application and a judge who will hear and decide formal petitions. See [72-1-205] which permits the judge to perform or delegate the functions of the [clerk]. However, the primary purpose of [Chapter 3] is to describe functions to be performed by various public officials, rather than to prescribe how these responsibilities should be assigned within a given state or county. Hence, any of several alternatives to the organizational scheme assumed for purposes of this draft would be acceptable.

For example, a state might assign responsibility for maintenance of probate files and records, and for receiving and acting upon informal applications, to existing, limited power probate offices. Responsibility for hearing and deciding formal petitions would then be assigned to the court of general jurisdiction of each county or district.

If separate courts or officers are not feasible, it may be preferable to concentrate authority for allocating responsibility respecting formal and informal proceedings in the judge. To do so helps fix responsibility for the total operation of the office. This is the assumption of this draft.

It will be up to each adopting state to select the organizational arrangement which best meets its needs.

If the office with jurisdiction to hear and decide formal petitions is the county or district court of general jurisdiction, there will be little basis for objection to the broad statement of concurrent jurisdiction of this section. However, if a more specialized "estates" court is used, there may be pressure to prevent it from hearing negligence and other actions involving jury trials, even though it may be given unlimited power to decide other cases to which a personal representative is a party. A system for certifying matters involving jury trials to the general trial court could be provided, although the alternative of permitting the estates court to empanel juries where necessary might not be unworkable. In any event, the jurisdiction of the "estates" or "probate" court in regard to negligence litigation would only be concurrent with that of the general trial court. The important point is that the estates court, whatever it is called, should have unlimited power to hear and finally dispose of all matters relevant to determination of the extent of the decedent's estate and of the claims against it. The jury trial question is peripheral.

The facts fail to show any specific agreement between appellant and the decedent concerning marriage; they do not establish a continuous marital relationship and are in conflict with testimony presented by respondent. Official Comments to UPC §3-106

The language in this [section] and [UPC §3-105] which divides matters coming before the probate court between those within the court's "exclusive" jurisdiction and those within its "concurrent" jurisdiction would be inappropriate if probate matters were assigned to a branch of a single court of general jurisdiction. The Code could be adjusted to an assumption of a single court in various ways. Any adjusted version should contain a provision permitting the court to hear and settle certain kinds of matters after notice as provided in [72-1-301]. It might be suitable to combine [72-3-111(1) and 72-3-111(2)] into a single section as follows:

"The Court may hear and determine formal proceedings involving administration and distribution of decedents' estates after notice to interested persons in conformity with [72-1-301]. Persons notified are bound though less than all interested persons may have been given notice."

An adjusted version also might provide:

"Subject to general rules concerning the proper location of civil litigation and jurisdiction of persons, the Court (meaning the probate division) may hear and determine any other controversy concerning a succession or to which an estate, through a personal representative, may be a party."

The propriety of this sort of statement would depend upon whether questions of docketing and assignment, including the division of matters between coordinate branches of the Court, should be dealt with by legislation.

District Court Assuming Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Estate When Tribal Council Unequivocally Declined to Assert Subject Matter Jurisdiction — No Error: A court may take judicial notice of records of any court of this state or of any court of record of the United States or any court of record of any state of the United States. A tribal court order, though not expressly listed in the rule, is a record analogous to those listed in Rule 202(b)(6), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), and is thus law of which the Supreme Court may take judicial notice. In re Estate of Gopher, 2013 MT 264, 372 Mont. 9, 310 P.3d 521.

Matters Involving Prior Accounting Merged in Final Account: In response to the personal representative's argument that the court had no jurisdiction over matters handled during the administration of the estate that were not included in the order issued prior to the final account, the Supreme Court held that in any supervised administration, the court is given continuing authority in a single in rem proceeding to secure the complete administration of the estate until the entry of an order approving distribution and discharging the personal representative. The matters involving the prior accounting were merged in the final account, and the court had jurisdiction over them. In re Estate of Barber, 239 M 129, 779 P2d 477, 46 St. Rep. 1565 (1989).

State Probate Jurisdiction of Federal Claim — Homestead Exemption — Priority of Liens: Creditor obtained a default judgment in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York against an Alaska resident and attempted to execute on property in Montana that had subsequently come under Montana's exclusive probate jurisdiction. While the federal court retained jurisdiction over claims impacting the estate, the court could not seize and control property in the possession of the state probate court. It was within the jurisdiction of the state court to determine that the real property was subject to family protection allowances and exempt from execution. Although the lien was attached prior to debtor's death, the lien was extinguished upon the exercise of the family protection allowances, and the homestead allowance was exempt from and had priority over all other claims against the estate. In re Estate of Wilhelm, 233 M 255, 760 P2d 718, 45 St. Rep. 1468 (1988).

Probate Court's Jurisdiction Over Title to Real Property: Weeks after executing a will identical to her husband's, leaving their property to each other or to the husband's heirs, the decedent executed a new will naming a personal representative of her estate and giving him full power of attorney. Shortly before decedent's death, her personal representative transferred part of decedent's real property to her heirs. Husband's conservator sought to set aside the conveyances and remove decedent's personal representative. The District Court denied conservator's motion for summary judgment and determined that while sitting in probate, it lacked the requisite jurisdiction to determine title to real property. The Supreme Court affirmed. In Montana, title to real property, whether determined incidentally or intentionally, must be resolved in proper proceedings instituted for that purpose. In re Estate of Thomas, 216 M 87, 699 P2d 1046, 42 St. Rep. 662 (1985).

Jurisdiction to Determine Validity of Will Prior to Death: The Courts have no power to pass on the validity of the will of a living person. Colbo v. Coty, 184 M 72, 601 P2d 697 (1979).

Testamentary Trustee's Duty to Make Account: Under 72-12-101 (now repealed), a testamentary trustee must account to the District Court sitting in probate, covering all his acts as trustee under the will, the method thereby provided being exclusive; the will governs the trusteeship and the time for its determination. Montgomery v. Gilbert, 111 M 250, 108 P2d 616 (1940).

Federal Court Without Jurisdiction: Federal Court was without jurisdiction to set aside decree of Probate Court of state when law provided ample means for revision and correction of probate decrees by Probate Courts themselves. Montgomery v. Gilbert, 77 F2d 39 (9th Cir. 1935).

Jurisdiction of District Court:

The District Court, sitting in probate in a proceeding by testamentary trustees seeking settlement of their accounts, has the same general jurisdiction and powers as are exercised by a Court of Equity over trusts. In re Harper's Estate, 98 M 356, 40 P2d 51 (1934).

Section 72-12-101 (now repealed) confers exclusive jurisdiction upon the District Court when sitting as a Probate Court to determine whether the purpose of the testamentary trust has been accomplished, wherever it has acquired jurisdiction of the estate by probate of the will which has created a trust to continue after final distribution. Philbrick v. Am. Bank & Trust Co., 58 M 376, 193 P 59 (1920).

72-3-112. Venue for estate proceedings.

Official Comments

Sections [72-1-203 and 72-3-112] cover the subject of venue for estate proceedings. Sections [72-3-114, 72-3-201 through 72-3-205, 72-3-212, 72-3-213, and 72-3-224] also may be relevant.

Provisions for transfer of venue appear in [72-1-203].

The interplay of these several sections may be illustrated best by examples.

(1) A formal probate or appointment proceeding is initiated in A County. Interested persons who believe that venue is in B County rather than A County must raise their question about venue in A County, because [72-1-203] gives the Court in which the proceeding is first commenced authority to resolve disputes over venue. If the Court in A County erroneously determines that it has venue, the remedy is by appeal.

(2) An informal probate or appointment application is filed and granted without notice in A County. If interested persons wish to challenge the registrar's determination of venue, they may not simply file a formal proceeding in the county of their choice and thus force the proponent in the prior proceeding to debate the question of venue in their county, [72-3-112(2)] locates the venue of any subsequent proceeding where the first proceeding occurred. The function of [(2)] is obvious when one thinks of subsequent proceedings as those which relate to claims, or accounts, or to efforts to control a personal representative. It is less obvious when it seems to locate the forum for squabbles over venue at the place accepting the first informal application. Still, the applicant seeking an informal order must be careful about the statements he makes in his application because he may be charged with perjury under [72-1-301] if he is deliberately inaccurate. Moreover, the registrar must be satisfied that the allegations in the application support a finding of venue. [Section 72-3-112(3)] provides a remedy for one who is upset about the venue-locating impact of a prior order in an informal proceeding and who does not wish to engage in full litigation about venue in the forum chosen by the other interested person unless he is forced to do so. Using it, he may succeed in getting the A County Court to transfer the proceedings to the county of his choice. He would be well advised to initiate formal proceedings if he gets the chance, for if he relies on informal proceedings, he, too, may be "bumped" if the judge in B County agrees with some movant that venue was not in B County.

(3) If the decedent's domicile was not in the state, venue is proper under [72-3-112 and 72-1-203] in any county where he had assets.

One contemplating starting administration because of the presence of local assets should have several other sections of the Code in mind. First, by use of the recognition provisions in [Chapter 4], it may be possible to avoid administration in any state other than that in which the decedent was domiciled. Second, [72-3-501 through 72-3-508] may apply to give priority for local appointment to the representative appointed at domicile. Third, under [72-3-224], informal appointment proceedings in this state will be dismissed if it is known that a personal representative has been previously appointed at domicile.

District Court Assuming Subject Matter Jurisdiction Over Estate When Tribal Council Unequivocally Declined to Assert Subject Matter Jurisdiction — No Error: A court may take judicial notice of records of any court of this state or of any court of record of the United States or any court of record of any state of the United States. A tribal court order, though not expressly listed in the rule, is a record analogous to those listed in Rule 202(b)(6), M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), and is thus law of which the Supreme Court may take judicial notice. In re Estate of Gopher, 2013 MT 264, 372 Mont. 9, 310 P.3d 521.

No Requirement That Decedent's Montana Property Have Significant Connection to Montana — Venue in Montana County Proper: Strange died in Arizona and never resided in Montana but had periodically visited his son in Billings and had left a small amount of property of little value with the son. The son also managed a small investment account in Strange's name with a company in Massachusetts. When Strange died, the son applied for informal probate and for appointment as personal representative in Montana, having been named as a corepresentative with his brother. Strange's wife moved to dismiss the application, arguing that the District Court lacked both venue and jurisdiction. The court concluded that it had jurisdiction over the son, but that venue in Montana was not proper because Strange's Montana assets did not establish a significant connection to Montana, so the motion to dismiss the application was granted. The son appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. There is no "single forum" requirement under the Uniform Probate Code (UPC). Rather, the UPC allows for an initial filing in Montana if a decedent owned property here, followed by ancillary probate proceedings in other jurisdictions when necessary. The probate venue statutes do not require that a decedent have a certain type or amount of property in Montana, but rather provide that venue is proper in any county where the decedent had assets. Regardless of whether Strange's property was de minimis, the District Court should have concluded that venue was proper in Yellowstone County because there was no evidence that Strange had property elsewhere in Montana, so dismissal of the son's application on venue grounds was reversible error. In re Estate of Strange, 2008 MT 158, 343 M 296, 184 P3d 1029 (2008).

Land Below High-Water Mark of Flathead Lake Tribal Property Not Subject to Distribution by Estate: When she died, Hobbs owned property on the south shore of Flathead Lake. Her will designated that three nieces divide one parcel of about 1 acre above the high-water mark and that a fourth niece and her husband, the Conrads, receive an adjacent 1.9-acre parcel from the high-water mark inland. A survey established the boundary between the parcels, but did not include any land below the high-water mark to the meander line of the lake. The District Court approved the survey, distributed the property, and closed the estate. The parties later became involved in a dispute over zoning and building regulations. The personal representative petitioned to reopen the estate for the purpose of filing a corrected survey and to distribute the portion of land lying below the high-water mark to the meander line, thereby increasing the acreage of both lots. The personal representative presented exhibits and affidavits verifying that Hobbs had paid taxes on the land out to the meander line. The Conrads objected on grounds that Hobbs's will specifically left land above the high-water mark and that because the estate did not own the land below the high-water mark, it could not be distributed to anyone. Nevertheless, the District Court approved the corrected survey and distributed the land below the high-water mark to the meander line between the heirs. The Supreme Court noted that the bed and banks of Flathead Lake within Indian reservation boundaries are held by the United States in trust for the tribes, and that any private title to Flathead Lake shore property extends only to the high-water mark. The District Court erroneously distributed the land below the high-water mark to the meander line, because the court did not have jurisdiction to distribute the tribal trust property. The estate could not distribute property that it did not own. In re Estate of Hobbs, 2002 MT 85, 309 M 308, 46 P3d 594 (2002), following Mont. Power Co. v. Rochester, 127 F2d 189 (9th Cir. 1942), and Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Reservation v. Namen, 665 F2d 951 (9th Cir. 1982).

72-3-113. Rules for determining location of property.

Official Comments

Sections [72-1-203 and 72-3-112] cover the subject of venue for estate proceedings. Sections [72-3-114, 72-3-201 through 72-3-205, 72-3-212, 72-3-213, and 72-3-224] also may be relevant.

Provisions for transfer of venue appear in [72-1-203].

The interplay of these several sections may be illustrated best by examples.

(1) A formal probate or appointment proceeding is initiated in A County. Interested persons who believe that venue is in B County rather than A County must raise their question about venue in A County, because [72-1-203] gives the Court in which the proceeding is first commenced authority to resolve disputes over venue. If the Court in A County erroneously determines that it has venue, the remedy is by appeal.

(2) An informal probate or appointment application is filed and granted without notice in A County. If interested persons wish to challenge the registrar's determination of venue, they may not simply file a formal proceeding in the county of their choice and thus force the proponent in the prior proceeding to debate the question of venue in their county, [72-3-112(2)] locates the venue of any subsequent proceeding where the first proceeding occurred. The function of [(2)] is obvious when one thinks of subsequent proceedings as those which relate to claims, or accounts, or to efforts to control a personal representative. It is less obvious when it seems to locate the forum for squabbles over venue at the place accepting the first informal application. Still, the applicant seeking an informal order must be careful about the statements he makes in his application because he may be charged with perjury under [72-1-301] if he is deliberately inaccurate. Moreover, the registrar must be satisfied that the allegations in the application support a finding of venue. [Section 72-3-112(3)] provides a remedy for one who is upset about the venue-locating impact of a prior order in an informal proceeding and who does not wish to engage in full litigation about venue in the forum chosen by the other interested person unless he is forced to do so. Using it, he may succeed in getting the A County Court to transfer the proceedings to the county of his choice. He would be well advised to initiate formal proceedings if he gets the chance, for if he relies on informal proceedings, he, too, may be "bumped" if the judge in B County agrees with some movant that venue was not in B County.

(3) If the decedent's domicile was not in the state, venue is proper under [72-3-112 and 72-1-203] in any county where he had assets.

One contemplating starting administration because of the presence of local assets should have several other sections of the Code in mind. Second, [72-3-501 through 72-3-508] may apply to give priority for local appointment to the representative appointed at domicile. 72-3-114. Conflicting claim as to domicile in another state.

Official Comments

This section is designed to reduce the possibility that conflicting findings of domicile in two or more states may result in inconsistent administration and distribution of parts of the same estate. Section [72-3-312] dealing with the effect of adjudications in other states concerning testacy supports the same general purpose to use domiciliary law to unify succession of property located in different states.

Whether testate or intestate, succession should follow the presumed wishes of the decedent whenever possible. Unless a decedent leaves a separate will for the portion of his estate located in each different state, it is highly unlikely that he would want different portions of his estate subject to different rules simply because courts reach conflicting conclusions concerning his domicile. It is pointless to debate whether he would prefer one or the other of the conflicting rules, when the paramount inference is that the decedent would prefer that his estate be unified under either rule rather than wasted in litigation.

The section adds very little to existing law. If a previous estate proceeding in State A has determined that the decedent was a domiciliary of A, persons who were personally before the court in A would be precluded by the principles of res judicata or collateral estoppel (and full faith and credit) from relitigating the issue of domicile in a later proceeding in State B. Probably, it would not matter in this setting that domicile was a jurisdictional fact. Stoll v. Gottlieb (1938) 305 U.S. 165, 83 L.Ed. 104, 59 S.Ct. 134. Even if the parties to a present proceeding were not personally before the court in an earlier proceeding in State A involving the same decedent, the prior judgment would be binding as to property subject to the power of the courts in A, on persons to whom due notice of the proceeding was given. Riley v. New York Trust Co. (1942) 315 U.S. 343, 86 L.Ed. 885, 62 S.Ct. 608; Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank and Trust Co. (1950) 339 U.S. 306, 94 L.Ed. 865, 70 S.Ct. 652.

Where a court learns that parties before it are also parties to previously initiated litigation involving a common question, traditional judicial reluctance to deciding unnecessary questions, as well as considerations of comity, are likely to lead it to delay the local proceedings to await the result in the other court. A somewhat more troublesome question is involved when one of the parties before the local court manifests a determination not to appear personally in the prior initiated proceedings so that he can preserve his ability to litigate contested points in a more friendly, or convenient, forum. But, the need to preserve all possible advantages available to particular litigants should be subordinated to the decedent's probable wish that his estate not be wasted in unnecessary litigation. Thus, the section requires that the local claimant either initiate litigation in the forum of his choice before litigation is started somewhere else, or accept the necessity of contesting unwanted views concerning the decedent's domicile offered in litigation pending elsewhere.

It is to be noted, in this connection, that the local suitor always will have a chance to contest the question of domicile in the other state. His locally initiated proceedings may proceed to a valid judgment accepting his theory of the case unless parties who would oppose him appear and defend on the theory that the domicile question is currently being litigated elsewhere. If the litigation in the other state has proceeded to judgment, [72-3-312] rather than the instant section will govern. If this section applies, it will mean that the foreign proceedings are still pending, so that the local person's contention concerning domicile can be made therein even though until the defense of litigation elsewhere is offered in the local proceedings, he may not have been notified of the foreign proceeding.

72-3-121. Scope of proceedings when no supervised administration — proceedings independent — combination of proceedings.

Official Comments

This section and others in [Chapter 3] describe a system of administration of decedents' estates which gives interested persons control of whether matters relating to estates will become occasions for judicial orders. Sections [72-3-401 through 72-3-406] describe supervised administration, a judicial proceeding which is continuous throughout administration. It corresponds with the theory of administration of decedents' estates which prevails in many states. See, section 62, Model Probate Code. If supervised administration is not requested, persons interested in an estate may use combinations of the formal proceedings (order by judge after notice to persons concerned with the relief sought), informal proceedings (request for the limited response that nonjudicial personnel of the probate court are authorized to make in response to verified application) and filings provided in the remaining parts of [Chapter 3] to secure authority and protection needed to administer the estate. Nothing except self-interest will compel resort to the judge. When resort to the judge is necessary or desirable to resolve a dispute or to gain protection, the scope of the proceeding if not otherwise prescribed by the code is framed by the petition. The securing of necessary jurisdiction over interested persons in a formal proceeding is facilitated by [72-3-111(3) and 72-3-511]. [Sections 72-3-112 and 72-3-113] locate venue for all proceedings at the place where the first proceeding occurred.

Case Notes

Probate Court's Jurisdiction Over Title to Real Property: Weeks after executing a will identical to her husband's, leaving their property to each other or to the husband's heirs, the decedent executed a new will naming a personal representative of her estate and giving him full power of attorney. Shortly before decedent's death, her personal representative transferred part of decedent's real property to her heirs. Husband's conservator sought to set aside the conveyances and remove decedent's personal representative. The District Court denied conservator's motion for summary judgment and determined that while sitting in probate, it lacked the requisite jurisdiction to determine title to real property. The Supreme Court affirmed. In Montana, title to real property, whether determined incidentally or intentionally, must be resolved in proper proceedings instituted for that purpose. In re Estate of Thomas, 216 M 87, 699 P2d 1046, 42 St. Rep. 662 (1985).

72-3-122. Time limit on probate, testacy, and appointment proceedings — exceptions.

Official Comments

This section establishes a basic limitation period of three years within which it may be determined whether a decedent left a will and to commence administration of his estate. But, an exception assures that heirs will have at least one year after an informal probate to initiate a contest and to secure administration of the estate as intestate.

If no will is probated within three years from death, the section has the effect of making the assumption of intestacy final. If a will has been informally probated within the period, the section has the effect of making the informal probate conclusive after three years or within twelve months from informal probate, if later. Heirs or devisees can protect themselves against change within the three years of assumption concerning whether the decedent left a will or died intestate by bringing a formal proceeding shortening the period to that described in [72-3-317 and 72-3-318].

A personal representative who has been appointed under an assumption concerning testacy which may be reversed in the three-year period if there has been no formal proceeding, is protected by [72-3-611]. It relieves a personal representative of liability for surcharge for certain distributions made pursuant to an informally probated will, or under authority of informally issued letters of administration. Distributees who receive an estate distributed before the three-year period expires where there has been no formal determination accelerating the time for certainty, remain potentially liable to persons determined to be entitled by formal proceedings instituted within the basic period under [72-3-906 and 72-3-1013].

Purchasers from personal representatives and distributees may be protected without regard to whether the three-year period has run. See [72-3-613 and 72-3-907].

All creditors' claims are barred after three years from death. See [72-3-803(1)(b)]. Because of this, and since any possibility that letters may be issued at any time would be seen as a "cloud" on the title of heirs or devisees otherwise secure under [72-3-101], the three-year statute of limitations applies to bar appointment of a personal representative after the basic period has passed. Section 83 of the Model Probate Code barred probate and administration after five years, and other statutes imposing time limits on these proceedings are cited at pp. 307-310 of the Model Probate Code. A qualification covers the situation where a closed administration is sought to be reopened to administer after-discovered assets. See [72-3-1016]. If there has been no probate or appointment within three years, and if either exception to [72-3-102] applies, devisees under a late-discovered will may use a will to establish their title. But, they may not secure probate of the will, nor may they obtain appointment of a personal representative. The same pattern applies to heirs who, in a case where there has been no administration, discover assets after the three-year period has run. such persons will not be able to protect purchasers with the ease of those interested in an estate where a personal representative has been appointed.

The basic premise underlying all of these time provisions is that interested persons who want to assume the risks implicit in the three-year period of limitations should be provided legitimate means by which they can do so. At the same time, parties should be afforded ample opportunity for earlier protection if they want it.

1995 Amendment: Chapter 592 substituted (1)(d) concerning commencement of appointment proceeding and (1)(e) concerning commencement of formal testacy proceeding within 3 years for former text that read: "(d) if no proceeding concerning the succession or administration of the estate has occurred within 3 years after the decedent's death, a formal testacy proceeding may be commenced at any time thereafter for the sole purpose of establishing a devise of property which the devisee or his successors and assigns possessed in accordance with the will or property which was not possessed or claimed by anyone by virtue of the decedent's title during the 3-year period, and the order of the court must be limited to that property"; and made minor changes in style.

1989 Amendment: Inserted (1)(d) relating to formal testacy proceeding to establish devise of property possessed in accordance with a will or not claimed during 3-year period; in (2), after "intestate", deleted "nor do they limit the right of interested persons to commence informal probate or appointment proceedings or formal testacy or appointment proceedings at any time after 3 years from the decedent's death if there have been no previous formal or informal probate or appointment proceedings commenced in respect of that decedent"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1989 Editorial Comment: This change results from an amendment proposed by the Joint Editorial Board of the national Uniform Probate Code in 1987. Subsection (1)(d) provides a statutory procedure for obtaining a court order confirming a devise of property by an unprobated will after the 3-year time limit for probating a will and opening an administration has passed. The possibility of a valid devise by an unprobated will arises because of exceptions provided in 72-3-102.

Additionally, subsection (2) was modified to bring it into conformance with the national Uniform Probate Code in another respect. Former Montana law had a broad exception to the 3-year rule if no previous formal or informal probate or appointment proceeding had occurred. This Montana exception conflicted with other provisions, most notably 72-3-317(3)(b). The 1989 change eliminates this former Montana exception and thereby eliminates the conflict. See corresponding national Uniform Probate Code section 3-108.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Statute of Limitations Barring Probate Based on Equitable Estoppel: Where the decedent had executed a will leaving most of his estate to the petitioner but had died allegedly intestate, the District Court did not err in holding that a petition for the probate of the decedent's will filed 7 years after his death was barred by the Statute of Limitations, even though the decedent's wife had made oral representations to the petitioner leading the petitioner to wrongly assume that his share of the estate had not been changed. The Statute of Limitations is clear and unambiguous, and the comments to the Uniform Probate Code from which the statute is taken also show that there are to be no exceptions for late filings of petitions based on facts constituting collateral estoppel. Neither the cases cited by the petitioner, which applied to general statutes of limitations, nor the principles of law and equity contained in 72-1-104 convince the court otherwise. 72-3-132. Procedure for securing court approval of compromise.

Official Comments

This section and the one preceding it outline a procedure which may be initiated by competent parties having beneficial interests in a decedent's estate as a means of resolving controversy concerning the estate. If all competent persons with beneficial interests or claims which might be affected by the proposal and parents property representing interests of their children concur, a settlement scheme differing from that otherwise governing the devolution may be substituted. The procedure for securing representation of minors and unknown or missing persons with interests must be followed. See [72-1-303]. The ultimate control of the question of whether the substitute proposal shall be accepted is with the court which must find: "that the contest or controversy is in good faith and that the effect of the agreement upon the interests of parties represented by fiduciaries is just and reasonable."

The thrust of the procedure is to put the authority for initiating settlement proposals with the persons who have beneficial interests in the estate, and to prevent executors and testamentary trustees from vetoing any such proposal. The only reason for approving a scheme of devolution which differs from that framed by the testator or the statutes governing intestacy is to prevent dissipation of the estate in wasteful litigation. Because executors and trustees may have an interest in fees and commissions which they might earn through efforts to carry out testator's intention, the judgment of the court is substituted for that of such fiduciaries in appropriate cases. A controversy which the court may find to be in good faith, as well as concurrence of all beneficially interested and competent persons and parent-representatives provide prerequisites which should prevent the procedure from being abused. Thus, the procedure does not threaten the planning of a testator who plans and drafts with sufficient clarity and completeness to eliminate the possibility of good faith controversy concerning the meaning and legality of his plan.

Informal Probate and Appointment Proceedings

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Conversion of Probate Proceeding From Informal to Formal Proceeding and Effect of Failure to Give Proper Notices: When the personal representative of an estate in informal proceedings petitioned for judicial approval of his final account and for the settlement and distribution of the estate, the proceeding was converted into a formal proceeding for those purposes. The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to formal proceedings. The bank, which was a creditor of the estate and filed a claim against the estate, was entitled to notice of the hearing on the petition and entitled to an opportunity to appear and contest. Because the notice was not given, the court's decree was void and reversed as to the bank. The bank was also entitled to notice of the entry of the formal estate decree, and because that notice was not given, the 30-day time period for the bank to appeal did not run and the bank's appeal, filed after that period, was timely. In re Estate of Spencer, 2002 MT 304, 313 M 40, 59 P3d 1160 (2002).

Rules of Civil Procedure Not Applicable to Informal Probate Proceeding: Former Rule 81(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), does not interject the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure into other statutory schemes that provide different procedural requirements and thus does not make the rules applicable to informal probate proceedings. In re Estate of Spencer, 2002 MT 304, 313 M 40, 59 P3d 1160 (2002). See Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. v. Kaml, 2008 MT 153, 343 M 240, 184 P3d 296 (2008), in which it was clarified that the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to formal probate proceedings.

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

"Penal Statute" — Not Applicable to Sale in Good Faith: Section 72-12-601 (now repealed) was a "penal statute" and would not be construed as subjecting to such liability one selling property in good faith, without intent to deprive decedent's estate of value thereof, as in case of sale in good faith under power in chattel mortgage before appointment of administrator of deceased mortgagor's estate. Regional Ag. Credit Corp. of Spokane v. Chapman, 129 F2d 435 (9th Cir. 1942), reversing 38 F. Supp. 604 (D.C. Mont. 1941).

Jurisdiction of Court:

An order of the District Court sitting in probate made pursuant to a citation to a former administrator under 72-12-601 through 72-12-603 (now repealed) to appear and be examined concerning his disposition of personal property belonging to the estate could not go further than require a disclosure to be used in an action pending or to be brought in behalf of the estate; it could not finally adjudicate any right. Baker v. Hanson, 72 M 22, 231 P 902 (1924).

Funds of an estate expended by the administrator for attorney's fees were not recoverable on the theory that the attorney has property of the estate in his possession for which he could be called to account under 72-12-602 through 72-12-604 (now repealed). The jurisdiction of the Court sitting in probate, under these provisions, extended no further than to require the accused to appear and submit to an examination, it having no power to adjudge rights which may be asserted or involved. State ex rel. Cohen v. District Court, 53 M 210, 162 P 1053 (1917).

Authority of Court Limited: The order authorized by 72-12-603 (now repealed) could go no further than to require a disclosure that could be used in an action pending or to be brought in behalf of the estate. In re Roberts' Estate, 48 M 40, 135 P 909 (1913).

Nature of Proceedings: The provisions of 72-12-602 through 72-12-604 (now repealed) were remedial in their nature and conferred power upon the Court, when sitting in probate proceedings, analogous in its scope and object to the power of a Court in chancery upon bills of discovery. The proceeding authorized by them was of an ancillary character, however, and was confined to securing a discovery of evidence upon which the administrator or executor may recover assets belonging to the estate which would otherwise be lost. In re Roberts' Estate, 48 M 40, 135 P 909 (1913).

Petition for Citation — Sufficiency: A petition by an administrator for a citation requiring certain persons to appear and be examined was fatally defective in failing to allege that any of the persons cited had in their possession or had knowledge of any deeds or papers containing evidences of the right, title, or interest of the decedent to the property described in the petition. State ex rel. Chapin v. District Court, 35 M 318, 89 P 62 (1907).

Case Notes

Objection to Appointment of Personal Representative Not Allowed: Reeves argued that the lower court had improperly appointed her brother personal representative for their father's estate because he had not approached Reeves and had her agree to his nomination as personal representative. The Supreme Court refused to rule on the issue of whether the lower court had improperly appointed the personal representative because in an informal proceeding a person can only petition to have the personal representative removed for cause and cannot object to the appointment of the personal representative. This provision assumes that there will be a single office within each county or other area of jurisdiction of the probate court which can be checked for demands for notice relating to estates in that area. 72-3-212. Informal probate — clerk to make findings.

Official Comments

The purpose of [72-3-212 and 72-3-213(1), (2), (3), (4)] is to permit informal probate of a will which, from a simple attestation clause, appears to have been executed properly. It is not necessary that the will be notarized as is the case with "pre-proved" wills in some states. If a will is "pre-proved" as provided in [Chapter 2], it will, of course, "appear" to be well executed and include the recital necessary for easy probate here. If the instrument does not contain a proper recital by attesting witnesses, it may be probated informally on the strength of an affidavit by a person who can say what occurred at the time of execution.

Except where probate or its equivalent has occurred previously in another state informal probate is available only where an original will exists and is available to be filed. Lost or destroyed wills must be established in formal proceedings. See [72-3-301]. Pendency of formal probate proceedings blocks under [72-3-302 through 72-3-304].

The purpose of this section is to recognize that the [clerk] should have some authority to deny probate to an instrument even though all stated statutory requirements may be said to have been met. Denial of an application for informal probate cannot be appealed. 72-3-215. Clerk to issue statement of informal probate — effect — procedural defect not to void probate.

Official Comments

Model Probate Code Sections 68 and 70 contemplate probate by judicial order as the only method of validating a will. This "umbrella" section and the sections it refers to describe an alternative procedure called "informal probate." It is a statement of probate by the [clerk]. A succeeding section describes cases in which informal probate is to be denied. "Informal probate" is subjected to safeguards which seem appropriate to a transaction which has the effect of making a will operative and which may be the only official reaction concerning its validity. "Informal probate," it is hoped, will serve to keep the simple will which generates no controversy from becoming involved in truly judicial proceedings. The procedure is very much like "probate in common form" as it is known in England and some states.

Official Comments

Sections [72-3-701 and 72-3-702] make it clear that a special administrator may be appointed to conserve the estate during any period of delay in probate of a will. Even though the will has not been approved, [72-3-701] gives priority for appointment as special administrator to the person nominated by the will which has been offered for probate. [Sections 72-3-501 through 72-3-508 govern] priorities for appointment. Under it, one or more of the same class may receive priority through agreement of the others.

The last sentence of [72-3-223(1)] is designed to prevent informal appointment of a personal representative in this state when a personal representative has been previously appointed at the decedent's domicile. 72-3-301. Petition for formal testacy or appointment — contents — last will.

Official Comments

If a petitioner seeks an adjudication that a decedent died intestate, he is required also to obtain a finding of heirship. A formal proceeding which is to be effective on all interested persons must follow reasonable notice to such persons. It seems desirable to force the proceedings through a formal determination of heirship because the finding will bolster the order, as well as preclude later questions that might arise at the time of distribution.

Unless an order of supervised administration is sought, there will be little occasion for a formal order concerning appointment of a personal representative which does not also adjudicate the testacy status of the decedent. If a formal order of appointment is sought because of disagreement over who should serve, [72-3-319] describes the appropriate procedure.

The words "otherwise unavailable" in [the last paragraph of subsection (1)] are not intended to be read restrictively.

Section [72-1-206] expresses the verification requirement which applies to all documents filed with the courts.

Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Promissory Estoppel Requiring Reversal of Summary Judgment — No Will Produced: The Supreme Court reversed summary judgment, finding that genuine issues of material fact existed regarding testimony that an original will had been altered, yet no changed will was ever produced, and that all parties agreed to abide by deceased's wishes, but there was some disagreement as to what those wishes were. Further, appellant's reliance on the promise to abide resulted in potential injury and invoked the doctrine of promissory estoppel, precluding summary judgment. Tope v. Taylor, 224 M 131, 728 P2d 789, 43 St. Rep. 2074 (1986).

Lost Will: Where three witnesses testified as to contents of a lost will but only the attorney who prepared it had actually seen the will and could recall with specificity its provisions, and where there was testimony that testator intended to change his will, the presumption of destruction with intent to revoke was not overcome, and the will was not entitled to probate. In re Estate of Spear, 169 M 121, 546 P2d 257 (1976).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Lost Will: Those seeking to introduce a lost will had burden of proof that will was actually in existence or in existence in contemplation of law at time of decedent's death; if the will was last seen in custody of deceased, petitioners were required to present clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence to overcome the rebuttable presumption that deceased destroyed the will. In re Estate of Newman, 164 M 15, 518 P2d 800 (1974).

72-3-302. Formal testacy proceedings — nature — how and when commenced.

Official Comments

The word "testacy" is used to refer to the general status of a decedent in regard to wills. Thus, it embraces the possibility that he left no will, any question of which of several instruments is his valid will, and the possibility that he died intestate as to a part of his estate, and testate as to the balance. See [72-1-103(44)].

The formal proceedings described by [72-3-302 through 72-3-304] may be: (i) an original proceeding to secure "solemn form" probate of a will; (ii) a proceeding to secure "solemn form" probate to corroborate a previous informal probate; (iii) a proceeding to block a pending application for informal probate, or to prevent an informal application from occurring thereafter; (iv) a proceeding to contradict a previous order of informal probate; (v) a proceeding to secure a declaratory judgment of intestacy and a determination of heirs in a case where no will has been offered. If a pending informal application for probate is blocked by a formal proceeding, the applicant may withdraw his application and avoid the obligation of going forward with prima facie proof of due execution. See [72-3-310 and 72-3-311]. The petitioner in the formal proceedings may be content to let matters stop there, or he can frame his petition, or amend, so that he may secure an adjudication of intestacy which would prevent further activity concerning the will.

If a personal representative has been appointed prior to the commencement of a formal testacy proceeding, the petitioner must request confirmation of the appointment to indicate that he does not want the testacy proceeding to have any effect on the duties of the personal representative, or refrain from seeking confirmation, in which case, the proceeding suspends the distributive power of the previously appointed representative. If nothing else is requested or decided in respect to the personal representative, his distributive powers are restored at the completion of the proceeding, with [72-3-610] directing him to abide by the will. "Distribute" and "distribution" do no include payment of claims. See [72-1-103(10), 72-3-808, and 72-3-901].

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Allegations of Previous Will — Sufficient Basis for Standing to Challenge Probate and Agreements: A son filed an objection to the probate of his father's 2009 will, claiming that his father lacked testamentary capacity and that a previous will, under which he would receive a larger portion of the estate, should instead be probated. The son also challenged agreements to sell portions of the estate's property. The estate filed a motion to dismiss the son's objection, which the District Court granted, concluding that the son did not have standing because he had not produced the previous will. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the son was an "interested party" and thus had standing simply by alleging the existence of a previous will. Accordingly, the Supreme Court reversed and ordered the District Court to allow discovery regarding the existence of a prior will. In re Estate of Glennie, 2011 MT 291, 362 Mont. 508, 265 P.3d 654.

Promissory Note — Undue Influence in Making: A promissory note was executed to appellant by the deceased with whom he had a close confidential relationship. The decedent's age caused her to rely quite heavily on appellant in running her farm and made her more susceptible to his influence. The amount of the note was also quite large in relation to the alleged consideration. Under the five-factor test enumerated in Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978), there was substantial evidence to support a finding of undue influence in the creation of the note. Heintz v. Vestal, 185 M 233, 605 P2d 606, 37 St. Rep. 99 (1980).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

"Interested Person" Defined — Executor of Prior Will as Lacking Standing to Contest Subsequent Will: Under former law, in defining "interested person" the Court held where the dispositive provisions of two wills are identical, the only difference being that the subsequent will nominated a different executor, the prior nominated executor lacks standing to contest the subsequent will where his only interest is in probating of the prior will, as he will not suffer any detriment of a recognized interest from the probating of the subsequent will. In re Estate of Fender, 168 M 200, 541 P2d 784 (1975).

Hearing Required: Issues of fact affecting the validity of a will are to be tried; where proponent of a will submitted an affidavit that no hearing had been held, and the record contained no minute entry indicating that a hearing had been held, the Appeals Court would not indulge in the presumption that proceedings had been held. In re Craddock's Estate, 166 M 68, 530 P2d 483 (1975).

Second Hearing: Proponent of holographic will was entitled to full hearing before a substituted judge, after the original petition for probate of will had been heard by a judge who was subsequently disqualified and no rulings had been made on the merits and no transcript of the first hearing had been prepared. In re Craddock's Estate, 166 M 68, 530 P2d 483 (1975).

The petitioner in the formal proceedings may be content to let matters stop there, or he can frame his petition, or amend, so that he may secure an adjudication of intestacy which would prevent further activity concerning the will.

If a personal representative has been appointed prior to the commencement of a formal testacy proceeding, the petitioner must request confirmation of the appointment to indicate that he does not want the testacy proceeding to have any effect on the duties of the personal representative, or refrain from seeking confirmation, in which case, the proceeding suspends the distributive power of the previously appointed representative. If nothing else is requested or decided in respect to the personal representative, his distributive powers are restored at the completion of the proceeding, with [72-3-610] directing him to abide by the will. "Distribute" and "distribution" do not include payment of claims. See [72-1-103(10), 72-3-808, and 72-3-901].

72-3-304. Effect of formal proceeding on power of informally appointed personal representative.

Official Comments

The word "testacy" is used to refer to the general status of a decedent in regard to wills. Thus, it embraces the possibility that he left no will, any question of which of several instruments is his valid will, and the possibility that he died intestate as to a part of his estate, and testate as to the balance. See [72-1-103(44)].

The formal proceedings described by [72-3-302 through 72-3-304] may be: (i) an original proceeding to secure "solemn form" probate of a will; (ii) a proceeding to secure "solemn form" probate to corroborate a previous informal probate; (iii) a proceeding to block a pending application for informal probate, or to prevent an informal application from occurring thereafter; (iv) a proceeding to contradict a previous order of informal probate; (v) a proceeding to secure a declaratory judgment of intestacy and a determination of heirs in a case where no will has been offered. If a pending informal application for probate is blocked by a formal proceeding, the applicant may withdraw his application and avoid the obligation of going forward with prima facie proof of due execution. See [72-3-310 and 72-3-311]. The petitioner in the formal proceedings may be content to let matters stop there, or he can frame his petition, or amend, so that he may secure an adjudication of intestacy which would prevent further activity concerning the will.

72-3-305. Notice of hearing on petition for formal testacy proceeding.

Official Comments

Provisions governing the time and manner of notice required by [72-3-305 and 72-3-306] and other sections in the Code are contained in [72-1-301].

The provisions concerning search for the alleged decedent are derived from Model Probate Code, Section 71.

Testacy proceedings involve adjudications that no will exists. Unknown wills as well as any which are brought to the attention of the Court are affected. Persons with potential interests under unknown wills have the notice afforded by death and by publication. Notice requirements extend also to persons named in a will that is known to the petitioners to exist, irrespective of whether it has been probated or offered for formal or informal probate, if their position may be affected adversely by granting of the petition. But, a rigid statutory requirement relating to such persons might cause undue difficulty. Hence, the statute merely provides that the petitioner may notify other persons.

It would not be inconsistent with [72-3-305 and 72-3-306] for the Court to adopt rules designed to make petitioners exercise reasonable diligence in searching for as yet undiscovered wills.

Section [72-3-111(2)] provides that an order is valid as to those given notice, though less than all interested persons were given notice. Section [72-3-1002] provides a means of extending a testacy order to previously unnotified persons in connection with a formal closing.

Named Devisees Entitled to Notice of Entry of Order in a Formal Probate Proceeding: Named devisees are "interested persons" under 72-1-103 and must be given notice of the initiation of formal probate proceedings under 72-3-305, which indicates that the Legislature intended named devisees to be parties to formal probate proceedings, and as such they are entitled to notice of the entry of an order in the proceeding as required by former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. 72-3-307. Hearings and proof in uncontested cases.

Official Comments

For various reasons, attorneys handling estates may want interested persons to be gathered for a hearing before the court of a formal allowance of the will. The court is not required to conduct a hearing, however.

If no hearing is required, uncontested formal probates can be completed on the strength of the pleadings. There is no good reason for summoning attestors when no interested person wants to force the production of evidence on a formal probate. Moreover, there seems to be no valid distinction between litigation to establish a will, and other civil litigation, in respect to whether the court may enter judgment on the pleadings.

72-3-308. Written objections to probate.

Official Comments

Model Probate Code section 72 requires a contestant to file written objections to any will he would oppose. The provision prevents potential confusion as to who must file what pleading that can arise from the notion that the probate of a will is in rem. The petition for probate of a revoking will is sufficient warning to proponents of the revoked will.

Allegations of Previous Will — Sufficient Basis for Standing to Challenge Probate and Agreements: A son filed an objection to the probate of his father's 2009 will, claiming that his father lacked testamentary capacity and that a previous will, under which he would receive a larger portion of the estate, should instead be probated. The son also challenged agreements to sell portions of the estate's property. The estate filed a motion to dismiss the son's objection, which the District Court granted, concluding that the son did not have standing because he had not produced the previous will. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the son was an "interested party" and thus had standing simply by alleging the existence of a previous will. Accordingly, the Supreme Court reversed and ordered the District Court to allow discovery regarding the existence of a prior will. In re Estate of Glennie, 2011 MT 291, 362 Mont. 508, 265 P.3d 654.

Notice Required in Will Contests: Since this section requires parties who oppose the probate of a will to state their objection in the form of pleadings, will contests are pleadings, and all interested persons must be given notice that they had been filed as provided for in 72-1-303. In re Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

72-3-309. Testimony of attesting witnesses in contested cases — presumptions for self-proved will.

Official Comments

Model Probate Code section 76, combined with section 77, substantially unchanged. The self-proved will is described in [Chapter 2]. See [72-2-524]. The "conclusive presumption" described here would foreclose questions such as whether the witnesses signed in the presence of the testator. It would not preclude proof of undue influence, lack of testamentary capacity, revocation or any relevant proof that the testator was unaware of the contents of the document. The balance of the section is derived from Model Probate Code sections 76 and 77.

Self-Proved Will — Burden on Challenger: A self-proved will, a will that has been simultaneously executed, attested, and acknowledged by the testator and witnesses as provided in this section, may be admitted to probate without testimony of attesting witnesses. Once a duly executed will is admitted to probate, it is presumed that the testator was competent and sound of mind, and the party contesting the will bears the burden of establishing lack of validity as provided in 72-3-310. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821.

Document Signing Attested to by Only One Witness Not Duly Executed: In contested cases, the proponent of a will must establish that it has been duly executed, which includes the requirement that the document be signed by two individuals acknowledging either the signature or the will. The number of attesting witnesses who must testify in a contested will proceeding pursuant to this section is an entirely different question from whether a purported will meets the requirements for a duly executed will under 72-2-522. Here, the document was signed by only one person who witnessed the testator signing the purported will. A second signature by a notary public, who was a family friend and recognized the testator's signature but who was not present when the document was signed, did not constitute the signature of a second witness as required under 72-2-522. The proponent thus did not meet the statutory burden under 72-3-310 that the document had been duly executed, and the District Court properly denied admission of the document to probate. In re Estate of Brooks, 279 M 516, 927 P2d 1024, 53 St. Rep. 1263 (1996), distinguishing In re Estate of Weidner, 192 M 421, 628 P2d 285 (1981).

Apparently Executed Subsequent Will — Evidence Necessary to Support: The deceased and her husband executed a joint will in 1954. The will left all the property to the surviving spouse and provided that at the survivor's death their son would receive $5 because he was already provided for and that the daughter would receive the remainder of the property. The husband died in 1957. The wife died in 1980, and the daughter sought to probate the 1954 will. The son petitioned for a formal determination of intestacy. He produced an unexecuted copy of a second will, the original of which was purportedly executed in 1965 by the decedent. The 1965 will contained a standard revocation clause. The Supreme Court held that the 1965 will was not duly executed. The drafter of the will could not establish that there was a second witness who had witnessed either the signing by the testator or the testator's acknowledgment of her signature of the will. There was insufficient evidence to support a finding that the 1965 will was fully executed. The 1954 will was properly admitted to probate. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Testator's Printed Name a Valid Signature When Written in Presence of Notary and Two Witnesses — Burden of Proof of Due Execution Met: The decedent's daughter petitioned the District Court to be appointed personal representative to probate the decedent's estate but was opposed by the decedent's sister, who asserted the decedent had previously executed a will in 2002 that named the sister to the position. The District Court concluded that the decedent died intestate, ruling that she had not signed the will because she had printed her name, rather than writing it in a cursive script. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court, holding that the decedent's will was validly executed under either 72-2-522 or 72-2-523. The Supreme Court relied on the testimony of the notary and one of the witnesses, who both said the decedent presented the document as her last will and testament when she signed it in block letters in front of them. The decedent had also acknowledged the document as her will in a sworn deposition in 2009. In light of the evidence, the Supreme Court concluded the decedent had validly executed her will and that the decedent's sister had met the burden of presenting a prima facie case of due execution as the proponent of the will. In re Estate of Harless, 2013 MT 283, 372 Mont. 117, 310 P.3d 550.

Intent of Testator — Will Not Form Document — No Hearsay Exception: A duly executed will admitted to probate presumptively reflects the true intentions of the testator and is different from a standard form document that is often provided by a bank or other institution and is drafted to protect the institution. A testator's intent is not a disputed fact and is not subject to admission in evidence in an affidavit for a summary judgment under the hearsay rule exception allowing statements with circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness comparable to other hearsay rule exceptions. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821.

Self-Proved Will — Burden on Challenger: A self-proved will, a will that has been simultaneously executed, attested, and acknowledged by the testator and witnesses as provided in 72-3-309, may be admitted to probate without testimony of attesting witnesses. Once a duly executed will is admitted to probate, it is presumed that the testator was competent and sound of mind, and the party contesting the will bears the burden of establishing lack of validity as provided in this section. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821.

Lack of Testamentary Capacity Rendering Holographic Will Invalid: A son and a daughter both sought probate of different wills signed by their mother. The District Court found that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity at the time both wills were executed, so probate was denied, resulting in intestacy. The son appealed on grounds that the District Court improperly found that the mother lacked testamentary capacity when signing the second, holographic will, but the Supreme Court affirmed. There was evidence that years before the wills were executed, the mother was confused and uncertain about her assets and was paranoid, often did not know what was happening around her and was delusional, could not remember people or recall what she had done with her property, thought that the sheriff and people of Richland County were all on drugs, thought people were stealing from her, was not aware that through two wills she would be treating her children differently, and did not understand when signing the holographic will that it would govern distribution of her assets and revoke any prior wills. This was substantial evidence to justify the District Court's conclusion that the mother lacked testamentary capacity, rendering the will invalid. In re Estate of Lightfield, 2009 MT 244, 351 M 426, 213 P3d 468 (2009).

Substantial Circumstantial Evidence of Undue Influence in Order to Acquire Parent's Assets: A son and a daughter both sought probate of different wills signed by their mother. The District Court found that the decedent was subject to undue influence at the time she transferred certain property to the son, so probate was denied, resulting in intestacy. The son appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. There was substantial circumstantial evidence that the son took advantage of the mother's physical and mental weakness when she transferred the property to the son. Based on the nature and timing of the transfer, the District Court did not err in concluding that the transfer was the result of undue influence by the son. In re Estate of Lightfield, 2009 MT 244, 351 M 426, 213 P3d 468 (2009).

Summary Judgment Proper Absent Proof of Undue Influence: Stanton sued for distribution of trust proceeds that were bequeathed to him in Barker's will. Defendants asserted that Stanton had exerted undue influence over Barker, invalidating the will, and that a prior version of the will should be followed, which included defendants as beneficiaries. The District Court found that defendants did not prove undue influence and granted summary judgment to Stanton. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the criteria in In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001), to determine whether Stanton had exerted undue influence, noting that the defendants bore the burden of proof. Stanton admitted a confidential relationship with Barker, but that fact was insufficient in itself to prove undue influence. Because of the relationship, Stanton had the opportunity to exercise undue influence. However, opportunity alone is not sufficient to prove undue influence and invalidate a will. Barker's physical and mental condition and the naturalness of the disposition were not at issue. Defendants failed to prove undue influence, and summary judgment for Stanton was affirmed. Stanton v. Wells Fargo Bank Mont., N.A., 2007 MT 22, 335 M 384, 152 P3d 115 (2007).

No Finding of Undue Influence Under Bradshaw Criteria: Contestants to their father's will asserted that their father was unduly influenced by one of his sons. The District Court found no undue influence, and on appeal, the Supreme Court examined each of the criteria in In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001), and affirmed. All of the children had confidential relationships with their father at certain points in their lives, but the mere opportunity to exercise influence on a testator is not sufficient to prove undue influence. Although the contestants may have suspected that the father was unduly influenced, they did not meet their burden of proving that fact. Also, the District Court made the requisite findings regarding the father's physical and mental capacity and condition, the possibility of unnaturalness of the disposition, and the timing and circumstances surrounding the demands and importunities that may have affected the father's ability to withstand any possible influence, and the findings were supported by credible evidence. In re Estate of Harms, 2006 MT 320, 335 M 66, 149 P3d 557 (2006).

Acts of Testator Demonstrating Intent to Revoke Prior Will — Unwitnessed Will Treated as Executed Will: Hall executed his original will in 1984, and in 1997, he and his current wife met with their attorney and drew up a joint will. They signed the joint will, and the attorney notarized it, and although there were no other witnesses, they believed that the joint will would stand as valid until a final version was executed. Hall directed that the 1984 will be destroyed. Hall died before a final version was executed, and his wife sought to informally probate the joint will, but Hall's daughter objected and requested formal probate. The District Court admitted the joint will to probate, and the daughter appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. In contested cases, the proponent of a will must establish that the testator duly executed the will. For a will to be valid, typically, two people must witness the testator signing the will, and then sign the will themselves. However, under 72-2-523, a document may still be treated as if it had been executed under certain circumstances, even if it was not properly witnessed, and one such circumstance is if the proponent establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the decedent intended the document to be the decedent's will. Here, Hall clearly intended the joint will to be his final will, as evidenced by superseding language in the joint will revoking the prior will, by Hall's belief that the joint will would stand as valid until a final version was drawn up, and by Hall's destruction of the earlier will. Thus, the District Court did not err in admitting the unwitnessed joint will to probate. In re Estate of Hall, 2002 MT 171, 310 M 486, 51 P3d 1134 (2002).

No Requirement That All Five Statutory Criteria Be Proved to Show Undue Influence — Return to Discretionary Standard and Line of Cases Requiring That All Criteria Must Be Satisfied Overruled: Section 28-2-407 sets forth the statutory definition of undue influence. In 1965, in In re Maricich, 145 M 146, 400 P2d 873 (1965), the Supreme Court set forth five criteria as factors that a court may consider in determining a question of undue influence: (1) any confidential relationship between the person alleged to be exercising undue influence and the donor; (2) the physical condition of the donor as it may affect the donor's ability to withstand influence; (3) the mental condition of the donor as it may affect the donor's ability to withstand influence; (4) the unnaturalness of the disposition as it relates to showing an unbalanced mind or a mind easily susceptible to undue influence; and (5) demands and importunities as they may affect the donor, taking into account the time, place, and surrounding circumstances. The court continued this discretionary approach in Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978). Then, beginning with In re Estate of Aageson, 217 M 78, 702 P2d 338 (1985), the court strayed from that approach and held that a court must consider the five criteria and set a standard for their consideration in which a proponent of an undue influence theory must satisfy each of the statutory criteria. In the present case, the Supreme Court was asked to consider whether the District Court incorrectly determined that a person's status as a beneficiary was the result of undue influence. The District Court found all five factors to be present, but the presence of four of the five factors was challenged on appeal. The court noted that the standard requiring a finding of all five statutory criteria was not supported by any authority and did not square with the alternative statutory definitions of undue influence in 28-2-407. Therefore, the court returned to the Cameron standard and overruled subsequent cases holding to the contrary, stating that a court may consider the five criteria in determining the existence of undue influence but that the five criteria need not all be proved to show undue influence in any given case. The statutory requirements control, and the five criteria are simply nonexclusive considerations available to guide the District Court in its application of the requirements. In the present case, the District Court correctly determined that each of the criterion for establishing a claim of undue influence had been established. In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001), overruling Christensen v. Britton, 240 M 393, 784 P2d 908 (1989), In re Estate of Luger, 244 M 301, 797 P2d 229 (1990), Taylor v. Claim of Omitted Child Summarily Dismissed — Failure to Present Evidence of Mistaken Belief of Death of Child: Scotty Prescott married Howard Putman in 1946, and they had a son, William, in 1949. Scotty later found out that Howard's previous marriage had not been dissolved when they married, and Scotty was granted an annulment in 1954. She remained in Montana, attending Montana State College, and Howard moved to California with William. Aside from two letters in 1954, there was no evidence of any contact among Scotty, Howard, and William. William had no independent recollection of his mother and never attempted to contact her during the remaining 42 years of her life. Scotty executed a will in 1985, bequeathing the profits from the sale of her ranch to the college, the remainder of her estate to the Museum of the Rockies, and nothing to William, who later asserted that he was entitled to a share of the estate pursuant to 72-2-332 because Scotty mistakenly believed that he was dead. In a nonsubstantial revision of the will in 1991, Scotty had stated that "the line of succession for this branch of the Prescott family ends with me", which William contended raised a question of material fact as to whether his mother believed him to be dead. However, the statement was not made until 6 years after the will was executed and was consistent with the separate way that they lived their lives. Further, the record was replete with uncontroverted proof that the disposition of Scotty's estate was consistent with her intention stated as early as 1964 to endow the college and did not indicate that William was omitted from the will solely because Scotty believed him to be dead. In the absence of sufficient evidence required by 72-2-332(3) proving that William was an omitted child, the District Court correctly dismissed William's claim by summary judgment. In re Estate of Prescott, 2000 MT 200, 300 M 469, 8 P3d 88, 57 St. Rep. 779 (2000).

Test to Prove Lack of Testamentary Capacity — Bodin Test: A son was not included in his mother's will and challenged her testamentary capacity. The Supreme Court applied the long-standing test in In re Bodin's Estate, 144 M 555, 398 P2d 616 (1965), to determine testamentary capacity, which requires that the testator be aware of three elements: (1) the nature of the act to be performed; (2) the nature and extent of property to be disposed of; and (3) the objects of the testator's bounty. Here, the undisputed facts proved all three elements, showing that the mother possessed the requisite testamentary capacity on the day that she executed the will. Absent evidence to the contrary, the District Court's finding to that effect was affirmed. In re Estate of Prescott, 2000 MT 200, 300 M 469, 8 P3d 88, 57 St. Rep. 779 (2000), followed in In re Estate of Harms, 2006 MT 320, 335 M 66, 149 P3d 557 (2006), and In re Estate of Lightfield, 2009 MT 244, 351 M 426, 213 P3d 468 (2009).

Document Signing Attested to by Only One Witness Not Duly Executed: In contested cases, the proponent of a will must establish that it has been duly executed, which includes the requirement that the document be signed by two individuals acknowledging either the signature or the will. The number of attesting witnesses who must testify in a contested will proceeding pursuant to 72-3-309 is an entirely different question from whether a purported will meets the requirements for a duly executed will under 72-2-522. Here, the document was signed by only one person who witnessed the testator signing the purported will. A second signature by a notary public, who was a family friend and recognized the testator's signature but who was not present when the document was signed, did not constitute the signature of a second witness as required under 72-2-522. The proponent thus did not meet the statutory burden under this section that the document had been duly executed, and the District Court properly denied admission of the document to probate. In re Estate of Brooks, 279 M 516, 927 P2d 1024, 53 St. Rep. 1263 (1996), distinguishing In re Estate of Weidner, 192 M 421, 628 P2d 285 (1981).

Proponent's Burden to Prove Decedent's Intent That Writing Constituted Will: Even absent due execution, a document can still be admitted to probate as a valid will under certain circumstances. Under the express language of 72-2-523, the proponent of a document has the burden of proving the decedent's intent that the writing constitutes the decedent's will. Insofar as this section imposes a burden on the contestant of a will to prove lack of testamentary intent or capacity, that section does not apply when the document sought to be admitted to probate is not a duly executed will. In this case, the proponent did not meet the statutory burden of proving testator's testamentary capacity, which was error, but because the error did not affect the outcome of the case, it was considered harmless. In re Estate of Brooks, 279 M 516, 927 P2d 1024, 53 St. Rep. 1263 (1996), followed in In re Estate of Hall, 2002 MT 171, 310 M 486, 51 P3d 1134 (2002), and In re Estate of Harless, 2013 MT 283, 372 Mont. 117, 310 P.3d 550.

Costs Denied Winner of Trust Invalidation Case: Under the circumstances of the case, the Supreme Court declined to order that the sons challenging parts of their father's trust benefiting his wife be assessed costs of appeal on the grounds that they appealed without substantial or reasonable grounds. In re McKittrick Trust, 262 M 406, 865 P2d 1099, 50 St. Rep. 1613 (1993).

Denial of Cumulative Testimony of Questionable Value as to Cult Involvement in Trust's Creation: The lower court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow a witness for persons seeking invalidation of part of testamentary trust to testify on the issue of possible involvement of the trustor in a cult and on an attorney/cult member's involvement in the trust. The witness would have testified that she visited the trustor in the hospital, that three other people stopped by during her visit, and that the trustor introduced one of them as an attorney and member of his church. The witness was unnamed, the offered testimony did not allege that the attorney/cult member influenced the trustor, and the offered testimony was cumulative and of questionable relevance. In re McKittrick Trust, 262 M 406, 865 P2d 1099, 50 St. Rep. 1613 (1993).

Expert Examination of Document Denied Because of Delay, Expense, and Questionable Value: In sons' action to invalidate portions of their father's trust that benefited his wife, the sons requested that their document expert examine a trust draft offered by the wife. The judge stated that any determination would at best be inconclusive, the examination would cause additional expense and delay, and no one had suggested an arrangement satisfactory to the judge for giving the document to an expert. The judge did not abuse discretion in refusing the request. In re McKittrick Trust, 262 M 406, 865 P2d 1099, 50 St. Rep. 1613 (1993).

Holographic Will in Letters of Testator Upheld — Burden on Contestant to Prove Lack of Intent: On two different occasions, from his jail cell, Julian Ramirez wrote letters to his sister saying that if something ever happened to him, their mother should get all of his possessions and take care of his son Nicolas. After Julian's death, the District Court refused to admit the letters to probate as a holographic will, holding that there was insufficient evidence of Julian's testamentary intent. Citing In re Augestad's Estate, 111 M 138, 106 P2d 1087 (1940), In re Van Voast's Estate, 127 M 450, 266 P2d 377 (1954), and Estate of Coleman, 139 M 58, 359 P2d 502 (1961), the Supreme Court held that the letters contained sufficient evidence of testamentary intent. The Supreme Court also noted that the District Court was under the mistaken misapprehension that the burden of proof is upon the person seeking to enter the will to probate. The Supreme Court noted that under this section, the contestant has the burden of proving a lack of testamentary intent, and that burden was not satisfied in this case. In re Estate of Ramirez, 264 M 33, 869 P2d 263, 51 St. Rep. 133 (1994).

No Undue Influence by Wife Over Husband's Trust Benefiting Her: Husband's trust gave his wife the option of complete withdrawal from the trust during her lifetime and control over disposition of most of the trust estate to his descendants upon her death. The couple's sons, seeking invalidation of the provisions, on the basis of undue influence, claimed, without citation of authority, that it was not required that the husband and wife have a confidential relationship as to the trust because the marriage relationship is a confidential relationship as to all things. Any presumption of confidentiality was diminished by the fact that husband generally did not discuss business and financial matters with his wife. It was natural for husband to give his wife the control and withdrawal rights. The court properly held that there was no undue influence exerted by the wife. In re McKittrick Trust, 262 M 406, 865 P2d 1099, 50 St. Rep. 1613 (1993).

No Presumption of Competency in Transactions Between Conservator and Protected Persons: The lower court ruled that the protected persons, the elderly parents of the conservator, were competent. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, stating that although the establishment of conservatorship is not an adjudication of incompetency and the protected person is presumed to have the capacity to contract with third persons, the presumption shifts with respect to transactions with the conservator. In such cases, the conservator has the burden of proving that the protected persons were at all times capable of understanding the nature of any transaction in which the conservator obtained a benefit. In re Estate of Clark, 237 M 179, 772 P2d 299, 46 St. Rep. 718 (1989), followed in Luke v. Gager, 2000 MT 377, 303 M 474, 16 P3d 377, 57 St. Rep. 1599 (2000).

Will Contest — Probate Barred — Claim Based on Promissory Estoppel — Jury Verdict: Will contest that was barred by 3-year statute of limitations could proceed on other theories of recovery. There was sufficient evidence to support the jury verdict and to deny the request for a new trial. Tope v. Taylor, 235 M 124, 768 P2d 845, 45 St. Rep. 2242 (1988).

Opportunity for Undue Influence Not Tantamount to Actual Undue Influence — Presumption Not Granted Absent Evidence of Misadministration: Where the older brother was named trustee and residuary devisee, younger brothers argued that 72-20-208 (now repealed) required the District Court to give them the benefit of the presumption against the trustee. They asserted that the statute places on the proponents of the will the burden of proving no undue influence. The Supreme Court held that the mere opportunity to exercise undue influence was not tantamount to the actual exercise of undue influence and that the burden of proving undue influence under 72-3-310 lies with the contestant of a will. The mere naming of a party as both trustee and residuary devisee does not create a transaction between the trustee and grantor/beneficiary and thereby shift the burden of proof to the trustee. The presumption created by 72-20-208 (now repealed) is rebuttable, and substantial evidence showed the will was properly executed, the testator was competent, and there was no improper act in the administration of the trust. In re Estate of Watson, 227 M 212, 738 P2d 494, 44 St. Rep. 1020 (1987).

No Capacity of Seriously Ill Person to Revoke Will: A man who suffered multiple heart attacks and complications that included respiratory arrest, who was unable to speak, and who was questionably lucid and coherent was held not to have the cognitive capacity to make a knowing and voluntary destruction of his will or to possess the capacity to direct the revocation of his will. In re Estate of Fogerty, 221 M 336, 719 P2d 425, 43 St. Rep. 873 (1986).

Lack of Capacity to Execute Will and Deed — Burden of Proof: Appellants claimed the conservator did not meet his burden in proving that the protected person, Mae, lacked the mental capacity to execute a subject deed and will. The Supreme Court set out the test for testamentary capacity in In re Bodin's Estate, 144 M 555, 398 P2d 616 (1965). In applying the test to the present case, the court found little doubt that Mae lacked the necessary testamentary capacity to execute the subject will. The court further held that the same facts led to the conclusion that Mae also lacked the necessary capacity to execute the subject deed or to enter into binding contracts with the appellants. The District Court judgment was affirmed. In re Tennant, 220 M 78, 714 P2d 122, 43 St. Rep. 189 (1986), followed in In re Estate of Jochems, 252 M 24, 826 P2d 534, 49 St. Rep. 116 (1992). Undue Influence — Burden of Proof: The appellants contended that the conservator failed to meet his burden of proving that the appellants exercised undue influence over the decedent to procure her execution of a deed and will. In the case of In re Maricich's Estate, 145 M 146, 400 P2d 873 (1965), the Supreme Court set out the elements for determining the existence of undue influence on a testator, which are essentially the same as the statutory elements of undue influence found in 28-2-407. After applying the test to the present case, the court held that appellants did exercise undue influence over the decedent to procure her execution of the subject deed and will and declared both documents void. In re Tennant, 220 M 78, 714 P2d 122, 43 St. Rep. 189 (1986). See also In re Estate of Lien, 270 M 295, 892 P2d 530, 52 St. Rep. 190 (1995), following In re Maricich's Estate, and followed in In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001), and In re Estate of Wittman, 2001 MT 109, 305 M 290, 27 P3d 35 (2001). Estate of Lien was distinguished in In re Estate of Lande, 1999 MT 162, 295 M 160, 983 P2d 308, 56 St. Rep. 642 (1999), and Estate of Lien and Estate of Lande were overruled, to the extent that a court is not required to but may consider the criteria in determining the existence of undue influence, but the five criteria need not all be proved to show undue influence in any given case, in In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001).

Presumption of Intent to Revoke Holographic Will by Cancellation: Where appellant's wife died leaving a holographic will in her bedroom nightstand and the will contained unexplained X's drawn on the single page of the will such that all of the paragraphs except one had the markings through them, the court erred in admitting the will to formal probate because the will was revoked by its maker. By the existence of the unexplained X's over the will, it is presumed that the maker intended to revoke the will by cancellation, and the opponents of the will have thereby satisfied their burden of proof under 72-3-310. As the appellant failed to explain the markings, the presumed revocation controls. In re Estate of Cox, 190 M 436, 621 P2d 1057, 37 St. Rep. 2018 (1980).

Promissory Note — Undue Influence in Making: A promissory note was executed to appellant by the deceased with whom he had a close confidential relationship. The decedent's age caused her to rely quite heavily on appellant in running her farm and made her more susceptible to his influence. The amount of the note was also quite large in relation to the alleged consideration. Under the five-factor test enumerated in Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978), there was substantial evidence to support a finding of undue influence in the creation of the note. Heintz v. Vestal, 185 M 233, 605 P2d 606, 37 St. Rep. 99 (1980).

Testamentary Capacity: Testimony of witnesses that the decedent, at the time of execution of the will, named all her relatives, the nature and extent of her property, and understood how she was disposing of the property and that the contested will was substantially similar to an earlier draft prepared in 1974 when there was no question of competency indicated that the decedent was not confused or disoriented on the day the will was executed. In re Estate of LaTray, 183 M 141, 598 P2d 619 (1979).

Directed Verdict in Contested Will Proceedings: When upon trial of an issue by a jury the case presents only questions of law, the judge may direct the jury to return a verdict in favor of the party entitled thereto. Where there is no substantial evidence of incompetency at the time of making the will, it is error to allow the issue to go to the jury. In re Estate of Monaco, Monaco v. Cecconi, 180 M 111, 589 P2d 156 (1979).

Undue Influence — What Constitutes: In determining the issue of undue influence, the Court may consider the confidential relationship of the person attempting to influence the donor, the physical and mental condition of the donor as it affects his ability to withstand the influence, the unnaturalness of the disposition as it relates to showing an unbalanced mind or a mind easily susceptible to undue influence, and demands and importunities as they may affect the particular donor, taking into consideration the time, place, and all surrounding circumstances. Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978), followed in In re McKittrick Trust, 262 M 406, 865 P2d 1099, 50 St. Rep. 1613 (1993), In re Estate of Lien, 270 M 295, 892 P2d 530, 52 St. Rep. 190 (1995), and In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001).

Presumption Favoring Revocation: The presumption favoring revocation of a will not found subsequent to testator's death and the statutory requirements of proof of a lost will are not one and the same, the presumption being a substantive rule of law and the proof requirements being procedural in nature. Therefore, repeal of the statutory requirements of proof does not abolish the presumption, and the contestant may use it in meeting his burden of proving revocation. In re Hartman, 172 M 225, 563 P2d 569 (1977).

What Jury Is to Determine: Court was correct in rejecting instructions which were merely abstract statements of law since the jury was not in the position to enter a general verdict. Likewise, interrogatories aimed at determining testator's intent were improper because questions of intent are not questions for the jury. Patten v. Patten, 171 M 399, 558 P2d 659 (1976).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Undue Influence — Testimony of Attorney: Although testatrix was 85 and had infirmities associated with old age at the time her will was executed, testimony of her attorney that, due to her age and failing eyesight and her desire to make unequal distribution of her property, he had made a special effort to assure himself of her competence before preparing her will and deeds was sufficient to overcome allegations of contestants. Blackmer v. Blackmer, 165 M 69, 525 P2d 559 (1974).

Undue Influence — Evidence:

Evidence that testator devised bulk of his estate to charitable institution and that public administratrix who had drafted will was named as executor of estate and that her fee was set at a higher figure by statute than that which a relative or other ordinary person would receive as executor was insufficient to set aside directed verdict allowing probate of will because evidence did not disclose that undue influence was actually exercised and that such influence resulted in testamentary provisions which were not those of the testator's will but those of the parties exercising such influence. Wallin v. Kinyon Estate, 164 M 160, 519 P2d 1236 (1974).

Hospital records of testator's terminal illness, during which he executed contested will, were relevant on issue of testamentary capacity and should have been admitted in will contest. Estate of Hall v. Milkovich, 158 M 438, 492 P2d 1388 (1972).

Directed verdict upholding contested will was improper where there was evidence that testator was in a long period of declining physical and mental health due to terminal cancer and sedation, was influenced by a mutual fund salesman, and executed four wills within a 6-month period, all of them disinheriting his natural children, making dispositions at great variance with previous wills, and tending to erode the estate. Estate of Hall v. Milkovich, 158 M 438, 492 P2d 1388 (1972), distinguishing In re Estate of Cocanougher, 141 M 16, 375 P2d 1009 (1962) and In re Estate of Powers, 163 M 67, 515 P2d 368 (1973).

Substantial evidence of undue influence was shown where beneficiary under a second will was never close to the testator until learning of his bank account and importuned upon testator while he was in a weakened condition, so that testator rejected his friends. In re Maricich's Estate, 145 M 146, 400 P2d 873 (1965).

Undue Influence — Burden of Proof: Contestant had burden of showing undue influence. In re Maricich's Estate, 145 M 146, 400 P2d 873 (1965).

Undue Influence — What Constitutes: In considering undue influence, Court could take into account confidential relationship of person attempting to influence testator, testator's physical and mental condition as it affected his ability to withstand influence, the unnaturalness of the disposition, and the demands made upon the testator in light of the circumstances. In re Maricich's Estate, 145 M 146, 400 P2d 873 (1965); followed in In re Estate of Hogan, 218 M 428, 708 P2d 1018, 42 St. Rep. 1711 (1985).

Probate Proceeding of Equitable Nature: A proceeding for the probate of a will is a special statutory proceeding, equitable in its nature and, on appeal, is governed by the rules applicable in a suit in equity. In re Bragg's Estate, 106 M 132, 76 P2d 57 (1938).

Special Interrogatories — Discretion of Trial Court: Under 72-12-202 (now repealed) the obligation rested upon the Court to submit such issues as would be necessary for the proper disposition of the case. The number and form of special interrogatories to be submitted to the jury in a will contest are matters lodged in the discretion of the Trial Court, so long as they are sufficient to comprehend the issues involved in the case; hence, where it submitted one interrogatory on the one issue involved, namely the competency of testator at the time he made the will, refusal of three others offered by contestees on the same subject did not show an abuse of discretion in view of the instructions given thoroughly covering the issue. In re Carroll's Estate, 59 M 403, 196 P 996 (1921).

Right to Jury Trial: An issue in a probate matter is to be tried and determined as an ordinary action, except that a jury trial is a privilege and not a matter of right. In re Peterson's Estate, 49 M 96, 140 P 237 (1914).

Admission to Probate: Section 72-12-204 (now repealed) showed how the will was admitted to probate. In re Hobbins' Estate, 41 M 39, 108 P 7 (1910).

72-3-312. Effect of final order in another state.

Official Comments

This section is designed to extend the effect of final orders of another jurisdiction of the United States. It should not be read to restrict the obligation of the local court to respect the judgment of another court when parties who were personally before the other court also are personally before the local court. An "authenticated copy" includes copies properly certified under the full faith and credit statute. If conflicting claims of domicile are made in proceedings which are commenced in different jurisdictions, [72-3-114] applies. This section is framed to apply where a formal proceeding elsewhere has been previously concluded. Hence, if a local proceeding is concluded before formal proceedings at domicile are concluded, local law will control.

Informal proceedings by which a will is probated or a personal representative is appointed are not proceedings which must be respected by a local court under either [72-3-114] or this section.

Nothing in this section bears on questions of what assets are included in a decedent's estate.

This section adds nothing to existing law as applied to cases where the parties before the local court were also personally before the foreign court, or where the property involved was subject to the power of the foreign court. It extends present law so that, for some purposes, the law of another state may become binding in regard to due execution or revocation of wills controlling local land, and to questions concerning the meaning of ambiguous words in wills involving local land. But, choice of law rules frequently produce a similar result. See §240 Restatement of the Law, Second: Conflict of Laws, p. 73, Proposed Official Draft III, 1969.

This section may be easier to justify than familiar choice of law rules, for its application is limited to instances where the protesting party has had notice of, and an opportunity to participate in, previous litigation resolving the question he now seeks to raise.

72-3-314. Probate of more than one instrument — order.

Official Comments

Except as otherwise provided in [72-3-317], an order in a formal testacy proceeding serves to end the time within which it is possible to probate after-discovered wills, or to give effect to late-discovered facts concerning heirship. Determination of heirs is not barred by the three-year limitation but a judicial determination of heirs is conclusive unless the order may be vacated.

This section authorizes a court to engage in some construction of wills incident to determining whether a will is entitled to probate. It seems desirable to leave the extent of this power to the sound discretion of the court. If wills are not construed in connection with a judicial probate, they may be subject to construction at any time. See [72-3-122].

72-3-317. Effect of formal testacy order — modification or vacation — fact of death — remedies of alleged decedent.

Official Comments

The provisions barring proof of late-discovered wills is derived in part from section 81 of Model Probate Code. The same section is the source of the provisions of (5) above. The provisions permitting vacation of an order determining heirs on certain conditions reflect the effort to offer parallel possibilities for adjudications in testate and intestate estates. See [72-3-302 through 72-3-304]. An objective is to make it possible to handle an intestate estate exactly as a testate estate may be handled. If this is achieved, some of the pressure on persons to make wills may be relieved.

If an alleged decedent turns out to have been alive, heirs and distributees are liable to restore the "estate or its proceeds." If neither can be identified through the normal process of tracing assets, their liability depends upon the circumstances. The liability of the distributees to claimants whose claims have not been barred, or to persons shown to be entitled to distribution when a formal proceeding changes a previous assumption informally established which guided an earlier distribution, is different. Case Notes

Effect of Failure to Send Notice of Entry of Order in Formal Probate Proceeding: Under 72-3-318, the Court may vacate orders in a formal probate proceeding within the time allowed for appeal. Since the Clerk failed to send notice of entry of an order as required by former Rule 77(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the time allowed for appeal had not begun to run, and the party was still entitled to request the Court to modify or vacate its order. In re Estate of Holmes, 183 M 290, 599 P2d 344 (1979).

72-3-319. Formal appointment proceedings.

Official Comments

A petition raising a controversy concerning the priority or qualifications of a personal representative may be combined with a petition in a formal testacy proceeding. However, it is not necessary to petition formally for the appointment of a personal representative as a part of a formal testacy proceeding. A personal representative may be appointed on informal application either before or after formal proceedings which establish whether the decedent died testate or intestate or no appointment may be desired. See [72-3-121, 72-3-203(2), 72-3-204, and 72-3-225]. Furthermore, procedures for securing the appointment of a new personal representative after a previous assumption as to testacy has been changed are provided by [72-3-523]. These may be informal, or related to pending formal proceedings concerning testacy. A formal order relating to appointment may be desired when there is a dispute concerning priority or qualification to serve but no dispute concerning testacy. It is important to distinguish formal proceedings concerning appointment from "supervised administration." The former includes any proceeding after notice involving a request for an appointment. The latter originates in a "formal proceeding" and may be requested in addition to a ruling concerning testacy or priority or qualifications of a personal representative, but is descriptive of a special proceeding with a different scope and purpose than those concerned merely with establishing the bases for an administration. In other words, a personal representative appointed in a "formal" proceeding may or may not be "supervised."

Another point should be noted. The court may not immediately issue letters even though a formal proceeding seeking appointment is involved and results in an order authorizing appointment. Rather, [72-3-512], et seq. control[s] the subject of qualification. Section [72-1-204] deals with letters.

Supervised Administration

Montana Uniform Probate Code: A Checklist for Probate, Hightower, 46 Mont. L. Rev. 179 (1985).

72-3-401. Supervised administration — nature and purpose — presumptive entitlement.

Official Comments

This and the following sections of this part describe an optional procedure for settling an estate in one continuous proceeding in the Court. The proceeding is characterized as "in rem" to align it with the concepts described by the Model Probate Code. See Section 62, M.P.C. In cases where supervised administration is not requested or ordered, no compulsion other than self-interest exists to compel use of a formal testacy proceeding to secure an adjudication of a will or no will, because informal probate or appointment of an administrator in intestacy may be used. Similarly, unless administration is supervised, there is no compulsion other than self-interest to use a formal closing proceeding. Thus, even though an estate administration may be begun by use of a formal testacy proceeding which may involve an order concerning who is to be appointed personal representative, the proceeding is over when the order concerning testacy and appointment is entered. See [72-3-121]. Supervised administration, therefore, is appropriate when an interested person desired assurance that the essential steps regarding opening and closing of an estate will be adjudicated. See the Comment following [72-3-402].

Case Notes

Matters Involving Prior Accounting Merged in Final Account: In response to the personal representative's argument that the court had no jurisdiction over matters handled during the administration of the estate that were not included in the order issued prior to the final account, the Supreme Court held that in any supervised administration, the court is given continuing authority in a single in rem proceeding to secure the complete administration of the estate until the entry of an order approving distribution and discharging the personal representative. The matters involving the prior accounting were merged in the final account, and the court had jurisdiction over them. In re Estate of Barber, 239 M 129, 779 P2d 477, 46 St. Rep. 1565 (1989).

72-3-402. Petition and order.

Official Comments

The expressed wishes of a testator regarding supervised administration should bear upon, but not control, the question of whether supervised administration will be ordered. This section is designed to achieve a fair balance between the wishes of the decedent, and the interests of successors in regard to supervised administration.

Since supervised administration normally will result in an adjudicated distribution of the estate, the issue of will or no will must be adjudicated. This section achieves this by forcing a petition for supervised administration to include matters necessary to put the issue of testacy before the court. It is possible, however, that supervised administration will be requested because administrative complexities warranting it develop after the issue of will or no will has been resolved in a previously concluded formal testacy proceeding.

It should be noted that supervised administration, though it compels a judicial settlement of an estate, is not the only route to obtaining judicial review and settlement at the close of an administration. The procedures described in [72-3-131 and 72-3-132] are available for use by or against personal representatives who are not supervised. Also efficient remedies for breach of duty by a personal representative who is not supervised are available under Part 6 of this [chapter]. Finally, each personal representative consents to jurisdiction of the court as invoked by mailed notice of any proceeding relating to the estate which may be initiated by an interested person. Also, persons interested in the estate may be subjected to orders of the court following mailed notices made in proceedings initiated by the personal representative. In combination, these possibilities mean that supervised administration will be valuable principally to persons who see some advantage in a single judicial proceeding which will produce adjudications on all major points involved in an estate settlement.

Case Notes

Informal Probate Not Civil Action — Motion to Substitute Judge Premature: The daughter of the decedent was appointed the personal representative and her application for an informal probate was accepted by the clerk of the court. Her brother's attorney moved for substitution of the judge and subsequently moved for supervised administration of the probate. The Supreme Court held that an informal probate is not a civil action because it is not subject to the jurisdiction of a District Court. After a probate is designated as subject to supervised administration, the probate is subject to the District Court's jurisdiction and is a civil action. The Supreme Court ruled that the brother's attorney's motion to substitute the judge was untimely as it was premature and that it should have been filed after the probate became subject to supervised administration. In re Estate of Greene, 2013 MT 174, 370 Mont. 490, 305 P.3d 52.

72-3-403. Effect on other proceedings and previously appointed personal representative.

Official Comments

The duties and powers of a personal representative are described in Part [6] of this [chapter]. The ability of a personal representative to create a good title in a purchaser of estate assets is not hampered by the fact that the personal representative may breach a duty created by statute, court order or other circumstances in making the sale. See [72-3-613]. However, formal proceedings against a personal representative may involve requests for qualification of the power normally possessed by personal representatives which, if granted, would subject the personal representative to the penalties for contempt of court if he disregarded the restriction. See [72-3-617]. If a proceeding also involved a demand that particular real estate be kept in the estate pending determination of a petitioner's claim thereto, notice of the pendency of the proceeding could be recorded as is usual under the jurisdiction's system for the lis pendens concept.

The word "restricts" in the last sentence is intended to negate the idea that a judicial order specially qualifying the powers and duties of a personal representative is a restraining order in the usual sense. The section means simply that some supervised personal representative may receive the same powers and duties as ordinary personal representatives, except that they must obtain a court order before paying claimants or distributing, while others may receive a more restricted set of powers. Section [72-3-617] governs petitions which seek to limit the power of a personal representative.

Official Comments to §3-504 of the UPC

This section provides authority to issue letters showing restrictions of power of supervised administrators. In general, persons dealing with personal representatives are not bound to inquire concerning the authority of a personal representative, and are not affected by provisions in a will or judicial order unless they know of it. But, it is expected that persons dealing with personal representatives will want to see the personal representative's letters, and this section has the practical effect of requiring them to do so. No provision is made for noting restrictions in letters except in the case of supervised representatives. See [72-3-613].

Payment of Fees — Repayment of Loans: The personal representative had authority to pay the estate's attorney and repay herself for loans she had made to the estate without a prior order from the District Court. Under this section, a supervised personal representative has, without interim orders approving the exercise of a power, all powers of personal representatives under the code, except that the personal representative may not make a distribution of the estate without the prior order of the court. This authority includes the power, under 72-3-613, to pay her own compensation and other expenses incident to the administration of the estate. It was decided to leave the point to be covered by court order or rule. There was a suggestion for a rule as follows: "Unless otherwise required by order, notice of interim orders in supervised administration need be given only to interested persons who request notice of all orders entered in the proceeding." [Section 72-1-302] permits any person to waive notice by a writing filed in the proceeding.

72-3-501. Who may not be personal representative.

Official Comments

The priorities applicable to informal proceedings are applicable to formal proceedings. However, if the proceedings are formal, a person with a substantial interest may object to the selection of one having priority other than because of will provisions. The provision for majority approval which is triggered by such a protest can be handled in a formal proceeding since all interested persons will be before the court, and a judge capable of handling discretionary matters, will be involved.

In considering [72-3-501 through 72-5-508 as they relate] to a devise to a trustee for various beneficiaries, it is to be noted that "interested persons" is defined by [72-1-103] to include fiduciaries. Also, [72-1-303(2)] and [72-3-915] show a purpose to make trustees serve as representatives of all beneficiaries. The provision [of 72-3-505] is consistent.

If a state's statutes recognize a public administrator or public trustee as the appropriate agency to seek administration of estates in which the state may have an interest, it would be appropriate to indicate in [72-3-501 through 72-3-508] the circumstances under which such an officer may seek administration. If no officer is recognized locally, the state could claim as heir by virtue of [72-2-115].

[Section 72-3-506] was inserted in connection with the decision to abandon the effort to describe ancillary administration in [Chapter 4]. Other provisions in [Chapter 5] which are relevant to administration of assets in a state other than that of the decedent's domicile are [72-1-201] (territorial effect), [72-3-112] (venue), [72-3-222] (informal appointment for non-resident decedent delayed 30 days), [72-3-224] (no informal appointment here if a representative has been appointed at domicile), [72-3-821] (duty of personal representative where administration is more than one state) and [72-4-306 through 72-4-308] (local recognition of foreign personal representatives).

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Appointment of Ex-Wife as Personal Representative Based on Her Being Custodial Parent, Guardian, and Conservator of Heirs Affirmed — Best Interest of Estate Considered: The father of two young children died intestate and his father was appointed the personal representative of the estate. The decedent's former wife, the guardian and mother of the children, sought to remove the decedent's father as the personal representative and appoint herself instead based on her being the custodial parent, guardian, and conservator of the heirs. The District Court agreed that it was in the best interest of the estate to remove the decedent's father and appoint the former wife as its personal representative. The decedent's father appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed his removal and the appointment of his former daughter-in-law. Under the Uniform Probate Code, the conservator has the right to nominate the personal representative of the estate even if it is the former spouse of the decedent. In re Estate of Bennett, 2013 MT 228, 371 Mont. 270, 312 P.3d 400.

Appeal of Appointment of Personal Representative Not Timely: The District Court appointed a son as personal representative of his mother's estate and ordered that letters of administration be issued to him, and his sister appealed the appointment. Pursuant to In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994), the Supreme Court reviewed the appointment to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law. Under former Rule 1, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), an order granting letters of administration was appealable, but former Rule 5, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), provided that an aggrieved party has 30 days from the date of entry of an order to file a notice of appeal. By the time that the sister appealed, her brother had been personal representative of the estate for 14 months, so the appeal was not timely. In re Estate of McMurchie, 2004 MT 98, 321 M 21, 89 P3d 18 (2004).

Wife Sued for Recovery of Medical Expenses of Estranged Husband — Material Question of Fact Whether Husband Abandoned Wife or Whether They Were Separated by Agreement as Precluding Summary Judgment: The husband moved from the family home, the wife filed for divorce, and the husband died a few weeks later after incurring $32,496 in medical expenses. The wife served as personal representative of her husband's estate and claimed the family allowance as his surviving spouse. Plaintiff was assigned the debt for medical services for purposes of collection. Citing Missoula YWCA v. Bard, 1999 MT 177, 295 M 260, 983 P2d 933 (1999), plaintiff argued that the medical expenses were necessaries of the family and that the wife was therefore responsible for the debt under 40-2-106, while the wife argued that she was not responsible because the parties were legally separated at the time that the expenses were incurred and because the husband had not supported the family during that time. The District Court concluded that because the wife acted as personal representative and received the family allowance as surviving spouse, she was estopped from arguing that she was not legally married and that because there were no factual disputes, plaintiff was entitled to summary judgment. The wife appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. Nothing in statute precludes an abandoned or separated spouse from acting as personal representative of a deceased spouse's estate, nor does the role of personal representative preclude a spouse from arguing abandonment or separation by agreement. Section 40-2-104 provides an exception to liability imposed under 40-2-106 if a spouse has been abandoned or if spouses are living separately by agreement. Because a question of material fact existed as to whether the wife was abandoned or separated, summary judgment was inappropriate, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Balyeat Collection Professionals v. Garland, 2002 MT 167, 310 M 464, 51 P3d 1127 (2002).

Appointment or Removal of Personal Representative and Renunciation of Right to Appointment — Standards of Review: Whether a party has a statutory priority for appointment as a personal representative in Montana as a result of appointment as a personal representative in another state, as well as a coincident right to obtain removal of a special administrator, is a legal question that the Supreme Court will review to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law (see In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994)). A question of whether a person has renounced the right to appointment as a personal representative involves the interpretation and application of the statute governing renunciation and will be reviewed for correctness (see In re Inquiry Into A.W., D.G., & M.G., Jr., 1999 MT 42, 293 M 358, 975 P2d 1250 (1999)). Whether a District Court has erred in refusing to appoint a person as a personal administrator, because that person has a conflict with another that prevents that person from being appointed a personal administrator, will be reviewed to determine whether there has been an abuse of the District Court's discretion (see In re Estate of Obstarczyk, 141 M 346, 377 P2d 531 (1963)). In re Estate of Kuralt, 2001 MT 153, 306 M 73, 30 P3d 345 (2001).

Priority of Surviving Spouse for Appointment as Personal Representative: If a personal representative has not been named under a will and there are no devisees, the decedent's surviving spouse has priority for appointment. A person determined to be a surviving spouse for purposes of intestate succession has priority for appointment over other heirs, the public administrator, and any creditor. In this case, when the issue of a surviving spouse's conflict of interest was raised with regard to children of the decedent, the interests of the children were properly protected through a court-ordered supervision of the estate's administration. In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 12 (1996).

Standing of Decedent's Relatives to Appeal Settlement and Distribution Agreements: Decedent's mother, brother, and sister sought to appeal a contested settlement agreement and a distribution agreement ordered by the District Court, but decedent's surviving spouse, Barbara, contended that there was no standing for an appeal. The Supreme Court held that: (1) Barbara was not precluded from raising the issue of standing for the first time on appeal, even though she failed to object in District Court, because objections to standing cannot be waived; (2) decedent's mother, as a creditor of the estate, had standing to appeal the appointment of Barbara as personal representative, but a brother and sister, who were neither creditors nor heirs of the estate, lacked standing; (3) because decedent's mother, brother, and sister were not successors to the estate, they had no legal interest or personal stake in the distribution of the estate and thus lacked standing to claim that the distribution agreement was improper; and (4) decedent's mother, brother, and sister were parties to the contested settlement agreement and were directly affected by the validity of the agreement and thus had standing to appeal that issue. In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 12 (1996), following Holmstrom Land Co. v. Newlan Creek Water District, 185 M 409, 605 P2d 1060 (1979), Grossman v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 209 M 427, 682 P2d 1319 (1984), and Olson v. Dept. of Revenue, 223 M 464, 726 P2d 1162 (1986). Goick was followed, as to prerequisites for standing, in In re Paternity of Vainio, 284 M 229, 943 P2d 1282, 54 St. Rep. 858 (1997).

Appointment of Brother, Sole Devisee, as Representative: Under the order of priorities in this section, decedent's brother had first priority of appointment under subsection (4) because there existed no other persons fitting the descriptions of priority of nomination in the will, surviving spouse who was a devisee, or custodial parent of a minor decedent and the brother was the sole devisee under decedent's will. In re Estate of Peterson, 265 M 104, 874 P2d 1230, 51 St. Rep. 454 (1994).

Priority of Custodial Parent When Noncustodial Parent Unsuitable: Noncustodial father maintained that since he and custodial mother could not agree on who should be appointed personal representative, the probate court should have appointed another qualified person. The court found that both parents, as heirs, shared priority for appointment, but since there was evidence of virtually no relationship between the deceased child and father and the father had shown no interest in supporting the child while she was alive or in helping with her final medical and funeral expenses, he was unsuitable as a personal representative, leaving the mother as the only suitable person with priority for appointment. In re Estate of Farnum, 224 M 304, 730 P2d 391, 43 St. Rep. 2205 (1986).

Father's Priority Over Public Administrator — Fourteen-Month Delay in Opening Estate: Fourteen months after the death of his son in a traffic accident, the father applied to be personal representative of his son's estate in response to a proceeding to appoint a public administrator so that the estate could be sued for insurance money on behalf of another who had died in the accident. No prior application for personal representative was required because the son left no estate to be administered. The father has priority to be personal representative under 72-3-502, notwithstanding speculation that in the accident trial he might be accorded more sympathy as father of the deceased than a public administrator would be accorded. The requirement of 72-15-102 that a public administrator may not file a petition for letters until after 30 days has elapsed does not raise a burden of justifying the delay on some other person applying for letters later than 30 days after a death. A common-law marriage cannot be created piecemeal but rather comes instantly into being or does not come at all. The District Court correctly applied Montana common-law marriage standards. In re Estate of White, 212 M 228, 686 P2d 915, 41 St. Rep. 1705 (1984).

The Supreme Court concluded that there is substantial evidence to support the District Court's findings of fact that no common-law marriage existed between Sherri and deceased and that deceased's ex-wife, Peggy, should be appointed personal representative. The findings of fact are not clearly erroneous and were not set aside. Because of contradictions in the evidence, the court respected the requirement under former Rule 52, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), that due regard be given to the opportunity of the District Court to judge the credibility of witnesses and applied the standard of review set forth in Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978). The District Court properly applied Montana common-law marriage standards. Those standards were applied in Estate of Murnion, 212 M 107, 686 P2d 893, 41 St. Rep. 1627 (1984), in finding a mutual agreement to marry. In contrast, there was no evidence of any such agreement between Sherri and deceased. In re Estate of Sartain, 212 M 206, 686 P2d 909, 41 St. Rep. 1691 (1984).

Objection Not Limited to Heirs or Devisees: This section does not limit objectors in a proceeding to heirs or devisees. Subsection (2)(b) of 72-3-503 states that the priorities of 72-3-502 apply unless an heir or devisee having a sufficiently substantial interest objects. Upon objection, the court may appoint a person who does not meet the priorities of 72-3-502, but who is acceptable to heirs and devisees whose interest appears to be worth more than one-half of the estate. In re Estate of Karst, 200 M 254, 650 P2d 792, 39 St. Rep. 1723 (1982).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Causes for Disqualifying: The fact that named executors might have used undue influence in obtaining property of testator before death, thereby giving rise to claim in behalf of estate against executors, was not in itself evidence of want of integrity such as would disqualify them. In re Estate of Graf, 150 M 577, 437 P2d 371 (1968).

Appointment or Removal of Personal Representative and Renunciation of Right to Appointment — Standards of Review: Whether a party has a statutory priority for appointment as a personal representative in Montana as a result of appointment as a personal representative in another state, as well as a coincident right to obtain removal of a special administrator, is a legal question that the Supreme Court will review to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law (see In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994)). Error in Refusal to Appoint Domiciliary Personal Representative as Successor Personal Representative Because of Conflict With Devisee Rather Than Conflict With Estate: The District Court refused to appoint domiciliary personal representatives as successor personal representatives of an estate because of a perceived conflict with a devisee of the estate. As domiciliary personal representatives, they had priority for appointment, as well as the coincident right to obtain removal of a special administrator. However, a District Court may remove or refuse to appoint a personal representative for cause if there is a conflict between that person's interests and those of the estate. In this case, the refusal to appoint was an abuse of the District Court's discretion because the refusal was not based on a conflict of interest with the estate, but rather with a devisee. The Supreme Court found no reason to refuse the appointment simply because the personal representatives might resist the claims of the devisee. Rather, the court remanded with directions that the personal representatives post a satisfactory bond pursuant to 72-3-513 to account for the devisee's concerns. In re Estate of Kuralt, 2001 MT 153, 306 M 73, 30 P3d 345 (2001).

Objection to Appointment of Personal Representative Not Allowed: Reeves argued that the lower court had improperly appointed her brother personal representative for their father's estate because he had not approached Reeves and had her agree to his nomination as personal representative. The Supreme Court refused to rule on the issue of whether the lower court had improperly appointed the personal representative because in an informal proceeding a person can only petition to have the personal representative removed for cause and cannot object to the appointment of the personal representative. Appointment of Ex-Wife as Personal Representative Based on Her Being Custodial Parent, Guardian, and Conservator of Heirs Affirmed — Best Interest of Estate Considered: The father of two young children died intestate and his father was appointed the personal representative of the estate. The decedent's former wife, the guardian and mother of the children, sought to remove the decedent's father as the personal representative and appoint herself instead based on her being the custodial parent, guardian, and conservator of the heirs. The District Court agreed that it was in the best interest of the estate to remove the decedent's father and appoint the former wife as its personal representative. The decedent's father appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed his removal and the appointment of his former daughter-in-law. Under the Uniform Probate Code, the conservator has the right to nominate the personal representative of the estate even if it is the former spouse of the decedent. 72-3-511. Acceptance of appointment — consent to jurisdiction.

Official Comments

Except for personal representatives appointed pursuant to [72-3-402], appointees are not deemed to be "officers" of the appointing court or to be parties in one continuous judicial proceeding that extends until final settlement. See [72-3-121]. Yet, it is desirable to continue present patterns which prevent a personal representative who might make himself unavailable to service within the state from affecting the power of the appointing court to enter valid orders affecting him. See Michigan Trust Co. v. Ferry (1912), 228 U.S. 346, 57 L.Ed. 867, 33 S.Ct. 550. The concept employed to accomplish this is that of requiring each appointee to consent in advance to the personal jurisdiction of the court in any proceeding relating to the estate that may be instituted against him. The section requires that he be given notice of any such proceeding, which, when considered in the light of the responsibility he has undertaken, should make the procedure sufficient to meet the requirements of due process.

Official Comments

This and related sections of this part describe details and conditions of appointment which apply to all personal representatives without regard to whether the appointment proceeding involved is formal or informal, or whether the personal representative is supervised. 72-3-513. Bond — when required.

Official Comments

This section must be read with the next three sections. The purpose of these provisions is to move away from the idea that bond always should be required of a probate fiduciary, or required unless a will excuses it. Also, it is designed to keep the registrar acting pursuant to applications in informal proceedings, from passing judgment in each case on the need for bond. The point is that the court and registrar are not responsible for seeing that personal representatives perform as they are supposed to perform. Rather, performance is coerced by the remedies available to interested persons. Interested persons are protected by their ability to demand prior notice of informal proceedings ([72-3-106]), to contest a requested appointment by use of a formal testacy proceeding or by use of a formal proceeding seeking the appointment of another person. Section [72-3-111(1)] gives general authority to the court in a formal proceeding to make appropriate orders as desirable incident to estate administration. This should be sufficient to make it clear that an informal application may be blocked by a formal petition which disputes the matters stated in the petition. Furthermore, an interested person has the remedies provided in [72-3-514 and 72-3-617]. Finally, interested persons have assurance under this code that their rights in respect to the values of a decedent's estate cannot be terminated without a judicial order after notice or before the passage of three years from the decedent's death.

It is believed that the total package of protection thus afforded may represent more real protection than a blanket requirement of bond. Surely, it permits a reduction in the procedures which must occur in uncomplicated estates where interested persons are perfectly willing to trust each other and the fiduciary.

72-3-514. Demand for bond by interested person.

Official Comments

The demand for bond described in this section may be made in a petition or application for appointment of a personal representative, or may be made after a personal representative has been appointed. The mechanism for compelling bond is designed to function without unnecessary judicial involvement. If demand for bond is made in a formal proceeding, the judge can determine the amount of bond to be required with due consideration for all circumstances. If demand is not made in formal proceedings, methods for computing the amount of bond are provided by statute so that the demand can be complied with without resort to judicial proceedings. The information which a personal representative is required by [72-3-603] to give each beneficiary includes a statement concerning whether bond has been required.

Official Comments

This section permits estimates of value needed to fix the amount of required bond to be filed when it becomes necessary. A consequence of this procedure is that estimates of value of estates no longer need appear in the petitions and applications which will attend every administered estate. Hence, a measure of privacy that is not possible under most existing procedures may be achieved. A co-signature arrangement might constitute adequate security within the meaning of this section.

72-3-521. Termination of appointment — general effect.

Official Comments

"Termination," as defined by this and succeeding provisions, provides definiteness respecting when the powers of a personal representative (who may or may not be discharged by court order) terminate.

It is to be noted that this section does not relate to jurisdiction over the estate in proceedings which may have been commenced against the personal representative prior to termination. In such cases, a substitution of successor or special representative should occur if the plaintiff desires to maintain his action against the estate.

It is important to note that "termination" is not "discharge." However, an order of the court entered under [72-3-1001, 72-3-1002, or 72-3-1003] both terminates the appointment of, and discharges, a personal representative.

72-3-523. Termination of appointment — change of testacy status.

Official Comments

This section and [72-3-302 through 72-3-304] describe the relationship between formal or informal proceedings which change a previous assumption concerning the testacy of the decedent, and a previously appointed personal representative. The basic assumption of both sections is that an appointment, with attendant powers of management, is separable from the basis of appointment; i.e., intestate or testate?; what will is the last will? Hence, a previously appointed personal representative continues to serve in spite of formal or informal proceedings that may give another a prior right to serve as personal representative. But, if the testacy status is changed in formal proceedings, the petitioner also may request appointment of the person who would be entitled to serve if his assumption concerning the decedent's will prevails. Provision is made for a situation where all interested persons are content to allow a previously appointed personal representative to continue to serve even though another has a prior right because of a change relating to the decedent's will. It is not necessary for the continuing representative to seek reappointment under the new assumption for [72-3-604, 72-3-610, and 72-3-611 are] broad enough to require him to administer the estate as intestate, or under a later probated will, if either status is established after he was appointed. Under [72-3-305 and 72-3-306], notice of a formal testacy proceeding is required to be given to any previously appointed personal representative. Hence, the testacy status cannot be changed without notice to a previously appointed personal representative.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that a resignation is not effective until a replacement is named. The lower court did not abuse its discretion in choosing to remove the personal representative rather than accept his resignation. Brown v. Robbins, 243 M 276, 794 P2d 677, 47 St. Rep. 1218 (1990).

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Potential Claim Against Personal Representative Sufficient Conflict of Interest to Warrant Removal for Cause: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in removing a personal representative for cause based on the existence of a potential claim against the personal representative sufficient to create a conflict of interest contrary to the best interests of the estate. In re Estate of Anderson-Feeley, 2007 MT 354, 340 M 352, 174 P3d 512 (2007), following In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994).

Insufficient Criteria to Warrant Removal of Personal Representative: Plaintiff claimed that the personal representative of Bjerke's estate should be removed because the representative distributed money contrary to the express terms of the will and improperly withheld property to which plaintiff was entitled. The District Court declined to remove the personal representative, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, given plaintiff's failure to establish any of the statutory criteria sufficient to warrant removal of the personal representative. Hanson v. Estate of Bjerke, 2004 MT 200, 322 M 280, 95 P3d 704 (2004).

Appointment or Removal of Personal Representative and Renunciation of Right to Appointment — Standards of Review: Whether a party has a statutory priority for appointment as a personal representative in Montana as a result of appointment as a personal representative in another state, as well as a coincident right to obtain removal of a special administrator, is a legal question that the Supreme Court will review to determine whether the District Court correctly interpreted the law (see In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230 (1994)). A question of whether a person has renounced the right to appointment as a personal representative involves the interpretation and application of the statute governing renunciation and will be reviewed for correctness (see In re Inquiry Into A.W., D.G., & M.G., Jr., 1999 MT 42, 293 M 358, 975 P2d 1250 (1999)). Whether a District Court has erred in refusing to appoint a person as a personal administrator, because that person has a conflict with another that prevents that person from being appointed a personal administrator, will be reviewed to determine whether there has been an abuse of the District Court's discretion (see In re Estate of Obstarczyk, 141 M 346, 377 P2d 531 (1963)). In re Estate of Kuralt, 2001 MT 153, 306 M 73, 30 P3d 345 (2001).

Error in Refusal to Appoint Domiciliary Personal Representative as Successor Personal Representative Because of Conflict With Devisee Rather Than Conflict With Estate: The District Court refused to appoint domiciliary personal representatives as successor personal representatives of an estate because of a perceived conflict with a devisee of the estate. As domiciliary personal representatives, they had priority for appointment, as well as the coincident right to obtain removal of a special administrator. However, a District Court may remove or refuse to appoint a personal representative for cause if there is a conflict between that person's interests and those of the estate. In this case, the refusal to appoint was an abuse of the District Court's discretion because the refusal was not based on a conflict of interest with the estate, but rather with a devisee. The Supreme Court found no reason to refuse the appointment simply because the personal representatives might resist the claims of the devisee. In re Estate of Kuralt, 2001 MT 153, 306 M 73, 30 P3d 345 (2001).

Hostility and Alienation — Removal of Copersonal Representative Within Discretion of Trial Court: Two sisters and a brother were appointed copersonal representatives of their mother's estate. The District Court removed the brother after finding that significant hostility and alienation existed between the sisters and him and that removal would enable an expeditious settlement and closure of the estate. The brother appealed the removal, contending that there were no legal grounds for it and that the court abused its discretion in doing so. The Supreme Court noted that a trial judge is given broad discretion to remove a personal representative for cause if the grounds are valid and supported by the record. Here, in addition to the hostility and alienation, the brother also violated specific orders of the court by refusing to prepare personal property lists and sign tax documents. The District Court did not err in finding that the brother provided no useful service as copersonal representative, and the Supreme Court affirmed his removal and declined to award his requested share of the personal representative fees. In re Estate of Greenheck, 2001 MT 114, 305 M 308, 27 P3d 42 (2001).

Conflict of Interest of Personal Representative Cured by Court Supervision of Estate: Prior to Zempel's death, he executed his will, naming his daughter, Palmer, as his sole devisee and his neighbor, Newman, as personal representative of the estate. Zempel then entered into an agreement to sell his ranch to Newman, who, acting pursuant to the power of attorney, executed a contract for deed and lease that transferred the ranch property to Newman. Following Zempel's death, the District Court appointed Palmer as special administrator based on an ex parte application. Shortly thereafter, Newman filed a petition for formal probate and appointment of personal representative, in conjunction with a motion to set aside the ex parte order. The District Court terminated the ex parte order, appointed Newman as personal representative, and ordered that any real estate transaction be approved by the court after notice and hearing. Palmer appealed Newman's appointment as personal representative, citing the conflict of interest that arose from the documents purportedly transferring estate assets to Newman. A conflict of interest is sufficient for removal of a personal representative for cause, but does not mandate removal. As established in In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165 (1996), a transaction involving a conflict of interest between a personal representative and an estate can be cured by a court-ordered supervision of the transaction. The District Court did not act arbitrarily in this case because it required its approval for the final transaction between the personal representative and the estate, protecting any objection or challenge by Palmer through supervision of the disputed transaction, which cured the conflict of interest. The court did not err when it appointed Newman as personal representative, and the appointment was affirmed. In re Estate of Zempel, 2000 MT 283, 302 M 183, 14 P3d 441, 57 St. Rep. 1182 (2000).

Alleged Failure of Personal Representative to Conduct Duties Insufficient to Warrant Removal: Haagenson's children filed a petition seeking removal of their stepmother, Darla, as personal representative of Haagenson's estate and for supervised administration of the estate, contending that because of a conflict of interest, Darla had become unable to discharge the duties of a personal representative, had mismanaged the estate, and had failed to perform the duties of her office. The District Court properly determined that absent an evidentiary showing, the children's mere allegations were an insufficient basis upon which to find that Darla had mismanaged the estate in a manner warranting her removal as personal representative. In re Estate of Haagenson, 286 M 34, 952 P2d 1385, 54 St. Rep. 1271 (1997).

Claim Against Personal Representative for Excessive Attorney Fees Sufficient to Warrant Removal: A potential claim against a personal representative, who was an attorney, for excessive attorney fees was sufficient to create a conflict of interest warranting removal for cause under this section. In re Estate of Peterson, 264 M 104, 874 P2d 1230, 51 St. Rep. 454 (1994), citing In re Estate of Obstarczyk, 141 M 346, 377 P2d 531 (1963).

Objection to Appointment of Personal Representative Not Allowed: Reeves argued that the lower court had improperly appointed her brother personal representative for their father's estate because he had not approached Reeves and had her agree to his nomination as personal representative. The Supreme Court refused to rule on the issue of whether the lower court had improperly appointed the personal representative because in an informal proceeding a person can only petition to have the personal representative removed for cause and cannot object to the appointment of the personal representative. Estate of Melvin, 261 M 408, 862 P2d 1159, 50 St. Rep. 1382 (1993).

Circumstantial Evidence Sufficient for Removal of Personal Representative: The personal representative argued that there was insufficient evidence to support his removal by the lower court. The Supreme Court held that there was strong circumstantial evidence of wrongdoing. Three checks allegedly signed by the deceased and totaling $60,000 were deposited into an account to which the personal representative had access. The checks were dated at a time when the decedent had been comatose. The Supreme Court stated that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the signatures had been forged by the personal representative. Brown v. Robbins, 243 M 276, 794 P2d 677, 47 St. Rep. 1218 (1990).

Inadequacy of Inventory and Appraisal — Removal of Personal Representative Warranted: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in removing a personal representative when substantial evidence showed that removal was in the best interest of the estate because: (1) an inventory and appraisement did not include the full and true value of each item, as required in 72-3-607; (2) several items were not listed in the inventory; (3) certain values were subject to question; and (4) the appraiser testified that he was not a certified gemologist and did not scientifically test items of jewelry listed in the inventory. In re Estate of Townsend, 243 M 185, 793 P2d 818, 47 St. Rep. 1120 (1990), followed in In re Estate of Hannum, 2012 MT 171, 366 Mont. 1, 285 P.3d 463.

Unsupported Removal of Personal Representative Improper: It was improper for the District Court to remove a personal representative in the absence of evidence establishing valid grounds for removal. In re Estate of Robbin, 230 M 30, 747 P2d 869, 44 St. Rep. 2228 (1987).

Abuse of Discretion — Refusal to Remove Personal Representative: Devisees appealed District Court's denial of petition to terminate the appointment of a personal representative. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for appointment of a successor, stating that the District Court had abused its discretion in disregarding uncontroverted evidence that the personal representative failed to judiciously administer the estate, failed to provide requests for accounting, and misled devisees. In re Estate of Stone, 223 M 327, 727 P2d 508, 43 St. Rep. 1760 (1986).

"Common Fund" Concept Not Applicable: When the petitioner made a motion to remove copersonal representatives after the court had held two hearings to approve accountings by the personal representatives and the motion was denied, the petitioner was not entitled to attorney fees from the estate. The common fund doctrine did not apply because the petitioner did not create, reserve, or increase a fund, and there were no reasonable grounds for her to expect to do so. In re Estate of Counts, 217 M 350, 704 P2d 1052, 42 St. Rep. 1243 (1985).

Hearing Not Mandatory — Res Judicata: When the District Court had held two hearings before approving accountings by copersonal representatives of the estate, the court did not abuse its discretion by denying, without a hearing, a subsequent motion to remove the personal representatives. The petition for removal was based on subjects covered in the first and second accountings, and petitioner was not denied an opportunity to be heard. Due process does not require a new hearing on matters that are res judicata. Petitioner's relief was to appeal the order approving the accountings, not to start a new action to remove the personal representatives. A hearing is required only if the petition states a cause for removal. In re Estate of Counts, 217 M 350, 704 P2d 1052, 42 St. Rep. 1243 (1985), followed in State ex rel. Dept. of Health and Environmental Sciences v. Reese, 260 M 24, 858 P2d 357, 50 St. Rep. 925 (1993).

Petition to Remove Personal Representative — Discovery Limited: The District Court did not err by ruling that copersonal representatives did not have to answer interrogatories filed in relation to petitioner's motion to remove the personal representatives. This is within the court's discretion to limit discovery under the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. In re Estate of Counts, 217 M 350, 704 P2d 1052, 42 St. Rep. 1243 (1985).

Grounds for Removal to Be Valid and Supported by Record: Wooten, an attorney, made and executed a holographic will which appointed Grafft as personal representative. The will gave Grafft personalty and a life estate in real property with several charities as remaindermen. Wooten died, and Grafft was appointed as personal representative. The remaindermen petitioned to remove Grafft as personal representative. The District Court removed Grafft, who appealed. The Supreme Court found that a trial judge has broad discretion as to the grounds upon which he may remove a personal representative, but the grounds must be valid and supported by the record. The record contained numerous expenditures of estate funds of questionable legitimacy, including the use of funds to finance the defense of certain criminal charges. The removal was upheld. In re the Estate of Wooten, 198 M 132, 643 P2d 1196, 39 St. Rep. 816 (1982); followed in In re Estate of Lehner, 220 M 129, 714 P2d 130, 43 St. Rep. 231 (1986).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Examination of Administrator: In proceeding for removal of administrator for misappropriation of funds of estate, administrator could be examined as adverse witness as provided in former Rule 43, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded); former Rule 81 (now superseded), excluding statutory proceedings from Rules of Civil Procedure to extent that statutory proceedings are contrary to rules, did not bar examination of administrator as adverse witness. In re Estate and Guardianship of Wyman, 149 M 525, 429 P2d 629 (1967).

Inventory of Assets: Administratrix who failed to file inventory and appraisement within 3 months after appointment, failed to file first accounting within 6 months after appointment, failed to make money from sale of property available to heirs, failed to provide estate with interest on money from sale of property, lost inheritance tax credit, and allowed tax penalties to be assessed against estate was properly removed. Personal Representative Limits on Role of Personal Representative — Conflict of Interest — Appointment of Special Administrator: While a claim by an estate was pending, the law partner of the attorney opposing the claim was appointed personal representative of the estate. On appeal from the denial of a petition to remove the personal representative or to appoint a special administrator, the Montana Supreme Court held that a special administrator should be appointed to handle the above claim. The personal representative was allowed to continue his duties with the exception of the claim involving his law partner. In re the Estate of Sauter, 189 M 244, 615 P2d 875, 37 St. Rep. 1425 (1980).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Jurisdiction of District Court on Remand: When the Supreme Court in the disposition of an appeal from an order settling an administrator's account remands the cause with directions to require that officer to file a further account and orders, as it could under 72-10-111 (now repealed), that the costs incident to the appeal shall be paid by the administrator personally, the jurisdiction of the District Court is limited to the enforcement of the order, except that it may determine disputed questions of costs or, on final settlement of the account, allow such portions of the costs incurred as a charge against the estate as justice may require. (Provisions of 72-12-502 (now repealed) were not applicable.) In re Jennings' Estate, 79 M 73, 254 P 1067 (1927).

72-3-601. Time of accrual of duties and powers — power of executor prior to appointment — ratification.

Official Comments

This section codifies the doctrine that the authority of a personal representative relates back to death from the moment it arises. It also makes it clear that authority of a personal representative stems from his appointment. The sentence concerning ratification is designed to eliminate technical questions that might arise concerning the validity of acts done by others prior to appointment. Section [72-3-613(21)] relates to delegation of authority after appointment. The third sentence accepts an idea found in the Illinois Probate Act, §79.

72-3-602. Priority among different letters.

Official Comments

The qualification relating to "modification" of an appointment is intended to refer to the change that may occur in respect to the exclusive authority of one with letters upon later appointment of a corepresentative or of a special administrator. The sentence concerning erroneous dual appointment is derived from recent New York legislation. See Section 704, Surrogate's Court Procedures Act.

Erroneous appointment of a second personal representative is possible if formal proceedings after notice are employed. It might be desirable for a state to promulgate a system whereby a notation of letters issued by each county probate office would be relayed to a central record keeping office which, in turn could indicate to any other office whether letters for a particular decedent, perhaps identified by social security number, had been issued previously. The problem can arise even though notice to known interested persons and by publication is involved.

72-3-603. Notice of appointment to heirs and devisees.

Official Comments

This section requires the personal representative to inform persons who appear to have an interest in the estate as it is being administered, of his appointment. Also, it requires the personal representative to give notice to persons who appear to be disinherited by the assumption concerning testacy under which the personal representative was appointed. The communication involved is not to be confused with the notice requirements relating to litigation. The duty applies even though there may have been a prior testacy proceeding after notice, except that persons who have been adjudicated to be without interest in the estate are excluded. The rights, if any, of persons in regard to estates cannot be cut off completely except by the running of the three-year statute of limitations provided in [72-3-122], or by a formal judicial proceeding which will include full notice to all interested persons. The interests of some persons may be shifted from rights to specific property of the decedent to the proceeds from sale thereof, or to rights to values received by distributees. However, such a shift of protected interest from one thing to another, or to funds or obligations, is not new in relation to trust beneficiaries. A personal representative may initiate formal proceedings to determine whether persons, other than those appearing to have interests, may be interested in the estate, under [72-3-302 through 72-3-304] or, in connection with a formal closing, as provided by [72-3-1001 and 72-3-1002].

No information or notice is required by this section if no personal representative is appointed.

1989 Amendment: Inserted (2)(b) relating to notification of administration by personal representative under Uniform Probate Code without supervision by the court; and made minor changes in form and phraseology.

1989 Editorial Comment: This change results from an amendment proposed by the Joint Editorial Board of the national Uniform Probate Code in 1987. The addition improves the likelihood that persons interested in an estate administered in the national Uniform Probate Code's "unsupervised estate" mode will realize that certain information from the personal representative may be expected and that the probate court, though unlikely to intervene on its own motion, is the appropriate place to file petitions for any desired relief by the court. See corresponding national Uniform Probate Code section 3-705.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 3-705.

72-3-604. Standing to sue.

Official Comments

[Sections 72-3-604, 72-3-605, 72-3-610, and 72-3-611] are especially important sections for they state the basic theory underlying the duties and powers of personal representatives. Whether or not a personal representative is supervised, [72-3-604, 72-3-610, and 72-3-611 apply] to describe the relationship he bears to interested parties. If a supervised representative is appointed, or if supervision of a previously appointed personal representative is ordered, an additional obligation to the court is created. See [72-3-401 and 72-3-404].

The fundamental responsibility is that of a trustee. Unlike many trustees, a personal representative's authority is derived from appointment by the public agency known as the Court. But, the Code also makes it clear that the personal representative, in spite of the source of his authority, is to proceed with the administration, settlement and distribution of the estate by use of statutory powers and in accordance with statutory directions. See [72-3-121 and 72-3-605]. [Section 72-3-611] is particularly important, for it ties the question of personal liability for administrative or distributive acts to the question of whether the act was "authorized at the time" [see 72-3-611]. Thus, a personal representative may rely upon and be protected by a will which has been probated without adjudication or an order appointing him to administer which is issued in no-notice proceedings even though proceedings occurring later may change the assumption as to whether the decedent died testate or intestate. See [72-3-215] concerning the status of a will probated without notice and [72-3-102] concerning ineffectiveness of an unprobated will. However, it does not follow from the fact that the personal representative distributed under authority that the distributees may not be liable to restore the property or values received if the assumption concerning testacy is later changed. See [72-3-906 and 72-3-1012]. Thus, a distribution may be "authorized at the time" within the meaning of [72-3-611], but be "improper" under the latter section.

[Section 72-3-604] is designed to reduce or eliminate differences in the amenability to suit of personal representatives appointed under this Code and under traditional assumptions. Also, the [section] states that so far as the law of the appointing forum is concerned, personal representatives are subject to suit in other jurisdictions. It, together with various provisions of [Chapter 4], are designed to eliminate many of the present reasons for ancillary administrations.

Case Notes

Attorney's Duty of Care Owed to Estate Beneficiary — Standing of Estate to Bring Legal Malpractice Action: A personal representative brought a legal malpractice damage suit on behalf of the estate against an attorney who drafted a trust document and will. Before granting summary judgment to the attorney, the District Court raised the issue of whether the estate and personal representative had standing to bring the suit, based on a questionable fiduciary relationship between the plaintiffs and the attorney. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that as a representative of the decedent, the estate stood in the shoes of the decedent and was thus considered to be in privity with the attorney, so the estate had standing to bring a malpractice claim. Further, the question of whether the trust and the personal representative had standing was a question of fact to be determined at trial, so summary judgment was precluded and the case remanded for further proceedings. Watkins Trust v. Lacosta, 2004 MT 144, 321 M 432, 92 P3d 620 (2004).

Appointment of Special Administrator for Failure of Personal Representatives to Sue: The residual beneficiary under a will petitioned to have itself appointed as special administrator of the estate. The personal representatives disagreed with the petitioner's opinion that the Skrochs abused their confidential relationship with the testatrix and unduly influenced her to create a joint tenancy, with rights of survivorship, in bank accounts totaling $190,000, at a time when she was allegedly incompetent. The petitioner wanted the personal representatives to litigate the claim, and they refused to do so after investigating the matter. There was no showing that the personal representatives were guilty of fraud, collusion, conflict of interest, or inability to act or that other special equitable circumstances required the petition to be granted. The petition was properly denied. In re Estate of Long, 225 M 429, 732 P2d 1347, 44 St. Rep. 375 (1987).

72-3-605. Personal representative to proceed without court order — power to invoke jurisdiction.

Official Comments

This section is intended to confer authority on the personal representative to initiate a proceeding at any time when it is necessary to resolve a question relating to administration. Section [72-3-111(1)] grants broad subject matter jurisdiction to the probate court which covers a proceeding initiated for any purpose other than those covered by more explicit provisions dealing with testacy proceedings, proceedings for supervised administration, proceedings concerning disputed claims and proceedings to close estates.

Case Notes

Probate Court's Jurisdiction Over Wrongful Death Action in Another District: Estate was being probated in one District Court, and personal representative's wrongful death action was being considered in another district. The probate court exceeded its jurisdiction when it assumed jurisdiction over the settlement of the wrongful death action, approved it, and ordered dismissal of the action. The Supreme Court stated that whether the proceeds of the settlement or award in the wrongful death action belonged to the estate or to the heirs was pertinent to the issue of the probate court's jurisdiction over the wrongful death action and that the probate court had jurisdiction only if the proceeds belonged to the estate. The Supreme Court did not appear to definitively decide the underlying issue, though it leaned toward the traditional rule that the proceeds belong to the heirs, are personal to them, and constitute no part of the estate. The court stated that it was for the Legislature to decide whether a District Court acting as a probate court should have some jurisdiction over a wrongful death claim filed in another District Court. In re Pegg's Estate, 209 M 71, 680 P2d 316, 41 St. Rep. 558 (1984).

72-3-606. Possession and protection of estate.

Official Comments

Section [72-3-101] provides for devolution of title on death. Section [72-3-616] defines the status of the personal representative with reference to "title" and "power" in a way that should make it unnecessary to discuss the "title" to decedent's assets which his personal representative acquires. This section deals with the personal representative's duty and right to possess assets. It proceeds from the assumption that it is desirable whenever possible to avoid disruption of possession of the decedent's assets by his devisees or heirs. But, if the personal representative decides that possession of an asset is necessary or desirable for purposes of administration, his judgment is made conclusive in any action for possession that he may need to institute against an heir or devisee. It may be possible for an heir or devisee to question the judgment of the personal representative in later action for surcharge for breach of fiduciary duty, but this possibility should not interfere with the personal representative's administrative authority as it relates to possession of the estate.

This code follows the Model Probate Code in regard to partnership interests. In the introduction to the Model Probate Code, the following appears at p.22:

"No provisions for the administration of partnership estates when a partner dies have been included. Several states have statutes providing that unless the surviving partner files a bond with the probate court, the personal representative of the deceased partner may administer the partnership estate upon giving an additional bond. Kan. Gen. Stat. (Supp. 1943) §§59-1001 to 59-1005; Mo. Rev. Stat. Ann. (1942) §§81 to 93. In these states the administration of partnership estates upon the death of a partner is brought more or less completely under the jurisdiction of the probate court. While the provisions afford security to parties in interest, they have caused complications in the settlement of partnership estates and have produced much litigation. Woener, Administration (3rd ed., 1923) §§128 to 130; annotation, 121 A.L.R. 860. These statutes have been held to be inconsistent with section 37 of the Uniform Partnership Act [Title 35, ch. 10] providing for winding up by the surviving partner. Davis v. Hutchinson (C.C.A. 9th, 1929) 36 F.(2d) 309. Hence the Model Probate Code contains no provision regarding partnership property except for inclusion in the inventory of the decedent's proportionate share of any partnership. See §120. However, it is suggested that the Uniform Partnership Act should be included in the statutes of the states which have not already enacted it."

Case Notes

Personal Representative's Right to Control Property for Purposes of Administration — No Control Over Decedent's Half Interest in Real Property That Passed Immediately to Decedent's Wife as Devisee: At the time of the plaintiff's father's death, the plaintiff's mother and father had each executed wills listing the other as primary devisee of the farm property they owned. Because title to a property vests in a devisee at the moment of the testator's death and does not depend on the devisee's receipt of deed or decree of distribution, the plaintiff's mother's title to the father's half interest in the real property vested immediately when he died. Therefore, the Supreme Court rejected the plaintiff's argument that a lease of the property that had been signed by her mother only was invalid because she, in her capacity as personal representative of her father's estate, had not signed the lease. In upholding the lease, the court rejected the plaintiff's argument that she had taken control over her father's half interest in the real property because it was necessary for purposes of administration under this section. The court reiterated that a personal representative's right to control property for administration is a qualified right that extends only to such purposes as paying creditors' claims, administration expenses, or family allowances. Therefore, absent any evidence in the record to suggest that it was necessary for the plaintiff to take control of the property for purposes of administering her father's estate, the plaintiff had no authority over the property. The plaintiff's mother was the sole owner of the property at the time she executed the lease, and the court upheld the lease as valid. Shephard v. Widhalm, 2012 MT 276, 367 Mont. 166, 290 P.3d 712.

Sufficient Finding of Undue Influence Over Parent — Constructive Trusts Properly Imposed and Damages Awarded: When Josephine became too ill to manage herself and her affairs, her daughter Melissa agreed to move in with Josephine and care for her. In the process, as Josephine's health steadily declined, Melissa used her confidential relationship with Josephine to manipulate Josephine and her finances, controlling Josephine's checking account, mail, and payment of bills and expenses. By the time Josephine died, Melissa had obtained title to all of Josephine's real property, sold Josephine's property in Ovando and Florida, encumbered the remaining property with over $175,000 in loans taken out in Josephine's name, used part of the loan proceeds to buy property in Missoula and Las Vegas, exhausted all cash in Josephine's house, repeatedly overdrawn Josephine's checking account, fraudulently cashed one of Josephine's certificates of deposit by forging Josephine's name to it, used and obtained credit cards in Josephine's name and charged the account to the credit limit, exhausted all of Josephine's savings, Social Security, retirement, and annuity income, retained rental income from Josephine's rental units without accounting for it, destroyed years of Josephine's financial records while keeping very few records after assuming control of Josephine's affairs, fabricated lease documents and forged signatures on them to obtain loans in Josephine's name, used Josephine's money to pay all personal bills and obligations, never informed her siblings or provided an accounting of expenditures of Josephine's income and assets, and refused to provide a copy of Josephine's will, answer questions, or provide any other information. Melissa's brother Robert obtained a copy of the will and commenced an action to recover assets of Josephine's estate from Melissa. The District Court held Melissa accountable for a money judgment of $177,000 and for other items, totaling nearly $400,000. The court imposed a constructive trust on all real property that Melissa had obtained from Josephine or purchased with loan proceeds obtained in Josephine's name and awarded Robert costs and attorney fees. Melissa appealed. The Supreme Court applied the criteria in In re Estate of Bradshaw, 2001 MT 92, 305 M 178, 24 P3d 211 (2001), and determined that Melissa had exercised undue influence over Josephine. It concluded that there were ample reasons for imposition of the constructive trusts because the properties were obtained through undue influence and would have unjustly enriched Melissa if she were allowed to retain title to the properties. The damage award was based on substantial evidence and did not constitute error. The award of attorney fees and costs was within the equitable powers of the District Court based on the extraordinary efforts by Melissa to conceal her use of Josephine's property and money, which required Robert to make substantial efforts to successfully uncover and prove Melissa's wrongful conduct. The District Court was affirmed on all issues. Monroe v. Marsden, 2009 MT 137, 350 M 327, 207 P3d 320 (2009).

Deduction of Devisee's Expenses for Upkeep of Real Property From Devisee's Share of Estate: Mary was bequeathed her mother's house and lived in it after her mother died. The question arose whether the estate, or Mary as devisee, was responsible for necessary expenses related to upkeep of the real property during the will contest. The Supreme Court cited the general rule from 34 C.J.S. Executors and Administrators 542 (2003), that unauthorized advancements and disbursements made in good faith by the representative for the benefit of legatees or distributees of the estate are to be reimbursed from their respective portions of the estate. The house immediately devolved to Mary, and only if the personal representative had determined that it was necessary to take possession of the house for administration purposes, would the estate have been responsible for related expenses. However, because the personal representative did not take possession of the house, payments made by the personal representative for upkeep on the property were solely for Mary's benefit and thus chargeable to Mary's portion of the estate. In re Estate of McMurchie, 2004 MT 98, 321 M 21, 89 P3d 18 (2004). See also In re Stutchbury's Will, 138 N.Y.S. 2d 653 (1954).

Appointment of Special Administrator for Failure of Personal Representatives to Sue: The residual beneficiary under a will petitioned to have itself appointed as special administrator of the estate. The personal representatives disagreed with the petitioner's opinion that the Skrochs abused their confidential relationship with the testatrix and unduly influenced her to create a joint tenancy, with rights of survivorship, in bank accounts totaling $190,000, at a time when she was allegedly incompetent. The petitioner wanted the personal representatives to litigate the claim, and they refused to do so after investigating the matter. There was no showing that the personal representatives were guilty of fraud, collusion, conflict of interest, or inability to act or that other special equitable circumstances required the petition to be granted. The petition was properly denied. In re Estate of Long, 225 M 429, 732 P2d 1347, 44 St. Rep. 375 (1987).

Denial of Partial Distribution — No Abuse of Discretion: In an action by the children of the decedent for partial distribution of the estate, the personal representative resisted the request because the distribution would leave insufficient assets from which the share of debts, expenses, and taxes could be paid or provided. This was not error or abuse of the personal representative's discretion. It is the personal representative's responsibility, under 72-3-606, to manage, protect, and preserve the estate. In re Estate of Barber, 216 M 26, 699 P2d 90, 42 St. Rep. 612 (1985).

72-3-607. Inventory — appraisal.

Official Comments

[This section eliminates] the practice now required by many probate statutes under which the judge is involved in the selection of appraisers. If the personal representative breaches his duty concerning the inventory, he may be removed. Section [72-3-526]. Or, an interested person seeking to surcharge a personal representative for losses incurred as a result of his administration might be able to take advantage of any breach of duty concerning inventory. The section provides two ways in which a personal representative may handle an inventory. If the personal representative elects to send copies to all interested persons who request it, information concerning the assets of the estate need not become a part of the records of the probate court. The alternative procedure is to file the inventory with the court. This procedure would be indicated in estates with large numbers of interested persons, where the burden of sending copies to all would be substantial. The Court's role in respect to the second alternative is simply to receive and file the inventory with the file relating to the estate. See [72-3-106], which permits any interested person to demand notice of any document relating to an estate which may be filed with the Court.

2003 Amendment: Chapter 68 substituted (1) concerning inventory within 9 months of appointment of personal representative for former text that read: "If the estate must file a United States estate tax return, within the time required for the filing of the United States estate tax return plus any extensions granted by the internal revenue service, a personal representative, who is not a special administrator or a successor to another representative who has previously discharged this duty, shall prepare and file or mail an inventory. The inventory must include a listing of all property that:

(a) the decedent owned, had an interest in or control over, individually, in common, or jointly, or otherwise had at the time of the decedent's death;

(b) the decedent had possessory or dispository rights over at the time of death or had disposed of for less than its fair market value within 3 years of the decedent's death; or

(c) was affected by the decedent's death for the purpose of estate taxes"; in (2) near beginning of second sentence substituted "may" for "shall"; in (3)(b) substituted language concerning filing the original of the inventory and sending a copy to interested persons for "the personal representative may file the original of the inventory with the court. In any event, a copy of the inventory and statement of value must be mailed to the department of revenue"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective March 14, 2003.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 9, Ch. 68, L. 2003, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to deaths occurring after December 31, 2000, for which the probate of the decedents' estates closes after [the effective date of this act]." Effective March 14, 2003.

2000 Amendment by Referendum: Chapter 9 at beginning of (1) inserted "If the estate must file a United States estate tax return"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective November 7, 2000.

Applicability: Section 38, Ch. 9, Sp. L. May 2000, provided: "This act applies to deaths occurring after December 31, 2000."

1989 Amendment: At beginning of (1) substituted reference to U.S. estate tax filing period for "Within 3 months after his appointment".

1989 Editorial Comment: Former Montana law required the personal representative to prepare and file or mail an inventory and appraisement within 3 months after his appointment. This change extends the deadline to the time required for filing of a United States estate tax return (9 months after the date of the decedent's death, Internal Revenue Code section 6075(a)) plus any extension granted by the Internal Revenue Service. See corresponding national Uniform Probate Code section 3-706.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 3-706.

Changes From Uniform Act: The first paragraph of the corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code reads as follows: "Within three months after his appointment, a personal representative, who is not a special administrator or a successor to another representative who has previously discharged this duty, shall prepare and file or mail an inventory of property owned by the decedent at the time of his death, listing it with reasonable detail, and indicating as to each listed item, its fair market value as of the date of the decedent's death, and the type and amount of any encumbrance that may exist with reference to any item." The second sentence in the second paragraph is omitted in the official text. Section 3-707 of the Uniform Probate Code, relating to employment to appraisers, is omitted from the Montana enactment.

Case Notes

Inadequacy of Inventory and Appraisal — Removal of Personal Representative Warranted: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in removing a personal representative when substantial evidence showed that removal was in the best interest of the estate because: (1) an inventory and appraisement did not include the full and true value of each item, as required in this section; (2) several items were not listed in the inventory; (3) certain values were subject to question; and (4) the appraiser testified that he was not a certified gemologist and did not scientifically test items of jewelry listed in the inventory. In re Estate of Townsend, 243 M 185, 793 P2d 818, 47 St. Rep. 1120 (1990), followed in In re Estate of Hannum, 2012 MT 171, 366 Mont. 1, 285 P.3d 463.

Amendment effective March 14, 2003.

Retroactive Applicability: Section 9, Ch. 68, L. 2003, provided: "[This act] applies retroactively, within the meaning of 1-2-109, to deaths occurring after December 31, 2000, for which the probate of the decedents' estates closes after [the effective date of this act]." Effective March 14, 2003.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Insufficient Criteria to Warrant Removal of Personal Representative: Plaintiff claimed that the personal representative of Bjerke's estate should be removed because the representative distributed money contrary to the express terms of the will and improperly withheld property to which plaintiff was entitled. The District Court declined to remove the personal representative, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, given plaintiff's failure to establish any of the statutory criteria sufficient to warrant removal of the personal representative. Hanson v. Estate of Bjerke, 2004 MT 200, 322 M 280, 95 P3d 704 (2004).

Action Not Brought in Good Faith — No Costs or Attorney Fees: The District Court interpreted a will which left the residue of testatrix's estate to her grandchildren "in equal shares, per stirpes and not per capita" as devising one-eighth equal shares to the named grandchildren. A copersonal representative appealed, claiming that the estate should go one-half to her two children and one-half to the six children of her sister. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court and denied appellant attorney fees and costs on the basis that appellant did not prosecute the action in good faith as a fiduciary of the estate and its successors. In re Estate of Evans, 217 M 89, 704 P2d 35, 42 St. Rep. 1047 (1985).

Denial of Partial Distribution — No Abuse of Discretion: In an action by the children of the decedent for partial distribution of the estate, the personal representative resisted the request because the distribution would leave insufficient assets from which the share of debts, expenses, and taxes could be paid or provided. This was not error or abuse of the personal representative's discretion. It is the personal representative's responsibility, under 72-3-606, to manage, protect, and preserve the estate. In re Estate of Barber, 216 M 26, 699 P2d 90, 42 St. Rep. 612 (1985).

Powers of Special Administrators and Rights of Heirs in Legal Actions: After a special administrator was appointed to continue prosecution of an action begun before the testatrix's death, the heir to the estate sought to intervene in the case but was denied. Although holding that ruling nonappealable, the Supreme Court did grant the heir's Writ of Supervisory Control. Nonetheless, it found the heir was not a proper intervenor in the suit because her interest was represented adequately by the special administrator, noting that the heir had no right to pursue the action herself unless the personal representative failed to act on the claim, which was not the case here. Further, an administrator could sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is brought. State ex rel. Palmer v. District Court, 190 M 185, 619 P2d 1201, 37 St. Rep. 1876 (1980).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Performance of Requests Not Required: Administratrix who signed petition promising final distribution of estate according to terms and provisions of will had no obligation to carry out precatory language of will suggesting the subsequent disposition of devise by devisee. Stapleton v. DeVries, 167 M 108, 535 P2d 1267 (1975).

Collection of Assets: Executor was not liable for loss occasioned to estate by virtue of decedent's stockbroker's theft of decedent's securities, which theft occurred prior to the death of decedent but was not discovered until one year after decedent's death; the executor was responsible for the "assets" existing in the estate of the decedent at the time of death, and the only "asset" of the estate existing at the time was a claim for the value of the securities stolen from decedent during his lifetime, which the executor attempted diligently to collect through instigation of receivership proceedings against brokerage firm owned by decedent's stockbroker. In re Estate of Schueren, 162 M 417, 512 P2d 1283 (1973).

72-3-612. No individual liability — exceptions — certain claims to be brought against personal representative.

Official Comments

In the absence of statute an executor, administrator or a trustee is personally liable on contracts entered into in his fiduciary capacity unless he expressly excludes personal liability in the contract. He is commonly personally liable for obligations stemming from ownership or possession of the property (e.g., taxes) and for torts committed by servants employed in the management of the property. The claimant ordinarily can reach the estate only after exhausting his remedies against the fiduciary as an individual and then only to the extent that the fiduciary is entitled to indemnity from the property. This and the following sections are designed to make the estate a quasi-corporation for purposes of such liabilities. The personal representative would be personally liable only if an agent for a corporation would be under the same circumstances, and the claimant has a direct remedy against the quasi-corporate property.

Fairness of Fee: Attorney fee contracts made after the establishment of the fiduciary attorney-client relationship are valid if they are "fair and equitable". Fairness is determined by taking account of such relevant factors as good faith and full disclosure in the execution of the contract, the amount of the fee, and the client's maturity, intelligence, and understanding of the transaction. The burden of establishing fairness is on the attorney. In re Estate of Magelssen, 182 M 372, 597 P2d 90 (1979).

Fee Contracts Binding on Estate: The personal representative of an estate can contract for an attorney's services, and the estate is bound by such contracts. Though the fee contract is open to review, the amount of the fee is not automatically converted into a quantum meruit measure of compensation. Indeed, quantum meruit compensation is normally appropriate only where a valid contract does not exist. In re Estate of Magelssen, 182 M 372, 597 P2d 90 (1979).

72-3-613. Transactions authorized for personal representative.

Official Comments

This section accepts the assumption of the Uniform Trustee's Powers Act that it is desirable to equip fiduciaries with the authority required for the prudent handling of assets and extends it to personal representatives. The section requires that a personal representative act reasonably and for the benefit of the interested person. Subject to this and to the other qualifications described by the preliminary statement, the enumerated transactions are made authorized transactions for personal representatives. Subparagraphs [(26)] and (18) support the other provisions of the code, particularly [72-3-605], which contemplates that personal representatives will proceed with all of the business of administration without court orders.

In part, subparagraph (4) involves a substantive question of whether noncontractual charitable pledges of a decedent can be honored by his personal representative. It is believed, however, that it is not desirable from a practical standpoint to make much turn on whether a charitable pledge is, or is not, contractual. Pledges are rarely made the subject of claims. The effect of subparagraph (4) is to permit the personal representative to discharge pledges where he believes the decedent would have wanted him to do so without exposing himself to a surcharge. The holder of a contractual pledge may, of course, pursue the remedies of a creditor. If a pledge provides that the obligation ceases on the death of the pledgor, no personal representative would be safe in assuming that the decedent would want the pledge completed under the circumstances.

Subsection (3) is not intended to affect the right to performance or to damages of any person who contracted with the decedent. To do so would constitute an unreasonable interference with private rights. The intention of the subsection is simply to give a personal representative who is obligated to carry out a decedent's contracts the same alternatives in regard to the contractual duties which the decedent had prior to his death.

1999 Amendment: Chapter 290 in (24) substituted "in the same business form, including a sole proprietorship, partnership, or limited liability company, unless otherwise ordered by the court in a formal proceeding initiated by an interested person on the basis that continuation of the business is not in the best interests of the estate or its beneficiaries" for "(a) in the same business form for a period of not more than 4 months from the date of appointment of a general personal representative if continuation is a reasonable means of preserving the value of the business, including good will;

(b) in the same business form for any additional period of time that may be approved by order of the court in a formal proceeding to which the persons interested in the estate are parties; or

(c) throughout the period of administration, if the business is incorporated by the personal representative and if none of the probable distributees of the business who are competent adults object to its incorporation and retention in the estate"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 9, 1999.

1989 Amendment: In (5), after "trustees generally", inserted remainder of (5) that read: "If the personal representative is authorized to invest funds in United States obligations, he may invest in these obligations either directly or in the form of securities of or other interests in an open-end or closed-end management type investment company or investment trust registered under the Investment Company Act of 1940 (15 U.S.C. 80a-1 through 80a-64), as amended, if:

(a) the portfolio of the investment company or investment trust is limited to United States government obligations and repurchase agreements fully collateralized by United States government obligations; and

(b) the investment company or investment trust takes delivery of the collateral for any repurchase agreement, either directly or through an authorized custodian"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 3-715.

Changes From Uniform Act: The Montana enactment inserted the phrase "with the consent of the heirs or devisees or the court" at the beginning of subdivisions (11) and (17), and a subdivision in the Uniform Probate Code section authorizing provision "for exoneration of the personal representative from personal liability in any contract entered into on behalf of the estate" was omitted.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Attorney Fees Fairly Allocated to Estate — No Abuse of Discretion: Part of a probate case was settled in South Dakota and part in Montana. Attorneys kept separate billing records for each case, ensuring that only the costs of defending the Montana action would be chargeable to the estate. The services rendered were beneficial to the estate, and the District Court did not err in awarding $23,164.01 for defending the Montana case and $20,370.12 in statutory and extraordinary fees, including $1,750 for expert testimony concerning reasonableness of the fees, plus $692.78 in costs. In re Estate of McMurchie, 2004 MT 98, 321 M 21, 89 P3d 18 (2004).

Deduction of Devisee's Expenses for Upkeep of Real Property From Devisee's Share of Estate: Mary was bequeathed her mother's house and lived in it after her mother died. The question arose whether the estate, or Mary as devisee, was responsible for necessary expenses related to upkeep of the real property during the will contest. The Supreme Court cited the general rule from 34 C.J.S. Executors and Administrators 542 (2003), that unauthorized advancements and disbursements made in good faith by the representative for the benefit of legatees or distributees of the estate are to be reimbursed from their respective portions of the estate. The house immediately devolved to Mary, and only if the personal representative had determined that it was necessary to take possession of the house for administration purposes, would the estate have been responsible for related expenses. However, because the personal representative did not take possession of the house, payments made by the personal representative for upkeep on the property were solely for Mary's benefit and thus chargeable to Mary's portion of the estate. In re Estate of McMurchie, 2004 MT 98, 321 M 21, 89 P3d 18 (2004). See also In re Stutchbury's Will, 138 N.Y.S. 2d 653 (1954).

Contested Ownership of Independent Business — Standard of Review of Judgment on Pleadings: Hedges claimed ownership of an independent Melaleuca business, allegedly acquired through a written transfer of the business by Johnson, the former owner, before Johnson's death. As corepresentatives of Johnson's estate, the Woodhouses claimed ownership of the same business by virtue of a residuary devise in Johnson's will. The uncontroverted facts in the pleadings served as the factual basis for the parties' competing motions for judgment on the pleadings. A movant for judgment on the pleadings must establish that no material fact exists and that movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law, and pleadings are to be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, whose allegations are taken as true. The conclusions of law standard of review is applied. The District Court properly looked to Johnson's Melaleuca contract, which required that Melaleuca accept signed and acknowledged forms in respect to transfer of a business during a business owner's lifetime and approve the transfer in writing. The contractual restrictions on assignment of a Melaleuca contract were not met by Johnson's written transfer of the business to Hedges, and the court correctly concluded that Johnson's assignment was not valid. Judgment on the pleadings for Woodhouses was affirmed. Hedges v. Woodhouse, 2000 MT 220, 301 M 180, 8 P3d 109, 57 St. Rep. 905 (2000).

Personal Representative Bound by Buyout Provision in Property Agreement — Specific Performance Proper: In 1960, four couples entered a property agreement regarding the use and maintenance of a vacation cabin on Holter Lake. Each couple received an undivided one-fourth interest in the property. The agreement contained a provision allowing cotenants to buy out a couple's interest by two methods: (1) through a voluntary inter vivos sale by a couple to the cotenants for $1,000 or the value of a couple's interest after a contribution toward the purchase of the interest of any former couple; or (2) through a compulsory buyout of a surviving spouse's interest at death. Over the years, all the parties died except Berger, who in 1991 tendered $1,334 to Baker's estate for her interest in the property, which by then constituted a one-third share. Baker's personal representative refused the tender on grounds that the agreement was unenforceable, but the District Court granted Berger specific performance of the agreement. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the lower court decision as a proper use of discretion, holding that: (1) even under the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, transfer of a surviving spouse's interest in the property was prohibited; (2) generally contracts made by a decedent are specifically enforceable against the decedent's personal representatives, heirs, devisees, and assigns even when they were not a party to the original agreement; (3) the agreement contained an express covenant to sell that justified enforcement of the agreement against the estate; and (4) despite any increase in the fair market value of the property, good consideration was established under the original terms of the agreement, so no new consideration was required, and Berger was entitled to receive what was contained in the original bargain. Baker v. Berger, 265 M 21, 873 P2d 940, 51 St. Rep. 389 (1994).

Payment of Fees — Repayment of Loans: The personal representative had authority to pay the estate's attorney and repay herself for loans she had made to the estate, without a prior order from the District Court. Under 72-3-404, a supervised personal representative has, without interim orders approving the exercise of a power, all powers of personal representatives under the code, except that the personal representative may not make a distribution of the estate without the prior order of the court. This authority includes the power provided under this section to pay her own compensation and other expenses incident to the administration of the estate. In re Estate of Barber, 239 M 129, 779 P2d 477, 46 St. Rep. 1565 (1989).

Employment Contract — Interpretation — Deduction of Payments Under Previous Contract: Appellant's contract of employment with Ollie May Vestal was terminated by her death. After her death, he entered into a new employment contract with the personal representative of her estate. Payments made under the original contract may not be deducted from payments due under the second contract of employment, even if payments made under the original contract were greater than the stated amount. Heintz v. Vestal, 185 M 233, 605 P2d 606, 37 St. Rep. 99 (1980).

Fairness of Fee: Attorney fee contracts made after the establishment of the fiduciary attorney-client relationship are valid if they are "fair and equitable". Fairness is determined by taking account of such relevant factors as good faith and full disclosure in the execution of the contract, the amount of the fee, and the client's maturity, intelligence, and understanding of the transaction. The burden of establishing fairness is on the attorney. In re Estate of Magelssen, 182 M 372, 597 P2d 90 (1979).

Fee Contracts Binding on Estate: The personal representative of an estate can contract for an attorney's services, and the estate is bound by such contracts. Though the fee contract is open to review, the amount of the fee is not automatically converted into a quantum meruit measure of compensation. Indeed, quantum meruit compensation is normally appropriate only where a valid contract does not exist. In re Estate of Magelssen, 182 M 372, 597 P2d 90 (1979).

Unsuccessful Applicant Not Entitled to Attorney Fees: An unsuccessful applicant for letters of administration is not entitled to attorney fees and costs out of the estate of decedent because litigation ensued in a contest to administer an estate is not beneficial to the estate or beneficiaries. In re Dygert, 170 M 31, 550 P2d 393 (1976).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Statute of Limitations — Confidential Relationship Tolls: Plaintiff's husband and defendant were brothers and partners in a ranching operation, although each owned the land individually. Plaintiff's husband died and defendant was named executor. A corporation was formed to operate the ranch on May 1, 1973. Both parties transferred all assets to the corporation. Defendant's family got 364 more shares than plaintiff, and defendant was named president of the corporation. Restrictions were placed on the valuation and transfer of stock. On May 29, 1975, plaintiff consulted her own attorney and for the first time fully realized her position. All corporate votes became deadlocked. On April 29, 1977, plaintiff filed suit to dissolve the corporation, alleging fraud and oppressive conduct by defendant and mistake at the formation. Defendant contended the suit was barred by the Statute of Limitations, claiming that any fraud or mistake occurred in 1973. The court found that defendant occupied a position of trust and confidence in relation to plaintiff. He was executor of her husband's estate and partner to her husband at the date of death; that status imposed on defendant the duties of a trustee. The confidential relationship did not cease until May 29, 1975, when plaintiff first discovered her inferior position. This action was filed within the 2-year period from that date. Skierka v. Skierka Bros., Inc., 192 M 505, 629 P2d 214, 38 St. Rep. 754 (1981).

Inheritance Tax: Real property and tangible personal property retain their status as such upon the death of a partner and are not exempt from inheritance tax under 72-16-801 (now repealed) as intangible property. In re Perry's Estate, 121 M 280, 192 P2d 532 (1948).

Partnership Property as Part of the Estate:

Until the affairs of the partnership have been settled, the partnership property is not property of the estate of the deceased party to be administered as such. In re Perry's Estate, 121 M 280, 192 P2d 532 (1948).

Until the affairs of a partnership are settled and the share of one of the partners who has died is paid over to his personal representative, partnership property is in no sense property of the decedent's estate to be administered as a part of the estate. White v. Prahl, 94 M 345, 22 P2d 315 (1933).

Partner Failing to Retain Possession of Partnership Property — Estoppel: In an action against the administrator of the estate of plaintiff's brother to establish that a partnership had existed between plaintiff and deceased, where plaintiff took possession of all property and business in question upon the death of the brother and retained it until the Court ordered that it be turned over to the administrator appointed, plaintiff's failure to retain possession did not estop him from claiming a right of possession for the purposes of his action to establish a partnership between him and decedent. Gaspar v. Buckingham, 116 M 236, 153 P2d 892 (1944).

Partnership — Sufficiency of Complaint to Establish: A complaint in an action against the administrator of the estate of plaintiff's brother to establish that a partnership had existed between plaintiff and deceased was not defective for failing to allege that plaintiff had made an accounting or that the claim had been presented to the administrator, where the action involved a transaction by defendant administrator who had taken over the partnership property by court order contrary to 72-12-701 (now repealed) together with plaintiff's personal bank account, since the case involved not the partnership operation prior to death or money claimed due from him at his death, but transactions after his death by his administrator not within the claim statute. Gaspar v. Buckingham, 116 M 236, 153 P2d 892 (1944).

Partnership Property in Possession of Administrator: When the administrator, under Probate Court order and guidance, had contrary to 72-12-701 (now repealed) taken over and assumed to administer the partnership property together with plaintiff's alleged bank account, plaintiff, who instituted an action to establish a partnership between himself and deceased in the livestock and ranching business and by reason thereof his right to one-half of all the assets of such business in the administrator's possession, and for his bank account and funds he had advanced for administration purposes, was entitled to a money judgment as plaintiff was not expected to account for defendant's management of partnership property. Gaspar v. Buckingham, 116 M 236, 153 P2d 892 (1944).

Action Against Partner for Accounting — Defenses of Statute of Limitations or Laches Not Available: One of two copartners in the livestock business died in 1903. By his will he reserved to his wife a life estate in all his property. The remaindermen and the widow agreed that the business should be continued as before, thus creating a new partnership between the surviving partner and the widow. The executor acted until his death in 1918; no successor was appointed. The widow died in 1929. The District Court dismissed an action thereafter brought to secure an accounting from the surviving partner in connection with the affairs of the original partnership, on the ground that it was barred under the Statute of Limitations as well as on the theory of laches. Under the agreement to continue the business as it had been run prior to the death of the original partner, the estate remained dormant until the death of the life tenant, the widow; in the interim, no cause of action could arise calling for action on the part of the remaindermen, and therefore, the finding that the action was barred was error. Thompson v. Flynn, 95 M 484, 27 P2d 505 (1933).

Failure of Surviving Partner to Account to Representative of Estate — Representative, Not Heirs, Required to Sue for Accounting: When a surviving partner fails to render an account to the personal representative of the deceased partner on settlement of the partnership business, the representative and not the heirs must sue for an accounting; however, it is incumbent upon those interested in the estate to see that the representative performs his duty in that regard. Thompson v. Flynn, 95 M 484, 27 P2d 505 (1933).

Power of Surviving Partner — Action on Note — Joinder of Heirs Unnecessary: A surviving partner is not required to join the heirs of his deceased partner as parties plaintiff in his action to recover on promissory notes held by the partnership. He alone has the right to collect claims due the partnership, unaffected by the fact that he made accounting to the administratrix of the estate of the decedent, the purpose of which was merely to show the condition of the partnership affairs or by the entry of decree of final distribution of the decedent's estate. White v. Prahl, 94 M 345, 22 P2d 315 (1933).

Mining Partnerships — Not Applicable: The rule declared by 72-12-701 (now repealed) that in case of death of one member of a partnership the surviving partner has the right to the possession of all of the partnership property and to settle its business, and that the partnership assets form no part of the individual estate of the deceased partner until the partnership affairs have been wound up by the survivor, applies to general trading partnerships only, not to mining partnerships. Bielenberg v. Higgins, 85 M 56, 277 P 631 (1929).

Surviving Partner's Action for Accounting Against Personal Representative: Section 72-12-701 (now repealed), relating to the duties of a surviving partner in winding up the affairs of the partnership, did not by implication abrogate the right of the survivor to bring a suit in equity for an accounting against the personal representative of the decedent in a proper case. If such was the intention, the section would be unconstitutional, since District Courts may not by legislative action be deprived of jurisdiction in all equity cases granted them by Art. VIII, sec. 11, 1889 Mont. Const. (now Art. VII, sec. 4, 1972 Mont. Const.). Link v. Haire, 82 M 406, 267 P 952 (1928).

Power of Surviving Partner — Duty to Account to Estate:

When the affairs of a general partnership dissolved by death were not fully settled, an action for an accounting by the surviving partner for his sole benefit against the executrix of the decedent did not lie, in view of the provisions of Title 72, ch. 12, part 7 (now repealed), which among other things make it the duty of the survivor who, in contemplation of law, is in actual possession of the partnership property to wind up its affairs, and thereupon account to the personal representative of the decedent. Mares v. Mares, 60 M 36, 199 P 267 (1921), distinguished in Gaspar v. Buckingham, 116 M 236, 153 P2d 892 (1944).

A surviving partner may be required to make known the amount of partnership debts and the amount of firm assets in his possession, to the end that the Court may determine whether the possession of firm property held by the estate of the deceased partner is necessary in order that the surviving partner may discharge the duties imposed upon him by Title 72, ch. 12, part 7 (now repealed). Silver v. Eakins, 55 M 210, 175 P 876 (1918).

When death dissolves a general trading partnership, the surviving partners are entitled to continue in possession and to settle the partnership affairs. It is their duty to account to the deceased partner's estate, and, upon failure to do so, they may be compelled by summary proceedings. Boehme v. Fitzgerald, 43 M 226, 115 P 413 (1911).

Power of Surviving Partner:

The death of a partner dissolves the partnership and the surviving partner at once becomes entitled to the possession of sufficient firm property to enable him to discharge the duties imposed by 72-12-701 (now repealed). Silver v. Eakins, 55 M 210, 175 P 876 (1918).

A surviving partner has the right to continue in possession of the partnership property and to settle the partnership business. The authority to settle up the business contemplates the completion of transactions begun before the death of the one partner. The surviving partner not only has the authority to expend the partnership means in protecting partnership property, but it is his duty. Weiss v. Hamilton, 40 M 99, 105 P 74 (1909).

Power of Surviving Partner — Effect of Failure to Give Bond: The failure of a surviving partner to give the bond required by 72-12-702 (now repealed) did not affect his right to the possession of the firm property or defeat his right to maintain any appropriate action concerning it. The bond was required merely to protect the interest of the deceased partner. Silver v. Eakins, 55 M 210, 175 P 876 (1918).

Power of Surviving Partner — Sufficiency of Complaint in Action Against Estate: A complaint in an action by a surviving partner to recover partnership property from the estate of the deceased partner was insufficient, under 72-12-701 (now repealed), for failure to disclose the amount of the firm's debts, if any, or the amount or value of its assets in plaintiff's possession. Silver v. Eakins, 55 M 210, 175 P 876 (1918).

Power of Surviving Partner — Exclusive Control of Property: While the death of one of two partners dissolves the partnership, it does not affect the partnership property, except to give the surviving partner exclusive control of the property, for the purpose of settling up the partnership business. First Nat'l Bank of Butte v. Silver, 45 M 231, 122 P 584 (1912).

Administrator Allowed to Maintain Action Against Surviving Partner: An administrator may maintain against a surviving partner any action which the deceased could have maintained. In the matter of relief, aside from the remedy furnished through the Probate Court, the personal representative of the decedent occupies the same relative position with reference to the surviving partners that the deceased, if alive, would sustain to his copartners. Boehme v. Fitzgerald, 43 M 226, 115 P 413 (1911).

72-3-615. Transaction involving conflict of interest — voidable — exceptions.

Official Comments

If a personal representative violates the duty against self-dealing described by this section, a voidable title to assets sold results. Other breaches of duty relating to sales of assets will not cloud titles except as to purchasers with actual knowledge of the breach. See [72-3-618]. The principles of bona fide purchase would protect a purchaser for value without notice of defect in the seller's title arising from conflict of interest.

Case Notes

Conflict of Interest of Personal Representative Cured by Court Supervision of Estate: Prior to Zempel's death, he executed his will, naming his daughter, Palmer, as his sole devisee and his neighbor, Newman, as personal representative of the estate. Zempel then entered into an agreement to sell his ranch to Newman, who, acting pursuant to the power of attorney, executed a contract for deed and lease that transferred the ranch property to Newman. Following Zempel's death, the District Court appointed Palmer as special administrator based on an ex parte application. Shortly thereafter, Newman filed a petition for formal probate and appointment of personal representative, in conjunction with a motion to set aside the ex parte order. The District Court terminated the ex parte order, appointed Newman as personal representative, and ordered that any real estate transaction be approved by the court after notice and hearing. Palmer appealed Newman's appointment as personal representative, citing the conflict of interest that arose from the documents purportedly transferring estate assets to Newman. A conflict of interest is sufficient for removal of a personal representative for cause, but does not mandate removal. As established in In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165 (1996), a transaction involving a conflict of interest between a personal representative and an estate can be cured by a court-ordered supervision of the transaction. The District Court did not act arbitrarily in this case because it required its approval for the final transaction between the personal representative and the estate, protecting any objection or challenge by Palmer through supervision of the disputed transaction, which cured the conflict of interest. The court did not err when it appointed Newman as personal representative, and the appointment was affirmed. In re Estate of Zempel, 2000 MT 283, 302 M 183, 14 P3d 441, 57 St. Rep. 1182 (2000).

72-3-616. Improper exercise of power — breach of fiduciary duty.

Official Comments

An interested person has two principal remedies to forestall a personal representative from committing a breach of fiduciary duty. (1) Under [72-3-617] he may apply to the court for an order restraining the personal representative from performing any specified act or from exercising any power in the course of administration. (2) Under [72-3-526] he may petition the court for an order removing the personal representative.

Evidence of a proceeding, or order, restraining a personal representative from selling, leasing, encumbering or otherwise affecting title to real property subject to administration, if properly recorded under the laws of this state, would be effective to prevent a purchaser from acquiring a marketable title under the usual rules relating to recordation of real property titles.

In addition, [72-1-202 and 72-3-105] authorize joinder of third persons who may be involved in contemplated transactions with a personal representative in proceedings to restrain a personal representative under [72-3-617].

72-3-617. Order restraining personal representative.

Official Comments

Cf. [72-3-304] which provides for a restraining order against a previously appointed personal representative incident to a formal testacy proceeding. The above section describes a remedy which is available for any cause against a previously appointed personal representative, whether appointed formally or informally.

This remedy, in combination with the safeguards relating to the process for appointment of a personal representative, permit "control" of a personal representative that is believed to be equal, if not superior to that presently available with respect to "supervised" personal representatives appointed by inferior courts. The request for a restraining order may mark the beginning of a new proceeding but the personal representative, by the consent provided in [72-3-511], is practically in the position of one who, on motion, may be cited to appear before a judge.

72-3-618. Persons dealing with personal representative — protection.

Official Comments

This section qualifies the effect of a provision in a will which purports to prohibit sale of property by a personal representative. The provisions of a will may prescribe the duties of a personal representative and subject him to surcharge or other remedies of interested persons if he disregards them. See [72-3-604, 72-3-610, and 72-3-611]. But, the will's prohibition is not relevant to the rights of a purchaser unless he had actual knowledge of its terms. Interested persons who want to prevent a personal representative from having the power described here must use the procedures described in [72-3-401 through 72-3-406]. Each state will need to identify the relation between this section and other statutory provisions creating liens on estate assets for inheritance and other taxes. The section cannot control whether a purchaser takes free of the lien of unpaid federal estate taxes. Hence, purchasers from personal representatives appointed pursuant to this code will have to satisfy themselves concerning whether estate taxes are paid, and if not paid, whether the tax lien follows the property they are acquiring. See section 6234, Internal Revenue Code.

The impact of formal recording systems beyond the usual probate procedure depends upon the particular statute. In states in which the recording system provides for recording wills as muniments of title, statutory adaptation should be made to provide that recording of wills should be postponed until the validity has been established by probate or limitation. Statutory limitation to this effect should be added to statutes which do not so provide to avoid conflict with power of the personal representative during administration. The purpose of the code is to make the deed or instrument of distribution the usual muniment of title. See [72-3-904, 72-3-905, and 72-3-907]. However, this is not available when no administration has occurred and in that event reliance upon general recording statutes must be had.

If a state continues to permit wills to be recorded as muniments of title, the above section would need to be qualified to give effect to the notice from recording.

Official Comments

With certain qualifications, [72-3-622 and 72-3-623 are] designed to compel co-representatives to agree on all matters relating to administration when circumstances permit. Delegation by one to another representative is a form of concurrence in acts that may result from the delegation. A co-representative who abdicates his responsibility to co-administer the estate by a blanket delegation breaches his duty to interested persons as described by [72-3-610]. Section [72-3-613(21)] authorizes some limited delegations, which are reasonable and for the benefit of interested persons.

Source, Model Probate Code section 102. This section applies where one of two or more corepresentatives dies, becomes disabled or is removed. In regard to coexecutors, it is based on the assumption that the decedent would not consider the powers of his fiduciaries to be personal, or to be suspended if one or more could not function. In regard to coadministrators in intestacy, it is based on the idea that the reason for appointing more than one ceases on the death or disability of either of them.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Payment of Fees — Repayment of Loans: The personal representative had authority to pay the estate's attorney and repay herself for loans she had made to the estate, without a prior order from the District Court. Under 72-3-404, a supervised personal representative has, without interim orders approving the exercise of a power, all powers of personal representatives under the code, except that the personal representative may not make a distribution of the estate without the prior order of the court. This authority includes the power provided under this section to pay her own compensation and other expenses incident to the administration of the estate. In re Estate of Barber, 239 M 129, 779 P2d 477, 46 St. Rep. 1565 (1989).

Fees of Personal Representative — Standard of Review: The Supreme Court cited decisions from several jurisdictions in formulating a standard of review for questions of fees paid or taken by a personal representative. Once review of a fee is sought by one with an interest in the estate, the personal representative has the burden of proving that the services rendered were necessary and the fee charged was reasonable. With regard to legal services, a reasonable fee should be ascertained by considering the time spent, the nature of the services, and the skill and experience required. A crucial factor for determining the reasonableness of a challenged fee is whether the services rendered were beneficial to the estate. Therefore, when a personal representative's negligence causes harm to the estate, he may be deprived of all or part of the fee. The review of fees is left to the sound discretion of the District Court. The Supreme Court will not overturn that decision absent a showing of abuse of discretion, and findings of fact will be upheld unless clearly erroneous. In re Estate of Stone, 236 M 1, 768 P2d 334, 46 St. Rep. 134 (1989), followed in Flikkema v. Kimm, 255 M 34, 839 P2d 1293, 49 St. Rep. 880 (1992).

Assessment of Costs From Probate-Related Litigation: While a claim by an estate was pending, the law partner of the attorney opposing the claim was appointed personal representative of the estate. On appeal from the denial of a petition to remove the personal representative or to appoint a special administrator, the Montana Supreme Court held that a special administrator should be appointed to handle the above claim while the personal representative was to continue his duties otherwise. For the litigation relating to the appointment of the special administrator and for this appeal, each party was ordered to bear his own costs, except that the personal representative, if the District Court determined that he was proceeding in good faith, was entitled to receive necessary expenses and disbursements, including reasonable attorney's fees as provided under 72-3-632. In re the Estate of Sauter, 189 M 244, 615 P2d 875, 37 St. Rep. 1425 (1980).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Neglect and Mismanagement of Estate: Removed administratrix and her attorneys who failed to make money from sale of property available to heirs, failed to provide for interest on money from sale of property for benefit of estate, lost inheritance tax credit, and allowed tax penalties to be assessed against the estate were properly allowed fees less than those provided for by statute since statute applied only to fees for successful completion of estate. In re Estate of Smith, 149 M 326, 426 P2d 575 (1967).

72-3-632. Expenses of personal representative in estate litigation.

Official Comments

Litigation prosecuted by a personal representative for the primary purpose of enhancing his prospects for compensation would not be in good faith.

A personal representative is a fiduciary for successors of the estate ([72-3-610]). Though the will naming him may not yet be probated, the priority for appointment conferred by [72-3-502] on one named executor in a probated will means that the person named has an interest, as a fiduciary, in seeking the probate of the will. Hence, he is an interested person within the meaning of [72-3-202 and 72-3-302]. Section [72-3-915] gives the successors of an estate control over the executor, provided all are competent adults. So, if all persons possibly interested in the probate of a will, including trustees of any trusts created thereby, concur in directing the named executor to refrain from efforts to probate the instrument, he would lose standing to proceed. All of these observations apply with equal force to the case where the named executor of one instrument seeks to contest the probate of another instrument. Thus, the code changes the idea followed in some jurisdictions that an executor lacks standing to contest other wills which, if valid, would supersede the will naming him, and standing to oppose other contests that may be mounted against the instrument nominating him.

Attorney Fees Fairly Allocated to Estate — No Abuse of Discretion: Part of a probate case was settled in South Dakota and part in Montana. Attorneys kept separate billing records for each case, ensuring that only the costs of defending the Montana action would be chargeable to the estate. The services rendered were beneficial to the estate, and the District Court did not err in awarding $23,164.01 for defending the Montana case and $20,370.12 in statutory and extraordinary fees, including $1,750 for expert testimony concerning reasonableness of the fees, plus $692.78 in costs. Award of Attorney Fees for Unsuccessful Defense of Will Contest: As a significant part of a will contest, Seright unsuccessfully defended the will for which he was a personal representative. The District Court granted Seright attorney fees and costs. Hauck asserted error in the award and contended that under 72-12-206, attorney fees are not included within the term "costs". However, under this section, Seright was entitled to reasonable fees for defending the will contest, whether or not the defense was successful. Hauck v. Good Faith Action — Fees Reasonable and Proper: The personal representative of an estate was properly ordered to pay certain attorney fees upon a finding that: (1) exhaustive research by the attorneys relating to a wrongful death survivorship action and an heirship proceeding resulted in substantial benefit to the estate and its rightful heir; (2) actions on behalf of the estate were maintained in good faith; (3) the attorneys' investigations, interviews, research, and development of ingenious theories of liability were conducted with a high level of experience and skill; and (4) the fees were reasonable and in accord with fees charged in the same geographical area. In re Estate of Stenson, 243 M 17, 792 P2d 1119, 47 St. Rep. 1162 (1990).

Obstructive Attorney — Additional Fees for Other Attorney: The attorney for the estate rendered extraordinary services in response to the objectors' obstreperous, obstructive, and groundless objections to all the steps and proceedings undertaken by the personal representative. Therefore, the attorney was entitled to an additional fee to be paid by the objectors, personally, and by their attorney because they were responsible for the detrimental objections to the progress of an ordinary estate. The personal representative of an estate may contract for an attorney's services, but the contract does not preclude the award of additional fees if the services rendered to the estate by the attorney are extraordinary and reasonably necessary for the good of the estate, as in this case. Action Not Brought in Good Faith — No Costs or Attorney Fees: The District Court interpreted a will which left the residue of testatrix's estate to her grandchildren "in equal shares, per stirpes and not per capita" as devising one-eighth equal shares to the named grandchildren. A copersonal representative appealed, claiming that the estate should go one-half to her two children and one-half to the six children of her sister. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court and denied appellant attorney fees and costs on the basis that appellant did not prosecute the action in good faith as a fiduciary of the estate and its successors. In re Estate of Evans, 217 M 89, 704 P2d 35, 42 St. Rep. 1047 (1985).

Fairness of Fee: Attorney fee contracts made after the establishment of the fiduciary attorney-client relationship are valid if they are "fair and equitable". Fairness is determined by taking account of such relevant factors as good faith and full disclosure in the execution of the contract, the amount of the fee, and the client's maturity, intelligence, and understanding of the transaction. The burden of establishing fairness is on the attorney. In re Estate of Magelssen, 182 M 372, 597 P2d 90 (1979), followed in In re Estate of Barber, 239 M 129, 779 P2d 477, 46 St. Rep. 1565 (1989).

Personal Representative Discretion in Fixing Compensation — Scope of Review: The factors bearing on the reasonableness of court-awarded attorney fees must be taken into account in determining if a particular fee is either excessive or reasonable. But under the probate code, it is the personal representative, not the Court, who sets the fee in the first instance. It is clear that a Court, when reviewing a fee agreement under a substantially performed contract, cannot blind itself to the terms of the contract and make its own determination of what is reasonable. In re Estate of Magelssen, 182 M 372, 597 P2d 90 (1979).

Fee Contracts Binding on Estate: The personal representative of an estate can contract for an attorney's services, and the estate is bound by such contracts. Though the fee contract is open to review, the amount of the fee is not automatically converted into a quantum meruit measure of compensation. Indeed, quantum meruit compensation is normally appropriate only where a valid contract does not exist. In re Estate of Magelssen, 182 M 372, 597 P2d 90 (1979).

72-3-634. Proceedings for review of employment of agents and compensation of personal representatives and employees.

Official Comments

In view of the broad jurisdiction conferred on the probate court by [72-3-111(1)], description of the special proceeding authorized by this section might be unnecessary. But, the code's theory that personal representatives may fix their own fees and those of estate attorneys marks an important departure from much existing practice under which fees are determined by the court in the first instance. Hence, it seemed wise to emphasize that any interested person can get judicial review of fees if he desires it. Also, if excessive fees have been paid, this section provides a quick and efficient remedy.

Any person who has received excessive compensation from an estate for services rendered may be ordered to make appropriate refunds."

Property Right in or Claim Against Estate Required to Be Considered Interested Person: When claimant's only claim against the estate was to the extent to which they were entitled to one-half of any insurance proceeds payable to the estate and there were no insurance proceeds, the claimants had no right in or claim against the estate, were not "interested persons", and had no standing to contest fees or to argue reasonableness of the fees of the personal representative or the estate's attorneys. An annuity contract did not constitute insurance proceeds. In re Estate of Miles v. Miles, 2000 MT 41, 298 M 312, 994 P2d 1139, 57 St. Rep. 191 (2000).

Fees of Personal Representative — Standard of Review: The Supreme Court cited decisions from several jurisdictions in formulating a standard of review for questions of fees paid or taken by a personal representative. Once review of a fee is sought by one with an interest in the estate, the personal representative has the burden of proving that the services rendered were necessary and the fee charged was reasonable. With regard to legal services, a reasonable fee should be ascertained by considering the time spent, the nature of the services, and the skill and experience required. A crucial factor for determining the reasonableness of a challenged fee is whether the services rendered were beneficial to the estate. Therefore, when a personal representative's negligence causes harm to the estate, he may be deprived of all or part of the fee. The review of fees is left to the sound discretion of the District Court. The Supreme Court will not overturn that decision absent a showing of abuse of discretion, and findings of fact will be upheld unless clearly erroneous. Special Administrator

Powers of Special Administrators and Rights of Heirs in Legal Actions: After a special administrator was appointed to continue prosecution of an action begun before the testatrix's death, the heir to the estate sought to intervene in the case but was denied. Although holding that ruling nonappealable, the Supreme Court did grant the heir's Writ of Supervisory Control. Nonetheless, it found the heir was not a proper intervenor in the suit because her interest was represented adequately by the special administrator, noting that the heir had no right to pursue the action herself unless the personal representative failed to act on the claim, which was not the case here. Further, an administrator could sue in his own name without joining with him the party for whose benefit the action is brought. State ex rel. Palmer v. Official Comments

The appointment of a special administrator other than one appointed pending original appointment of a general personal representative must be handled by the court. Appointment of a special administrator would enable the estate to participate in a transaction which the general personal representative could not, or should not, handle because of conflict of interest. If a need arises because of temporary absence or anticipated incapacity for delegation of the authority of a personal representative, the problem may be handled without judicial intervention by use of the delegation powers granted to personal representatives by [72-3-621].

Case Notes

Appointment of Special Administrator for Failure of Personal Representatives to Sue: The residual beneficiary under a will petitioned to have itself appointed as special administrator of the estate. The personal representatives disagreed with the petitioner's opinion that the Skrochs abused their confidential relationship with the testatrix and unduly influenced her to create a joint tenancy, with rights of survivorship, in bank accounts totaling $190,000, at a time when she was allegedly incompetent. The petitioner wanted the personal representatives to litigate the claim, and they refused to do so after investigating the matter. There was no showing that the personal representatives were guilty of fraud, collusion, conflict of interest, or inability to act or that other special equitable circumstances required the petition to be granted. The petition was properly denied. In re Estate of Long, 225 M 429, 732 P2d 1347, 44 St. Rep. 375 (1987).

"Proper Person": The District Court dismissed a petitioner's request for appointment as special administrator of an estate. The final account had been filed and approved, and the court had authorized the copersonal representatives to distribute the assets of the estate. above claim. The personal representative was allowed to continue his duties with the exception of the claim involving his law partner. In re the Estate of Sauter, 189 M 244, 615 P2d 875, 37 St. Rep. 1425 (1980).

72-3-702. Special administrator — who may be appointed.

Official Comments

In some areas of the country, particularly where wills cannot be probated without full notice and hearing, appointment of special administrators pending probate is sought almost routinely. The provisions of this code concerning informal probate should reduce the number of cases in which a fiduciary will need to be appointed pending probate of a will. Nonetheless, there will be instances where contests begin before probate and where it may be necessary to appoint a special administrator. The objective of this section is to reduce the likelihood that contestants will be encouraged to file contests as early as possible simply to gain some advantage via having a person who is sympathetic to their cause appointed special administrator. Most will contests are not successful. Hence, it seems reasonable to prefer the named executor as special administrator where he is otherwise qualified.

72-3-801. Notice to creditors.

Official Comments

Section [72-3-1103], relating to small estates, contains an important qualification on the duty created by this section.

Failure to advertise for claims would involve a breach of duty on the part of the personal representative. If, as a result of such breach, a claim is later asserted against a distributee under [72-3-1012], the personal representative may be liable to the distributee for costs related to discharge of the claim and the recovery of contribution from other distributees. The protection afforded personal representatives under [72-3-1004] would not be available, for that section applies only if the personal representative truthfully recites that he has advertised for claims as required by this section.

It would be appropriate, by court rule, to channel publications through the personnel of the probate court. See [72-1-301]. If notices are controlled by a centralized authority, some assurance could be gained against publication in newspapers of small circulation. Also, the form of notices could be made uniform and certain efficiencies could be achieved. For example, it would be compatible with this section for the court to publish a single notice each day or each week listing the names of personal representatives appointed since the last publication, with addresses and dates of nonclaim.

Case Notes

Statute of Limitations on Tort Claim Against Decedent's Estate: Campbell brought a claim against Allen's estate in connection with injuries allegedly sustained while a prisoner in the state prison, alleging that the injuries occurred as a result of negligent supervision by Allen, who was a prison guard at the time of injury. The ordinary statute of limitations on Campbell's tort claim would be 3 years under 27-2-204; however, because no action was commenced during that time, the claim would be barred. Section 27-2-401 would normally extend the limit to 5 years because Campbell was imprisoned. However, this section requires that a claim against a decedent's estate must be filed within 4 months from the date of the first publication of notice to creditors, which constitutes a special statute of limitations as to decedents, and there is no extension provided by law even for persons who are incarcerated or are otherwise under a statutory disability. Therefore, the District Court properly held that Campbell's claim was time-barred under this section even if the general tort claim statute of limitations under Title 27, ch. 2, part 2, had not run. In re Estate of Allen, 255 M 469, 843 P2d 781, 49 St. Rep. 1071 (1992).

72-3-802. Statutes of limitations — waiver — suspension.

Official Comments

This section means that four months is added to the normal period of limitations by reason of a debtor's death before a debt is barred. It implies also that after the expiration of four months from death, the normal statute of limitations may run and bar a claim even though the nonclaim provisions of [72-3-803] have not been triggered. Hence, the nonclaim and limitation provisions of [72-3-803] are not exclusive.

It should be noted that under [72-3-803 and 72-3-804] it is possible for a claim to be barred by the process of claim, disallowance and failure by the creditor to commence a proceeding to enforce his claim prior to the end of the four-month suspension period. Thus, the regular statute of limitations applicable during the debtor's lifetime, the nonclaim provisions of [72-3-803 and 72-3-804], and the three-year limitation of [72-3-803] all have potential application to a claim. The first of the three to accomplish a bar controls.

72-3-803. Nonclaim — limitations on presentation of claims — exceptions.

Official Comments

There was some disagreement among the Reporters over whether a short period of limitations, or of nonclaim, should be provided for claims arising at or after death. [Subsection (2)] was finally inserted because most felt it was desirable to accelerate the time when unadjudicated distributions would be final. The time limits stated would not, of course, affect any personal liability in contract, tort, or by statute, of the personal representative. Under [72-3-612] a personal representative is not liable on transactions entered into on behalf of the estate unless he agrees to be personally liable or unless he breaches a duty by making the contract. Creditors of the estate and not of the personal representative thus face a special limitation that runs four months after performance is due from the personal representative. Tort claims normally will involve casualty insurance of the decedent or of the personal representative, and so will fall within the exception of [subsection (3)]. If a personal representative is personally at fault in respect to a tort claim arising after the decedent's death, his personal liability would not be affected by the running of the special short period provided here.

The limitation stated in [subdivision (1)(b)] dovetails with the three-year limitation provided in [72-3-122] to eliminate most questions of succession that are controlled by state law after three years from death have elapsed. Questions of interpretation of any will probated within such period, or of the identity of heirs in intestacy are not barred, however.

Storing Valuables in Business Safe of Friend Who Dies — Necessity of Presenting Original Receipt or Filing Creditor's Claim to Recover Valuables: Boyer stored gold and silver in the coin shop safe of a friend with whom he did a lot of business and received a receipt, thereby creating a deposit for exchange under 70-6-107. The friend died. The friend's sons and widow assured Boyer that they knew of the storage agreement, that his metals were safe, that he did not have to file a creditor's claim against the estate, and that they would return the metals on presentation of the receipt and a demand for the metals. They refused to return the metals on demand because Boyer could not find the original receipt and presented a copy. They testified that they had paid other claims for which a creditor's claim against the estate had not been filed and had returned properties without presentation of the original receipts. They knew Boyer had not already used the original receipt to retrieve the metals and that Boyer had a good excuse for losing the original receipt. Relying on NW. Bank of Lewistown v. Estate of Coppedge, 219 M 473, 713 P2d 523 (1986), the Supreme Court held that they were estopped by their actions, statements, and knowledge from denying the existence and validity of the claim. Requirement That Bank File Creditor's Claim Not Excused: The estate claimed judgment against it was invalid because the bank failed to file creditor's claim with personal representative within the time limits in 72-3-803. The bank claimed subsection (3)(a) relieved it of the filing requirement. The Supreme Court held against the bank because the bank's action was not foreclosure on a secured debt but an action to collect on a promissory note. The court remanded for a determination of whether the attorneys for the estate knew of the bank's claim and represented that a creditor's claim need not be filed. NW. Bank of Lewistown v. Summary judgment was proper. Ziegler v. Kramer, 175 M 236, 573 P2d 644 (1978).

72-3-804. Manner of presentation of claims.

Official Comments

The filing of a claim with the probate court under (2) of this section does not serve to initiate a proceeding concerning the claim. Rather, it serves merely to protect the claimant who may anticipate some need for evidence to show that his claim is not barred. The probate court acts simply as a depository of the statement of claim, as is true of its responsibility for an inventory filed with it under [72-3-607].

In reading this section it is important to remember that a regular statute of limitation may run to bar a claim before the nonclaim provisions run. See [72-3-802].

The District Court properly found that claimant's failure to allege an express contract for services or to present a written copy of a contract was fatal to the claim. In affirming, the Supreme Court held that the ex-husband's uncertain, belated, and unilateral determination that he should be compensated for services rendered to a person unable to answer was not sufficient to raise a genuine issue of material fact. Neumann v. Rogstad, 232 M 24, 757 P2d 761, 45 St. Rep. 837 (1988).

Form of Proper Claim: This section does not require that a claimant specify the exact date a debt was incurred or that the claim be set forth in exact detail. 1989 Amendment: At end of (1) substituted "allowance" for "disallowance"; inserted (2) relating to limitations on change of allowance or disallowance of claim; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1989 Editorial Comment: This change results from an amendment proposed by the Joint Editorial Board of the national Uniform Probate Code in 1987. The addition of subsection (2) expressly permits the personal representative to change an allowed claim to a disallowed claim at any time prior to payment, unless a court order or judgment has directed the payment of the claim.

Additionally, subsection (1) was modified to bring it into conformance with the national Uniform Probate Code in another respect. Former Montana law uniquely treated inaction by the personal representative for 60 days after the original presentation of a claim as a notice of "disallowance". This change now treats such inaction as a notice of allowance. See corresponding national Uniform Probate Code section 3-806.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Presumption That Services Provided by Relative Rendered Gratuitously — Compensation for Personal Care Services Provided by Decedent's Daughters Properly Denied: Following their father's death, three daughters presented a claim against the estate for personal care services that they provided to their father. Their claims were disallowed, and the daughters appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Generally, when services are provided to one person by another and the services are knowingly and voluntarily accepted, the law presumes that the services were provided in expectation of payment. However, a generally acknowledged exception applies when a relative seeks payment for services, and the presumption in those cases is that the services were rendered gratuitously unless there was an express agreement for payment or unless such an agreement can be inferred. In this case, the decedent determined prior to death how he wished his assets to be distributed and, despite several opportunities to do so, made no provision for compensation for the personal services that his daughters provided. The daughters were unable to rebut the general presumption of gratuity, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court's denial of their claims for services. Conversion of Probate Proceeding From Informal to Formal Proceeding and Effect of Failure to Give Proper Notices: When the personal representative of an estate in informal proceedings petitioned for judicial approval of his final account and for the settlement and distribution of the estate, the proceeding was converted into a formal proceeding for those purposes. The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to formal proceedings. The bank, which was a creditor of the estate and filed a claim against the estate, was entitled to notice of the hearing on the petition and entitled to an opportunity to appear and contest. Because the notice was not given, the court's decree was void and reversed as to the bank. The bank was also entitled to notice of the entry of the formal estate decree, and because that notice was not given, the 30-day time period for the bank to appeal did not run and the bank's appeal, filed after that period, was timely. In re Estate of Spencer, 2002 MT 304, 313 M 40, 59 P3d 1160 (2002).

Claim Barred by Failure to Meet Filing Time — Subsequent Acknowledgement of Claim Not Relevant to Estoppel: Notwithstanding the exception for equitable estoppel outlined in NW. Bank of Lewistown v. Estate of Coppedge, 219 M 473, 713 P2d 523, 43 St. Rep. 102 (1986), failure of a creditor to meet the time limits for filing a claim against an estate forever bars such claim. Further, there is no provision in the Uniform Probate Code extending the time for filing or contesting claims based upon subsequent acknowledgement of debt. Bozeman Deaconess Hosp. v. In re Estate of Rosenberg, 225 M 232, 731 P2d 1305, 44 St. Rep. 195 (1987).

Judgment in "Another Court" as an Allowance of Claim: Prior to the death of her ex-husband, a divorced wife brought an action against him for his failure to make monthly payments to her as required by their property settlement agreement. As the matter was pending at the time of the ex-husband's death, no presentation of this claim to the personal representative of the ex-husband's estate was required. The judgment for the money due under the property settlement agreement constituted an allowance of the claim. Although both the action under the property settlement agreement and the probate proceeding took place in the District Court of Lincoln County, the court was functioning as a probate court on estate matters and as a civil court, and hence "another court", on the property settlement agreement action. Reese v. Reese, 196 M 101, 637 P2d 1183, 38 St. Rep. 2157 (1981).

Unsuccessful Applicant Not Entitled to Attorney Fees: An unsuccessful applicant for letters of administration is not entitled to attorneys' fees and costs out of the estate of decedent because litigation ensued in a contest to administer an estate is not beneficial to the estate or beneficiaries. In re Dygert, 170 M 31, 550 P2d 393 (1976).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Claim for Hospital Expenses: In action to recover unpaid hospital expenses from decedent's heirs at law, who had distributed assets without having administrator appointed, Trial Court improperly granted relief to plaintiff hospital since it could not sue upon its claim until it first presented such claim to administrator. Thus, proper remedy would have been for hospital to apply for letters of administration as creditor, and hospital's attempted remedy circumvented statutory priorities for payment of debts. Daughters of Jesus v. Gee, 153 M 342, 457 P2d 471 (1969).

Variance Between Claim and Suit: Claim sued upon was required to be within scope of claim presented to executor, so that action for breach of contract to bequeath could not be predicated upon creditor's claim to recover debt. Brown v. Midland Nat'l Bank, 150 M 422, 435 P2d 878 (1968).

Effect of Fraud: Final decree of distribution and discharge in probate would not be set aside on ground of inadvertence or fraud under statute or former Rule 60(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), in absence of manifest abuse of Court's discretion to grant relief thereunder, in a case where moving party had every opportunity to protect his claim in probate and failed to do so. Werning v. McFarland, 149 M 137, 423 P2d 851 (1967).

Exclusive Nature of Procedure: Former Rule 41(e) (replaced by former Rule 4E), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), providing for dismissal of action for failure to serve summons as provided therein, did not apply to service of summons in suit on rejected claim in probate which was governed exclusively by former statute providing for contesting rejected claims in probate. Werning v. McFarland, 149 M 137, 423 P2d 851 (1967).

Summons After Discharge: Summons in suit on rejected claim filed within 3-month statutory limit, served after discharge in probate, was not substantial compliance with statutory requirement to "bring suit" within 3 months of rejection of claim, and relieved executrix of statutory duty to pay amount of disputed claim into Court. Werning v. McFarland, 149 M 137, 423 P2d 851 (1967).

State Probate Jurisdiction of Federal Claim — Homestead Exemption — Priority of Liens: Creditor obtained a default judgment in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York against an Alaska resident and attempted to execute on property in Montana that had subsequently come under Montana's exclusive probate jurisdiction. While the federal court retained jurisdiction over claims impacting the estate, the court could not seize and control property in the possession of the state probate court. It was within the jurisdiction of the state court to determine that the real property was subject to family protection allowances and exempt from execution. Although the lien was attached prior to debtor's death, the lien was extinguished upon the exercise of the family protection allowances, and the homestead allowance was exempt

72-3-901. Abatement.

Official Comments

A testator may determine the order in which the assets of his estate are applied to the payment of his debts. If he does not, then the provisions of this section express rules w[h]ich may be regarded as approximating what testators generally want. The statutory order of abatement is designed to aid in resolving doubts concerning the intention of a particular testator, rather than to defeat his purpose. Hence, subsection [(2)] directs that consideration be given to the purpose of a testator. This may be revealed in many ways. Thus, it is commonly held that, even in the absence of statute, general legacies to a wife, or to persons with respect to which the testator is in loco parentis, are to be preferred to other legacies in the same class because this accords with the probable purpose of the legacies.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Abatement Statute Applies When Residue of Estate and Interest Accrued Insufficient to Pay All Expenses and Disbursements: The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's finding that the abatement statute applied because the residue of the estate and accrued interest would be insufficient to pay all expenses and disbursements. The Supreme Court also held that under the abatement statute, the lower court had not erred in dividing the accrued interest, with one-half going to the widow and one-half going to the children. In re Estate of Barber, 239 M 129, 779 P2d 447 (1989).

Federal Estate Taxes: Where a widow renounced the will and elected to take her dower and intestate share pursuant to section 22-107, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), and her intestate share was one-third of the decedent's net estate in accordance with section 91-403(1), R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), such elected statutory share, which qualified for the marital deduction and generated no federal estate tax liability, was nonetheless chargeable with a proportionate share of the estate's total estate tax liability. In re Estate of Mosby, 170 M 463, 554 P2d 1341 (1976).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Federal Estate Taxes: Where a will does not otherwise provide for the payment of federal estate taxes, the payment must be equitably apportioned among residuary interests so that a residuary interest not generating any estate taxes does not bear any burden for their payment. 1989 Editorial Comment: This change results from an amendment proposed by the Joint Editorial Board of the national Uniform Probate Code in 1987. Distribution of Exact Percentage of Interest in Business Not Comporting With Testator's Intent — Probate Reversed for Equal Distribution of Business Shares: Snyder generally devised all her distributable property to her son and daughter in equal shares. A separate provision provided that if Snyder's Great Falls drugstore was owned by a corporation, Snyder's, Inc., at the time of Snyder's death, then 51% of the corporation stock should go to her son in recognition of his work at the business, without ultimately diminishing the equal distribution of the estate. As personal representative, the son sought an interpretation of the will, and the District Court, following the specific provisions, granted the son 51% of the corporate stock and the daughter 49% of the stock and required the son to give the daughter a cash settlement necessary to equalize the difference between the 51% and 49% distributed shares. The daughter appealed on grounds that the distribution was inequitable because she lived in Utah, she did not receive a salary from the corporation, the corporation did not pay dividends, and there was no market for the corporation stock. The son maintained that the specific provision in the will granting him 51% of the shares most accurately articulated Snyder's intent and, by necessary inference, gave the daughter the remaining 49% of the shares. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court's percentage distribution, based on the conclusion that if the drugstore was not incorporated, the son was to take the entire interest in the store and the daughter was to receive estate assets of comparable value. The court concluded that the estate could only be distributed equally by doing the same with the shares of the drugstore. When the will was read as a whole, the exact percentage of interest in the corporation to be distributed to the son and daughter was considered less important than Snyder's desire to have the estate distributed equally between the children. In re Estate of Snyder, 2000 MT 113, 299 M 421, 2 P3d 238, 57 St. Rep. 475 (2000). On remand, the District Court held that property still remaining in the estate should be appraised and distributed based on its current market value. The daughter appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The will in two places specified that Snyder intended to have the estate distributed pursuant to its value at Snyder's death as calculated for federal estate tax purposes, precluding the application of subsection (2)(b) of this section, and the Supreme Court remanded for valuation and distribution of the remaining estate according to the terms of the will. In re Estate of Snyder, 2007 MT 146, 337 M 449, 162 P3d 87 (2007).

Under the law of the case established in the 2000 and 2007 appeals, the son received all of the business shares, valued at $187,488 on the date of death, and the daughter was entitled to estate assets of equal value, with any remaining estate assets being divided equally. The value of certain real property on the date of death was $160,000, although the property was subsequently valued at more than $5 million. Nevertheless, the daughter was entitled to receive that property at the date-of-death value, plus additional estate assets totaling $27,488. In re Estate of Snyder, 2009 MT 291, 352 M 264, 217 P3d 1027 (2009).

Interpretation of Will Devising Ranch — Distribution of Income: After two siblings disputed who should receive their parents' ranch, the District Court interpreted the decedent's will to devise the entirety of the ranch to one sibling. The other sibling, who was also the personal representative of the estate, appealed, arguing that under the will he was entitled to a portion of the ranch and that the other sibling should not have been allowed to object to the proposed distribution of income from the ranch. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the District Court correctly interpreted the clear intent of the decedent and that once the District Court determined that one sibling was entitled to the entire ranch, it followed that the same sibling was entitled to receive all of the income from the ranch. Ecton v. Ecton, 2013 MT 114, 370 Mont. 52, 300 P.3d 706.

72-3-904. Distribution in kind — evidence of title.

Official Comments

This and sections following should read with [72-3-606] which permits the personal representative to leave certain assets of a decedent's estate in the possession of the person presumptively entitled thereto. The "release" contemplated by this section would be used as evidence that the personal representative had determined that he would not need to disturb the possession of an heir or devisee for purposes of administration.

Under section 3-711 [omitted in Montana] a personal representative's relationship to assets of the estate is described as the "same power over the title to property of the estate as an absolute owner would have." A personal representative may, however, acquire a full title to estate assets, as in the case where particular items are conveyed to the personal representative by sellers, transfer agents or others. The language of [this section] is designed to cover instances where the instrument of distribution operates as a transfer, as well as those in which its operation is more like a release.

72-3-905. Distribution by personal representative conclusive evidence of succession to interest by distributee.

Official Comments

The purpose of this section is to channel controversies which may arise among successors of a decedent because of improper distributions through the personal representative who made the distribution, or a successor personal representative. Section [72-3-122] does not bar appointment proceedings initiated to secure appointment of a personal representative to correct an erroneous distribution made by a prior representative. 72-3-906. Improper distribution or payment — liability of distributee or payee.

Official Comments

The term "improperly" as used in this section must be read in light of [72-3-604, 72-3-610, and 72-3-611] and the manifest purpose of this and other sections of the code to shift questions concerning the propriety of various distributions from the fiduciary to the distributees in order to prevent every administration from becoming an adjudicated matter. Thus, a distribution may be "authorized at the time" as contemplated by [72-3-604, 72-3-610, and 72-3-611] and still be "improper" under this section. [Sections 72-3-604, 72-3-610, and 72-3-611 are] designed to permit a personal representative to distribute without risk in some cases, even though there has been no adjudication. When an unadjudicated distribution has occurred, the rights of persons to show that the basis for the distribution (e.g., an informally probated will, or informally issued letters of administration) is incorrect, or that the basis was improperly applied (erroneous interpretation, for example) is preserved against distributees by this section.

The definition of "distributee" to include the trustee and beneficiary of a testamentary trust in [72-1-103(11)] is important in allocating liabilities that may arise under [72-3-906 and 72-3-907] on improper distribution by the personal representative under an informally probated will. The provisions of [72-3-906 and 72-3-907] are based on the theory that liability follows the property and the fiduciary is absolved from liability by reliance upon the informally probated will.

Order to Quitclaim Property Back to Estate Reversed: Following remand of an estate distribution appeal in In re Estate of Snyder, 2000 MT 113, 299 M 421, 2 P3d 238 (2000), the District Court ordered that to complete the distribution of Snyder's property in Great Falls and Flathead County, Snyder's daughter must quitclaim her interest in the Flathead County property so that the court could order distribution of the property by partition, in-kind distribution, or sale and distribution of the proceeds. The daughter appealed on grounds that the court failed to comply with this section in ordering her to quitclaim the property back to the estate and that the court retained statutory flexibility to distribute the estate without the quitclaim order. The Supreme Court agreed. The quitclaim order appeared at best to be an unnecessary step in resolving the estate, and the quitclaim order was reversed. In re Estate of Snyder, 2007 MT 146, 337 M 449, 162 P3d 87 (2007).

72-3-907. Purchases from distributees protected.

Official Comments

The words "instrument or deed of distribution" are explained in [72-3-904]. The effect of this section may be to make an instrument or deed of distribution a very desirable link in a chain of title involving succession of land. Cf. [72-3-911].

In 1975, the Joint Editorial Board recommended additions that strengthen the protection extended by this section to bona fide purchasers from distributees. The additional language was derived from recommendations evolved with respect to the Colorado version of the Code by probate and title authorities who agreed on language to relieve title assurers of doubts they had identified in relation to some cases.

Conflict Between Bankruptcy Discharge and Intent of Revocable Trust — Intent Controls: In 1989, the respondent executed a promissory note for $100,000 plus interest in favor of his stepsister but never made any payment on the promissory note. Later, the respondent's mother, Ms. Ward, amended her revocable trust to provide that before the respondent received any distribution from her trust, his share would be decreased, and the stepsister's share increased, by any amounts he owed the stepsister at the time of Ms. Ward's death. In 2005, the respondent filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy. Four years later, Ms. Ward passed away and the trustee filed a petition in District Court to determine the appropriate amounts to distribute. The District Court concluded that the respondent's share should be reduced by the amount he owed his stepsister on the date of Ms. Ward's death, $298,356.16. The respondent appealed, contending that the debt had been discharged in his 2005 bankruptcy. The Supreme Court disagreed, holding that the plain language of the trust document controlled and that the bankruptcy provisions were inapplicable. Conflict Between Statute and Intent of Testator — Intent Controlling: When Winifred died, testate, she left her two sons as her sole heirs and a net estate of approximately $112,000. At the time of her death, her son John was indebted to her for approximately $26,000 and her son Kenneth was indebted to her for approximately $69,000, although approximately $55,000 of that debt had been discharged in bankruptcy. In her will, Winifred stated that if either of her sons owed her money at the time of her death, the debt was to be offset against the share of the estate and the debt forgiven in such a way that each son was to be treated equally. Citing St. v. Keller, 173 M 523, 568 P2d 166 (1977), and In re Estate of Ellison, 243 M 258, 792 P2d 5 (1990), the Supreme Court held that under 72-2-501 (now repealed), the intent of the testator is to control and that that intent takes precedent over a conflicting statute. The Supreme Court held that Kenneth's debt must be offset against his share of the estate, notwithstanding the language of this section and the fact that part of the debt was discharged. The Supreme Court also held that there was no basis to offset against Kenneth's share of the estate the value of real property earlier transferred to his mother at an inflated price because there was nothing in the record to show that Winifred objected to the terms of the sale. Corporate Indebtedness Not Subject to Right of Retainer: A corporation is a separate and distinct entity and is not a successor to the estate. (See In re Russell's Estate, 102 M 301, 59 P2d 777 (1936).) Since a corporation is not a successor to the estate, corporate indebtedness is not subject to the right of retainer. In re Estate of Haggerty, 246 M 351, 805 P2d 1338, 47 St. Rep. 2145 (1990).

Right of Retainer Inapplicable to Gifts: The District Court found that approximately $80,000 in bank drafts advanced to a son by his mother with little likelihood or expectation of repayment was a gift rather than a loan subject to the right of retainer. In re Estate of Haggerty, 246 M 351, 805 P2d 1338, 47 St. Rep. 2145 (1990).

72-3-913. Interest on general pecuniary devise.

Official Comments

Unlike the common law, this section provides that a general pecuniary devisee's right to interest begins one year from the time when administration was commenced, rather than one year from death. The rule provided here is similar to the common-law rule in that the right to interest for delayed payment does not depend on whether the estate in fact realized income during the period of delay. The section is consistent with section 5(b) of the Revised Uniform Principal and Income Act which allocates realized net income of an estate between various categories of successors.

72-3-914. Partition for purpose of distribution.

Official Comments

Ordinarily heirs or devisees desiring partition of a decedent's property will resolve the issue by agreement without resort to the courts. (See [72-3-915].) If court determination is necessary, the court with jurisdiction to administer the estate has jurisdiction to partition the property.

Land Below High-Water Mark of Flathead Lake Tribal Property Not Subject to Distribution by Estate: When she died, Hobbs owned property on the south shore of Flathead Lake. Her will designated that three nieces divide one parcel of about 1 acre above the high-water mark and that a fourth niece and her husband, the Conrads, receive an adjacent 1.9-acre parcel from the high-water mark inland. A survey established the boundary between the parcels, but did not include any land below the high-water mark to the meander line of the lake. The District Court approved the survey, distributed the property, and closed the estate. The parties later became involved in a dispute over zoning and building regulations. The personal representative petitioned to reopen the estate for the purpose of filing a corrected survey and to distribute the portion of land lying below the high-water mark to the meander line, thereby increasing the acreage of both lots. The personal representative presented exhibits and affidavits verifying that Hobbs had paid taxes on the land out to the meander line. The Conrads objected on grounds that Hobbs's will specifically left land above the high-water mark and that because the estate did not own the land below the high-water mark, it could not be distributed to anyone. Nevertheless, the District Court approved the corrected survey and distributed the land below the high-water mark to the meander line between the heirs. The Supreme Court noted that the bed and banks of Flathead Lake within Indian reservation boundaries are held by the United States in trust for the tribes, and that any private title to Flathead Lake shore property extends only to the high-water mark. The District Court erroneously distributed the land below the high-water mark to the meander line, because the court did not have jurisdiction to distribute the tribal trust property. The estate could not distribute property that it did not own. In re Estate of Hobbs, 2002 MT 85, 309 M 308, 46 P3d 594 (2002), following Mont. Power Co. v. Rochester, 127 F2d 189 (9th Cir. 1942), and Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Reservation v. Namen, 665 F2d 951 (9th Cir. 1982).

72-3-915. Private agreements among successors as to distribution — testamentary trustee as successor.

Official Comments

It may be asserted that this section is only a restatement of the obvious and should be omitted. Its purpose, however, is to make it clear that the successors to an estate have residual control over the way it is to be distributed. Hence, they may compel a personal representative to administer and distribute as they may agree and direct. Successors should compare the consequences and possible advantages of careful use of the power to renounce as described by [72-2-811] with the effect of agreement under this section [renunciation replaced by disclaimer in 1993]. The most obvious difference is that an agreement among successors under this section would involve transfers by some participants to the extent it changed the pattern of distribution from that otherwise applicable.

Differing from a pattern that is familiar in many states, this code does not subject testamentary trusts and trustees to special statutory provisions, or supervisory jurisdiction. A testamentary trustee is treated as a devisee with special duties which are of no particular concern to the personal representative. Article VII [omitted in Montana] contains optional procedures extending the safeguards available to personal representatives to trustees of both inter vivos and testamentary trusts.

Oral Estate Settlement Agreement Not Binding: An estate settlement agreement reached by the parties' attorneys over the telephone was not binding on the parties because the agreement was not in writing and was not filed with the Clerk of Court or entered upon the minutes of the court. In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 12 (1996). However, see Lockhead v. Weinstein, 2003 MT 360, 319 M 62, 81 P3d 1284 (2003), overruling Goick under the provisions of 37-61-401.

Standing of Decedent's Relatives to Appeal Settlement and Distribution Agreements: Decedent's mother, brother, and sister sought to appeal a contested settlement agreement and a distribution agreement ordered by the District Court, but decedent's surviving spouse, Barbara, contended that there was no standing for an appeal. The Supreme Court held that: (1) Barbara was not precluded from raising the issue of standing for the first time on appeal, even though she failed to object in District Court, because objections to standing cannot be waived; (2) decedent's mother, as a creditor of the estate, had standing to appeal the appointment of Barbara as personal representative, but a brother and sister, who were neither creditors nor heirs of the estate, lacked standing; (3) because decedent's mother, brother, and sister were not successors to the estate, they had no legal interest or personal stake in the distribution of the estate and thus lacked standing to claim that the distribution agreement was improper; and (4) decedent's mother, brother, and sister were parties to the contested settlement agreement and were directly affected by the validity of the agreement and thus had standing to appeal that issue. In re Estate of Goick, 275 M 13, 909 P2d 1165, 53 St. Rep. 12 (1996), following Holmstrom Land Co. v. Newlan Creek Water District, 185 M 409, 605 P2d 1060 (1979), Grossman v. Goick was followed, as to prerequisites for standing, in In re Paternity of Vainio, 284 M 229, 943 P2d 1282, 54 St. Rep. 858 (1997). However, see Lockhead v. Weinstein, 2003 MT 360, 319 M 62, 81 P3d 1284 (2003), overruling Goick under the provisions of 37-61-401.

Tax Based on Will Distribution: An inheritance tax is computed according to a probated will, not according to the settlement agreement subsequently entered into among the beneficiaries. An inheritance tax is a tax on the right to receive property, rather than a tax on the property itself. In re Estate of Winter, 226 M 24, 734 P2d 178, 44 St. Rep. 430 (1987).

72-3-916. Distribution to trustee — registration — bond.

Official Comments

This section is concerned with the fiduciary responsibility of the executor to beneficiaries of trusts to which he may deliver. Normally, the trustee represents beneficiaries in matters involving third persons, including prior fiduciaries. Yet, the executor may apprehend that delivery to the trustee may involve risks for the safety of the fund and for him. For example, he may be anxious to see that there is no equivocation about the devisee's willingness to accept the trust, and no problem of preserving evidence of the acceptance. He may have doubts about the integrity of the trustee, or about his ability to function satisfactorily. The testator's selection of the trustee may have been based on facts which are still current, or which are of doubtful relevance at the time of distribution. If the risks relate to the question of the trustee's intention to handle the fund without profit for himself, a conflict of interest problem is involved. If the risk relates to the ability of the trustee to manage prudently, a more troublesome question is posed for the executor. Is he, as executor, not bound to act in the best interests of the beneficiaries?

In many instances involving doubts of this sort, the executor probably will want the protection of a court order. Sections [72-3-1001 through 72-3-1003] provide ample authority for an appropriate proceeding in the court which issued the executor's letters.

In other cases, however, the executor may believe that he may be adequately protected if the acceptance of the trust by the devisee is unequivocal, or if the trustee is bonded. The purpose of this section is to make it clear that it is proper for the executor to require the trustee to register the trust and to notify beneficiaries before receiving distribution. Also, the section complements section 7-304 [omitted in Montana] by providing that the personal representative may petition an appropriate court to require that the trustee be bonded.

Status of testamentary trustees under the Uniform Probate Code. Under the Uniform Probate Code, the testamentary trustee by construction would be considered a devisee, distributee, and successor to whom title passes at time of the testator's death even though the will must be probated to prove the transfer. The informally probated will is conclusive until set aside and the personal representative may distribute to the trustee under the informally probated will or settlement agreement and the title of the trustee as distributee represented by the instrument or deed of distribution is conclusive until set aside on showing that it is improper. Should the informally probated will be set aside or the distribution to the trustee be shown to be improper, the trustee as distributee would be liable for value received but purchasers for value from the trustee as distributee under an instrument of distribution would be protected. [The] definition of "distributee" [in 72-1-103(11)] limits the distributee liability of the trustee and substitutes that of the trust beneficiaries to the extent of distributions by the trustee.

As a distributee as defined by [72-1-103(11)] the testamentary trustee or beneficiary of a testamentary trust is liable to claimants like other distributees, would have the right of contribution from other distributees of the decedent's estate and would be protected by the same time limitations as other distributees [72-3-1013].

Incident to his standing as a distributee of the decedent's estate, the testamentary trustee would be an interested party who could petition for an order of complete settlement by the personal representative or for an order terminating testate administration. He also could appropriately receive the personal representative's account and distribution under a closing statement. As distributee he could represent his beneficiaries in compromise settlements in the decedent's estate which would be binding upon him and his beneficiaries. See [72-3-915].

The general fiduciary responsibilities of the testamentary trustee are not altered by the Uniform Probate Code and the trustee continues to have the duty to collect and reduce to possession within a reasonable time the assets of the trust estate including the enforcement of any claims on behalf of the trust against prior fiduciaries, including the personal representative, and third parties.

DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM PROBATE CODE

Written Objections: In response to the personal representative's argument that the court had no issue jurisdiction because no written objections were filed by the objectors to any of the accountings made by the personal representative, the Supreme Court stated that the provisions of the Uniform Probate Code do not provide for the filing of written objections to an accounting by a personal representative. Because there was no other statutory authority and it appeared otherwise proper, the Supreme Court considered the issues raised by the objectors in their various briefs as the issues for consideration by the court on appeal. In re Estate of Barber, 239 M 129, 779 P2d 477, 46 St. Rep. 1565 (1989).

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Executor Guilty of Delay in Administering Estate: When an executor was guilty of delay in administering an estate he was not chargeable with interest on the cash due legatees and devisees. In re Lindhardt's Estate, 133 M 65, 320 P2d 357 (1958).

Irregularities in Management of Estate:

It is the policy of the Courts to sustain, if possible, irregular acts of executors or administrators when done in good faith and without detriment to the estate. Montgomery v. Gilbert, 111 M 250, 108 P2d 616 (1940).

When record in action involving alleged mismanagement of estate by executor showed a number of irregularities on his part but no attempt was made for 5 years after approval of his accounts to penalize or remove him from office, the executor was not liable for alleged losses in the absence of a positive showing of detriment of the estate or fraud upon the persons interested in the estate. Montgomery v. Gilbert, 111 M 250, 108 P2d 616 (1940).

Losses in Management of Estate: When a testator named a person as executor to serve without bond, giving him wide and discretionary powers in the administration of his estate similar to those he himself employed in carrying on his livestock business, the executor is required to act in entire good faith but is not an insurer of the assets of the estate, nor is he expected to be infallible, but is only liable for losses because of bad faith or want of due diligence. Montgomery v. Gilbert, 111 M 250, 108 P2d 616 (1940).

Interest Chargeable: When administrator was ordered by Court to sell for cash, but instead he sold on credit and without security after unnecessary delay, he was chargeable with interest at legal rate of 6% from date money should have been received together with loss in selling price from that date and date when sheep were thereafter sold. In re Astibia's Estate, 100 M 224, 46 P2d 712 (1935).

Bank Deposits:

An administrator is not an insurer of the assets of the estate represented by him, and if he deposits its funds with a responsible bank, acting in good faith in the exercise of his best judgment, he is not liable for loss occasioned by its failure. In re Mullen's Estate, 97 M 144, 33 P2d 270 (1934).

To charge an administrator with the loss of estate funds in a closed bank of which he was cashier, the evidence must show that he was negligent in not removing them before its closing, negligence here being the failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done in the circumstances of the situation. In re Mullen's Estate, 97 M 144, 33 P2d 270 (1934).

When cashier's checks drawn against the savings account of an estate were not paid owing to the bank's closing, although their amount was deducted from the account, and the administrator failed to present a claim to the receiver for its allowance within the proper time and the estate lost the amount through his neglect, he should be charged therewith. In re Mullen's Estate, 97 M 144, 33 P2d 270 (1934).

Burden of Proof: When indebtedness due an estate remains unpaid, the burden rests upon the executor or administrator, if he would escape liability, to show that his failure to make collection was not the result of his own neglect. In re Connolly's Estate, 79 M 445, 257 P 418 (1927).

Investment of Estate Funds: When an executor invests estate funds without authority of Court in the purchase of a note, he is properly chargeable with any loss sustained by the estate resulting therefrom. In re Connolly's Estate, 79 M 445, 257 P 418 (1927).

Joint Debt Secured by Pledge: When an executor became indebted to his testator during the latter's lifetime on a joint note secured by pledge of corporate stock which after maturity and after the estate came into his hands was worth around par and payment of which note could have been secured but for his failure to take timely action, the executor was properly held liable for the balance due on the instrument. In re Connolly's Estate, 79 M 445, 257 P 418 (1927).

Loss of Assets:

An executor fulfills his trust obligation to the estate for which he acts when he deposits its funds temporarily with a responsible bank and when he acts in good faith and in the exercise of his best judgment in making the deposit, he is not liable for loss occasioned by the subsequent failure of such bank. In re Connolly's Estate, 79 M 445, 257 P 418 (1927).

An executor or administrator is not liable for losses to the estate occurring through no fault of his, and is entitled to compensation for his services. In re Dolenty's Estate, 53 M 33, 161 P 524 (1916).

Advice of Attorney: An administrator may not excuse his failure to collect a debt due to the estate of his decedent by reliance upon the advice of an attorney that an attempt to collect would result in litigation and delay in settlement of the estate. Scott v. Tuggle, 74 M 476, 241 P 229 (1925).

Crop Mortgage: When a defaulting vendee of farm lands in consideration of being permitted to remain in possession agreed in writing to give the vendor a promissory note secured by a crop mortgage for money due, an equitable lien was created though neither note nor mortgage were ever given, which lien the administrator of the estate of the vendor knowing of its existence, was in duty bound to collect, if possible, and for his failure to attempt to collect he was chargeable in his account for the resulting loss. Scott v. Tuggle, 74 M 476, 241 P 229 (1925).

Growing Crops: When at the time of the appointment of an administrator there were crops growing upon the lands of the estate, which but for timely care and harvesting might have been lost, he may be allowed the reasonable expense incurred in that behalf, even though he obtained the necessary funds by borrowing upon the credit of the estate without first obtaining an order of Court permitting him to do so. In re Jennings' Estate, 74 M 449, 241 P 648 (1925).

Interest on Borrowed Money: Without an order of Court to that effect, an administrator may not borrow money and pledge the credit of the estate therefor (unless, perhaps, in case of emergency), and where he does so he is personally liable for interest thereon. In re Jennings' Estate, 74 M 449, 241 P 648 (1925).

Rents and Profits of Real Estate:

When an administrator himself occupies the real property of the decedent's estate or by his negligence fails to secure from it such rents and profits as it ought to yield, he is chargeable with such reasonable revenue as the property should have brought, as well as with interest at the legal rate upon the annual rentals, from the time they should have been paid. In re Jennings' Estate, 74 M 449, 241 P 648 (1925).

An executor or administrator is chargeable not only with the assets of the estate which actually came into his hands, but also with those, including rents and profits of real estate which in the exercise of ordinary care and diligence ought to have been received from it, which by reason of his neglect he has failed to get into his hands. In re Dolenty's Estate, 53 M 33, 161 P 524 (1916).

Operation of Farm by Administrator: When estate funds were used by an administrator in purchasing farm machinery used by him in operating a farm owned by the estate as his own, he is chargeable with the amount paid therefor, with interest, as well as with produce of livestock not accounted for and stock killed for his own use while so operating the property. In re Jennings' Estate, 74 M 449, 241 P 648 (1925).

Employment of Counsel: The employment and payment of counsel is a personal matter between the administrator and the attorney over which the Court has no authority, except for allowance or disallowance of the amount paid when presented as other claims. State ex rel. Kelly v. District Court, 25 M 33, 63 P 717 (1901).

72-3-1001. Formal proceedings terminating administration — testate or intestate — order of complete settlement.

Official Comments

[Section 72-3-1002] is derived from §64(b) of the Illinois Probate Act (1967) [S.H.A. ch. 3, §64(b)]. Section [72-3-111(2)] specifies that an order is binding as to all who are given notice even though less than all interested persons were notified. [Sections 72-3-1001 and 72-3-1002 provide] a method of curing an oversight in regard to notice which may come to light before the estate is finally settled. If the person who failed to receive notice of the earlier proceeding succeeds in obtaining entry of a different order from that previously made, others who received notice of the earlier proceeding may be benefited. Still, they are not entitled to notice of the curative proceeding, nor should they be permitted to appear.

Case Notes

Conversion of Probate Proceeding From Informal to Formal Proceeding and Effect of Failure to Give Proper Notices: When the personal representative of an estate in informal proceedings petitioned for judicial approval of his final account and for the settlement and distribution of the estate, the proceeding was converted into a formal proceeding for those purposes. The Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to formal proceedings. The bank, which was a creditor of the estate and filed a claim against the estate, was entitled to notice of the hearing on the petition and entitled to an opportunity to appear and contest. Because the notice was not given, the court's decree was void and reversed as to the bank. The bank was also entitled to notice of the entry of the formal estate decree, and because that notice was not given, the 30-day time period for the bank to appeal did not run and the bank's appeal, filed after that period, was timely. In re Estate of Spencer, 2002 MT 304, 313 M 40, 59 P3d 1160 (2002).

Final Distribution Requires Discharge of Personal Representative: The estate of Nina Garland and her husband, who had killed her, disputed the distribution of assets as ordered by the lower court. The Supreme Court held that it was unclear if the District Court had intended its order to be a final distribution of the assets, but in light of the fact that the personal representative had not been discharged as required by statute, no final settlement could have been entered and the case had to be remanded to the District Court for further proceedings. [This section] permits a final determination of the rights between each other and against the personal representative of the devisees under a will when there has been no formal proceeding in regard to testacy. Hence, the heirs in intestacy need not be made parties. [Sections 72-3-1001 and 72-3-1002 permit] a final determination of the rights between each other and against the personal representative of all persons interested in an estate. If supervised administration is used, [72-3-405 and 72-3-406 direct] that the estate be closed by use of procedures like those described in [72-3-1001 and 72-3-1002]. Of course, testacy will have been adjudicated before time for the closing proceeding if supervised administration is used.

72-3-1004. Closing estate by sworn statement of personal representative.

Official Comments

The code uses "termination" to refer to events which end a personal representative's authority. See [72-3-521], et seq. The word "closing" refers to circumstances which support the conclusions that the affairs of the estate either are, or have been alleged to have been, wound up. If the affairs of the personal representative are reviewed and adjudicated under either [72-3-1001, 72-3-1002, or 72-3-1003], the judicial conclusion that the estate is wound up serves also to terminate the personal representative's authority. See [72-3-524(2)]. On the other hand, a "closing" statement under [this section] is only an affirmation by the personal representative that he believes the affairs of the estate to be completed. The statement is significant because it reflects that assets have been distributed. Any creditor whose claim has not been barred and who has not been paid is permitted by [72-3-1012] to assert his claim against distributees. The personal representative is also still fully subject to suit under [72-3-511 and 72-3-513], for his authority is not "terminated" under [72-3-524(2)] until one year after a closing statement is filed. Even if his authority is "terminated," he remains liable to suit unless protected by limitation or unless an adjudication settling his accounts is the reason for "termination." See [72-3-1011 and 72-3-521].

From a slightly different viewpoint, a personal representative may obtain a complete discharge of his fiduciary obligations through a judicial proceeding after notice. Sections [72-3-1001 through 72-3-1003] describe two proceedings which enable a personal representative to gain protection from all persons or from devisees only. A personal representative who neither obtains a judicial order of protection nor files a closing statement, is protected by [72-3-611] in regard to acts or distributions which were authorized when done but which become doubtful thereafter because of a change in testacy status. On the other questions, the personal representative who does not take any of the steps described by the code to gain more protection, has no protection against later claims of breach of his fiduciary obligation other than any arising from consent or waiver of individual distributees who may have bound themselves by receipts given to the personal representative.

This section increases the prospects of full discharge of a personal representative who uses the closing statement route over those of a personal representative who relies on receipts. Full protection follows from the running of the six months' limitations period described in [72-3-1011]. But, [the latter section's] protection does not prevent distributees from claiming lack of full disclosure. Hence, it offers little more protection than a receipt. Still, it may be useful to decrease the likelihood of later claim of nondisclosure. Its more significant function, however, is to provide a means for terminating the office of personal representative in a way that will be obvious to third persons.

Case Notes

District Court Error in Allowing Personal Representative to Settle and Close Estate Without Required Accounting: Reeves argued that the lower court allowed her brother, who was acting as personal representative for their father's estate, to close and settle the estate without providing her with an adequate final accounting. Her brother countered that Reeves had been given copies of the inventory and appraisal and a copy of the estate tax form, as well as the check register and bank statements. The Supreme Court held that the record contained substantial evidence of numerous items of income, expense, and claims that should have been included in the final accounting and therefore the District Court had erred in approving the first and final accounting and in entering a decree of dissolution. Estate of Melvin, 261 M 408, 862 P2d 1159, 50 St. Rep. 1382 (1993).

Matters Involving Prior Accounting Merged in Final Account: In response to the personal representative's argument that the court had no jurisdiction over matters handled during the administration of the estate that were not included in the order issued prior to the final account, the Supreme Court held that in any supervised administration, the court is given continuing authority in a single in rem proceeding to secure the complete administration of the estate until the entry of an order approving distribution and discharging the personal representative. The matters involving the prior accounting were merged in the final account, and the court had jurisdiction over them. In re Estate of Barber, 239 M 129, 779 P2d 477, 46 St. Rep. 1565 (1989).

72-3-1011. Limitation on actions against personal representative.

Official Comments

This and the preceding section make it clear that a claimant whose claim has not been barred may have alternative remedies when an estate has been distributed subject to his claim. Under this section, he has six months to prosecute an action against the personal representative if the latter breached any duty to the claimant. For example, the personal representative may be liable to a creditor if he violated the provisions of [72-3-808]. The preceding section describes the fundamental liability of the distributees to unbarred claimants to the extent of the value received. The last sentence emphasizes that a personal representative who fails to disclose matters relevant to his liability in his closing statement and in the account of administration he furnished to distributees, gains no protection from the period described here. A personal representative may, however, use [72-3-1001 and 72-3-1002] or, where appropriate, [72-3-1003] to secure greater protection.

Decree of Distribution Not to Be Reopened Thirty-Six Years After Entry: A petition for an order of distribution in intestacy nunc pro tunc in the estate of Charles DeTienne was filed on March 11, 1982, on behalf of the heirs of Charles' daughter Elvina DeTienne. Charles died intestate in 1945. Elvina predeceased her father. Charles' estate was distributed to his six surviving children. The petition to reopen the matter stated that Elvina's heirs had been mistakenly excluded from the decree of distribution and that the mistake had been discovered on July 7, 1981. The District Court dismissed the petition, ruling that there had not been compliance with the 60-day deadline of the applicable statute, section 91-3516, R.C.M. 1947. The Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal and further ruled that even if the decree was a result of fraud, the petition had been filed too late after discovery of the possible fraud. 72-3-1012. Liability of distributees to claimants.

Official Comments

This section creates a ceiling on the liability of a distributee of "the value of his distribution" as of the time of distribution. The section indicates that each distributee is liable for all that a claimant may prove to be due, provided the claim does not exceed the value of the defendant's distribution from the estate. But, each distributee may preserve a right of contribution against other distributees. The risk of insolvency of one or more, but less than all distributees is on the distributee rather than on the claimant.

72-3-1013. Limitation on actions against distributees.

Official Comments

This section describes an ultimate time limit for recovery by creditors, heirs and devisees of a decedent from distributees. It is to be noted: (1) Section [72-3-122] imposes a general limit of three years from death on one who must set aside an informal probate in order to establish his rights, or who must secure probate of a late-discovered will after an estate has been administered as intestate. Hence the time limit of [72-3-122] may bar one who would claim as an heir or devisee sooner than this section, although it would never cause a bar prior to three years from the decedent's death. (2) This section would not bar recovery by a supposed decedent whose estate has been probated. See [72-3-317]. (3) The limitation of this section ends the possibility of appointment of a personal representative to correct an erroneous distribution as mentioned in [72-3-1011 and 72-3-1016]. If there have been no adjudications under [72-3-313 and 72-3-316], or possibly [72-3-1001, 72-3-1002, or 72-3-1003], estate of the decedent which is discovered after administration has been closed may be the subject of different distribution than that attending the estate originally administered.

The last sentence excepting actions or suits to recover property kept from one by the fraud of another may be unnecessary in view of the blanket provision concerning fraud in [Chapter 1]. See [72-1-111].

Part 11
Collection of Personal Property by Affidavit and Summary Administration Procedure for Small Estates

Part Official Comments

The four sections which follow include two designed to facilitate transfer of small estates without use of a personal representative, and two designed to simplify the duties of a personal representative, who is appointed to handle a small estate.

The Flexible System of Administration described by earlier portions of [Chapter 3] lends itself well to situations involving small estates. Letters may be obtained quickly without notice or judicial involvement. Immediately, the personal representative is in a position to distribute to successors whose deeds or transfers will protect purchasers. This route accommodates the need for quick and inexpensive transfers of land of small value as well as other assets. Consequently, it was unnecessary to frame complex provisions extending the affidavit procedures to land.

Indeed, transfers via letters of administration may prove to be less troublesome than use of the affidavit procedure. Still, it seemed desirable to provide a quick collection mechanism which avoids all necessity to visit the probate court. For one thing, unpredictable local variations in probate practice may produce situations where the alternative procedure will be very useful. For another, the provision of alternatives is in line with the overall philosophy of [Chapter 3] to provide maximum flexibility.

Figures gleaned from a recent authoritative report of a major survey of probated estates in Cleveland, Ohio, demonstrate that more than one-half of all estates in probate had a gross value of less than $15,000. This means that the principal measure of the relevance of any legislation dealing with probate procedures is to be found in its impact on very small and moderate sized estates. Here is the area where probate affects most people.

72-3-1101. Collection of personal property by affidavit.

Official Comments

This section provides for an easy method for collecting the personal property of a decedent by affidavit prior to any formal disposition. Existing legislation generally permits the surviving widow or children to collect wages and other small amounts of liquid funds. [This section] goes further in that it allows the collection of personal property as well as money and permits any devisee or heir to make the collection. Since the appointment of a personal representative may be obtained easily under the code, it is unnecessary to make the provisions regarding small estates applicable to realty.

72-3-1103. Small estates — summary administration procedure.

Official Comments

This section makes it possible for the personal representative to make a summary distribution of a small estate without the necessity of giving notice to creditors. Since the probate estate of many decedents will not exceed the amount specified in the statute, this section will prove useful in many estates.

Compiler's Comments

1989 Amendment: Near beginning, before "entire estate", deleted "net distributable estate does not exceed $7,500 or the value of the"; and made minor change in phraseology.

1989 Editorial Comment: This section and 72-3-1104 contemplate that a personal representative may distribute a probate estate without giving notice to creditors. If, after filing the inventory and appraisal, it appears that the value of the entire estate less liens and encumbrances will not exceed the value of the family protections, costs of administration, reasonable funeral expenses, and the medical and hospital expenses resulting from the last illness of the decedent (preferred under 72-3-807), the personal representative may immediately disburse and distribute the estate to the appropriate persons without publishing the notice to creditors that would otherwise be required. Such a publication and the 4-month wait for creditors to file claims serve no purpose, since no creditors with a higher priority could exist.

Former Montana law had a unique provision referring to a "net distributable estate" that does not exceed $7,500, rather than the term "entire estate" used in the corresponding section of the national Uniform Probate Code. While the Montana version failed to define "net distributable estate", 72-1-103(11) defines "distributee" to mean "any person who has received property of a decedent from his personal representative other than as a creditor or purchaser". In other words, the net distributable estate is likely to mean that estate left for gratuitous transmission after satisfying all lawful claims. Thus, it was impossible to determine the net distributable estate until a notice to creditors had been published, creditors had filed claims, and the same had been satisfied. This change avoids that impossibility and places Montana in conformance with the national Uniform Probate Code. See corresponding national Uniform Probate Code sections 3-1203 and 3-1204.

Nothing in this change diminishes the ability of a person claiming to be the successor of the decedent from preparing and presenting an affidavit for the collection of property. This affidavit procedure, set forth in 72-3-1101 and 72-3-1102, is distinct and separate from the summary procedure for disbursement and distribution of 72-3-1103 and 72-3-1104.

1981 Amendment: Increased the value of net distributable estate from $1,500 to $7,500.

UPC Section: The corresponding section in the Uniform Probate Code as adopted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws is section 3-1203.

Changes From Uniform Act: The Montana enactment inserted "the value of the net distributable estate does not exceed $7,500 or the" near the beginning of the section. The compiler substituted the reference to "section 72-3-1104" for an apparently erroneous reference to "section 72-3-1102" at the end of the section.

72-3-1104. Small estates — closing by sworn statement of personal representative.

Official Comments

The personal representative may elect to close the estate under [72-3-1003] in order to secure the greater protection offered by that procedure.

The remedies for fraudulent statement provided in [72-1-111] of course would apply to any intentional misstatements by a personal representative.

CHAPTER 4
UPC — FOREIGN PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES AND ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATION

Chapter Official Comments

This [chapter] concerns the law applicable in estate problems which involve more than a single state. It covers the powers and responsibilities in the adopting state of personal representatives appointed in other states.

Some provisions of the code covering local appointment of personal representatives for nonresidents appear in [Chapter 3]. These include the following: [72-3-112] (venue), [72-3-114] (resolution of conflicting claims regarding domicile), [72-3-502] (priority as personal representative of a representative previously appointed at domicile), [72-3-225] (thirty days delay required before appointment of a local representative for a nonresident), [72-3-803(1)] (claims barred by nonclaim at domicile before local administration commenced are barred locally) and [72-3-821] (duty of personal representative in regard to claims where estate is being administered in more than one state). See also [72-3-222, 72-3-223, 72-3-526(1), and 72-3-822]. Also, see [72-4-401].

The recognition provisions contained in [Chapter 4] and the various provisions of [Chapter 3] which relate to administration of estates of nonresidents are designed to coerce respect for domiciliary procedures and administrative acts to the extent possible.

The first part of [Chapter 4] contains some definitions of particular relevance to estates located in two or more states.

The second part of [Chapter 4] deals with the powers of foreign personal representatives in a jurisdiction adopting the Uniform Probate Code. There are different types of power which may be exercised. [The text of the Comment discussing the types of power of foreign personal representatives is omitted since the Montana enactment substantially revised the Uniform Probate Code provisions. Cf. sections 4-201 through 4-207 of the Uniform Probate Code as promulgated by the National Conference of Commissioners.]

[Part 2] provides for power in the local court over foreign personal representatives who act locally. If a local or ancillary administration has been started, provisions in [Chapter 3] subject the appointee to the power of the court. See [72-3-511]. In [Part 2] of this [chapter], it is provided that a foreign personal representative submits himself to the jurisdiction of the local court by filing a copy of his appointment to get the powers provided in [72-4-301] or by doing any act which would give the state jurisdiction over him as an individual. In addition, the collection of funds as provided in [72-4-306] gives the court quasi-in rem jurisdiction over the foreign personal representative to the extent of the funds collected.

Finally, [72-4-203] provides that the foreign personal representative is subject to the jurisdiction of the local court "to the same extent that his decedent was subject to jurisdiction immediately prior to death." This is similar to the typical nonresident motorist provision that provides for jurisdiction over the personal representative of a deceased nonresident motorist, see Note, 44 Iowa L.Rev. 384 (1959).

Part 4 of the [chapter] deals with the res judicata effect to be given adjudications for or against a foreign personal representative. Any such adjudication is to be conclusive on a local personal representative "unless it resulted from fraud or collusion ... to the prejudice of the estate." This provision must be read with [72-3-312] which deals with certain out-of-state findings concerning a decedent's estate.

CHAPTER 5
UPC — PERSONS UNDER DISABILITY GUARDIANSHIP AND CONSERVATORSHIP

Chapter Official Comments

[Chapter 5] embodies separate systems of guardianship to protect persons of minors and mental incompetents. It also includes provisions for a type of power of attorney that does not terminate on disability of the principle which may be used by adults approaching senility or incompetence to avoid the necessity for other kinds of protective regimes. Finally, Part 4 of the [chapter] offers a system of protective proceedings, including conservatorships, to provide for the management of substantial aggregations of property of persons who are, for one reason or another, including minority and mental incompetence, unable to manage their own property.

It should be emphasized that the [chapter] contains many provisions designed to minimize or avoid the necessity of guardianship and protective proceedings, as well as provisions designed to simplify and minimize arrangements which become necessary for care of persons or their property. The power of attorney which confers authority notwithstanding later incompetence is one example of the former. Another is a facility of payment provision which permits relatively small sums owed to a minor to be paid whether or not there is a guardian or other official who has been designated to act for the minor. A new device tending to simplify necessary protective proceedings, is found in provisions in Part 4 which permit a judge to make appropriate orders concerning the property of a disabled person without appointing a fiduciary.

The highspots of the several parts of [Chapter 5], considered in somewhat more detail, include the following:

(a) The facility of payment clause, which is [72-5-104], permits one owing up to $5,000 per year to a minor to be validly discharged by payment to the minor, if he is over eighteen or married, to the minor's parent or grandparent or other adult with whom the minor resides, to a guardian, or by deposit in an account in the name of the minor.

(b) A provision in Part 2 permits the surviving parent of a minor to designate a guardian by will. A similar provision in Part 3 authorizes a parent or spouse to designate a guardian for an incapacitated person by will. Such designation becomes effective upon probate of the will and the filing of an acceptance by the guardian. Thereafter the status of guardian and ward arises. It is like guardianship of the person, rather than of estate. It is described as a parental relationship without the parental obligation of support. The relationship follows the guardian and ward and is properly recognized and implemented, as and when necessary, by the courts of any jurisdiction where these persons may be located. No requirement of periodic reports or accounts is imposed on a testamentary guardian. The question of his proper expenditure of the small sums which he may receive for the ward is left to be settled by the guardian and ward after the ward attains full age. If the amounts involved become more than the guardian cares to be responsible for on this basis, he or any other interested person may seek the appointment of a property manager who is called a "conservator" by the code. The guardian may be eligible to be appointed to this position.

Part 2 also permits a testamentary guardian of a minor to receive and expend sums payable to the minor for the minor's support and education without court order. He may not pay himself for services, however, and is under a duty to deposit excess funds, or to seek a suitable property-protection order if other management is needed.

(c) A parent or guardian is permitted to delegate his authority for short periods as necessitated by anticipated absence or incapacity.

(d) As previously mentioned, Part 4 . . . deals with protective proceedings designed to permit substantial property interests of minors and others unable properly to manage their own affairs to be controlled by court order or managed by a conservator appointed by the court. The causes for inability of owner-management that are listed by the statute are quite broad. Technical incompetency is but one of several reasons why one may be unable to manage his affairs. See [72-5-409(1)]. The draftsmen's view was that reliance should be placed on the fact that the court applying the statute would be a full power court and on the various procedural safeguards, including a right to jury trial, to protect against unwise use of the proceedings, rather than to attempt to state and rely upon a narrow or technical test of lack of ability.

Section [72-5-422] is important, for it makes it clear that a court entertaining a protective proceeding has full power, through its orders, to do anything the protected person himself might have done if not disabled. Another provision broadens the form of relief so that the court may handle a single transaction, like renewal of a mortgage, or a sale and related investment of proceeds, which is recommended in respect to the affairs of a protected person directly by its orders rather than through the appointment of a conservator.

(e) If a conservator is appointed, provisions in Part 4 of the draft give him broad powers of management that may be exercised without a court order. On the other hand, provision is made for restricting the managerial or distribution powers of a conservator, provided notation of the restriction appears on his letters of appointment. Unless restricted, the fiduciary may be able to distribute and end the arrangement without court order if he can meet the terms of the Act. Among other kinds of expenditures and disbursements authorized, payments for the support and education of the protected person as determined by a guardian of the protected person, if any, or by the conservator, if there is no guardian, are approved. Also, certain payments for the support of dependents of the protected person are approved by the code and hence would require no special approval.

(f) Other provisions in Part 4 round out the relationship of protective proceedings to creditors of the protected person and persons who deal with a conservator. Claims are handled by the conservator who is given a fiduciary responsibility to claimants and suitable discretion concerning allowance. If questions arise, the appointing court has all needed power to deal with disputes with creditors. The draft changes the common-law rule that contracts of a guardian are his personal responsibility. A conservator is not liable personally on contracts made for the estate unless he agrees to such liability. A section buttresses the managerial powers given to conservator by protecting all persons who deal with them.

(g) Another section seeks to reduce the importance of state lines in respect to the authority of conservators by permitting appointees of foreign courts to act locally. Also, it follows the pattern of [Chapter 3] dealing with ancillary administration of decedents' estates by giving the conservator appointed at the domicile of the protected person priority for appointment locally in case local administration of a protected person's assets becomes necessary.

(h) The many states which have adopted the Uniform Veterans Guardianship Act [section 91-4801, et seq., R.C.M. 1947, repealed effective July 1, 1975] now have two systems for protection of the property of minors and mental incompetents, one of which applies if the property was derived, in whole or in part, from benefits paid by the Veterans Administration [now Department of Veterans Affairs] and its minor or incompetent owner is or has been a beneficiary of the Veterans Administration [now Department of Veterans Affairs], and the other of which applies to all other property. It is sometimes difficult to ascertain whether a person has ever received a benefit from the Veterans Administration [now Department of Veterans Affairs] and commonly impossible to determine whether property was derived in part from benefits paid by the Veterans Administration [now Department of Veterans Affairs]. Part 4 would provide a single system for the protection of property of minors and others unable to manage their own property, thus superseding the Uniform Veterans Guardianship Act. It would preserve the right of the Veterans Administration [now Department of Veterans Affairs] to appear in protective proceedings involving the property of its beneficiaries and would permit the imposition of the same safeguards provided by the superseded Uniform Veterans Guardianship Act.

Chapter Case Notes

DECISIONS UNDER FORMER LAW

Joint Final Account: When one coguardian filed a final account and the other coguardian appeared at the hearing and produced his records and filed an affidavit stating that the material portions of the final account as filed by the other coguardian were correct, the procedure followed was sufficient to authorize the Court to accept and approve the documents as a joint final account. Guardianship of Reid, 128 M 197, 271 P2d 1031 (1954).

Action on Bond:

In action on guardian's bond, contention of ward that the 3-year limitation had no application where there never had been a legal relationship of guardian and ward in existence was not sustainable, the purported guardian having been at least an equitable one. Janes v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 112 M 580, 119 P2d 39 (1941).

The provision of 72-13-102 (now repealed) requiring action against the sureties on a guardian's bond to be brought within 3 years was a special Statute of Limitations for the benefit of the sureties and not for the principal. Berkin v. Marsh, 18 M 152, 44 P 528 (1896).

Judgment Against Principal — Liability of Surety: A surety on a guardian's bond is bound by a judgment against the principal if rendered as a part of probate proceedings because it is bound by the various notices required to be given in such proceedings. The rule is different when the judgment is rendered in a proceeding not connected with probate proceedings, in which case the surety must be made a party defendant in order to be bound by the judgment. Janes v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 112 M 580, 119 P2d 39 (1941).

Right of Ward to Bring Action: The question whether action by ward on bond of his guardian was barred by 72-13-102 (now repealed) could not be raised by demurrer (demurrer abolished, former Rule 7(c), M.R.Civ.P., now superseded). An answer was required to enable the ward, whose complaint did not allege time when he was restored to capacity, to show by reply that he brought the action within 3 years after removal of his disability. Janes v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 112 M 580, 119 P2d 39 (1941).

Appointment Void — Lack of Jurisdiction: An order of Court declaring the appointment of a guardian void ab initio (made some 10 years after appointment) was equivalent to his discharge, and the special limitation of 3 years provided by 72-13-102 (now repealed) became a part of the suretyship contract, notwithstanding the order. Janes v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, 112 M 580, 119 P2d 39 (1941).

Death of Ward:

The death of a ward is a discharge of the guardian within the meaning of 72-13-102 (now repealed). Berkin v. Marsh, 18 M 152, 44 P 528 (1896), explained in Mitchell v. McDonald, 114 M 292, 136 P2d 536 (1943).

A legal disability to sue pertains to the person desiring to sue and not to the cause of action, and therefore, though a cause of action on a guardian's bond may not accrue until after the guardian's final accounting, this does not place the administrator of a deceased ward under a disability from the time of the ward's death until the accounting. Berkin v. Marsh, 18 M 152, 44 P 528 (1896).

Case Notes

Limited Guardianship Appropriate to Encourage Self-Reliance and Independence: West sought a change of guardianship in order to allow him to grant gifts and to establish a program of estate tax planning. The District Court terminated the general guardianship and established a limited guardianship but denied a joint petition to substitute the conservatorship with a trust. West contended error because he no longer met the definition of incapacitated person under this section and because 72-5-316 does not permit a limited guardianship when a protected person can meet the essential requirements for physical health and safety. A guardianship was appropriate in this case because West's physical capabilities were not likely to improve and some mental impairment remained. Under 72-5-306, a limited guardianship was permitted because it enumerated only certain decisions regarding financial affairs that could be made for West in the event that he was unable to do so, encouraging the development of maximum self-reliance and independence while promoting and protecting his well-being. In re Estate of West, 269 M 83, 887 P2d 222, 51 St. Rep. 1409 (1994).

No Showing of Incapacitation: Neither Ole nor Gladys Swandal, an elderly couple whose health was failing, was an "incapacitated person" within the meaning of 72-5-101 and 72-5-306. These statutes clearly require a showing of both physical and mental impairment, and no evidence was presented that showed that the Swandals were mentally infirm. The fact that other people might run the Swandals' ranch better than they do is not grounds to appoint a guardian for them. In re Swandal, 210 M 167, 681 P2d 701, 41 St. Rep. 986 (1984).

Personal Guardianship and Property Conservatorship No Bar to Trust Revocation — Construction Against Party Supplying Trust Form: A trustee appealed from a declaratory ruling of the District Court holding that a personal guardianship and a property conservatorship did not prevent the trustor from revoking the trust. The trustee, also a beneficiary, argued in effect that the trustor had been legally incapacitated from revoking the trust because she was under a personal guardianship and her property was under a conservatorship and because the trust provided that it was irrevocable upon the "incompetency" of the trustor. However, the conservatorship and guardianship did not begin before revocation of the trust. Further, a conservatorship would not affect the power to revoke under 72-5-421. The guardianship had been appointed because the trustor had become physically incapable of caring for herself, not because of mental incapacitation. Construing the term "incompetency" strictly against the trustee because it had supplied the trust form and was a beneficiary, the Supreme Court upheld the trial court's holding that the trust revocation was valid. Mont. Conference of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church v. Estate of Miller, 192 M 468, 628 P2d 1100, 38 St. Rep. 846 (1981), followed in In re Estate of West, 269 M 83, 887 P2d 222, 51 St. Rep. 1409 (1994).

Guardianship Appointment for Retarded Minor: A person afflicted only with incapacity caused by minority is specifically excluded from coverage under the guardianship of incapacitated persons statutes. All minors, regardless of mental condition, have been designated as persons under disability needing the protection of a guardian. The fact that a minor may be mentally retarded adds nothing to the legislative determination that he is in need of protection, and the procedure to be followed is that for appointing a guardian for a minor. 72-5-103. Delegation of powers by parent or guardian.

Official Comments

This section permits a temporary delegation of parental powers. For example, parents (or guardian) of a minor plan to be out of the country for several months. They wish to empower a close relative (an uncle, e.g.) to take any necessary action regarding the child while they are away. Using this section, they could execute an appropriate power of attorney giving the uncle custody and power to consent. Then if an emergency operation were required, the uncle could consent on behalf of the child; as a practical matter he would of course attempt to communicate with the parents before acting. The section is designed to reduce problems relating to consents for emergency treatment.

72-5-104. Informal discharge of duty to pay or deliver property to minor.

Official Comments

Where a minor has only a small amount of property, it would be wasteful to require protective proceedings to deal with the property. This section makes it possible for other persons, such as the guardian, to handle the less complicated property affairs of the ward. Protective proceedings, including the possible establishment of a conservatorship, will be sought where substantial property is involved.

This section does not go as far as many facility of payment provisions found in trust instruments which usually permit application of sums due minor beneficiary to any expense or charge for the minor. It was felt that a grant of so large an area of discretion to any category of person who might owe funds to a minor would be unwise. Nonetheless, the section as drafted should reduce the need for trust facility of payment provision somewhat, while extending opportunities to insurance companies and other debtors to minors for relatively simple methods of gaining discharge.

Guardians of Minors

Part Case Notes

Probate Code Permanent Guardianship Proceeding — Dependency or Neglect Not Grounds for Terminating Mother's Custody of Child: A mother's parental rights were not terminated by circumstance when a court order granted, with her consent, temporary guardianship in the paternal grandparents. A later court, on the grandparents' petition for permanent guardianship under the Uniform Probate Code, found that the child was neglected or dependent and that the child's best interests would be served by granting the petition. The mother appeared in and contested the later action, withdrew her consent, and filed a petition to terminate the temporary guardianship. The guardianship provisions of the Uniform Probate Code were never intended as a substitute for the child custody provisions of Title 40 governing dissolution of marriage or for the procedures of Title 41 governing termination of the parent-child relationship. The court relied on cases stating that a dependent neglected best interests of the child determination could not be made in a Uniform Probate Code permanent guardianship proceeding and had to be made under a child custody or parental termination proceeding. In re Guardianship of D.T.N., 275 M 480, 914 P2d 579, 53 St. Rep. 253 (1996).

Procedures to Be Rigorously Followed: While there is some overlap in the various statutory schemes governing the termination of parental rights and the custody of children as to general subject matter, each is used for a distinct purpose and sets forth specific procedures which must be rigorously followed before a valid judgment or order may be issued, to insure that the minors involved receive the full protection of these laws. 72-5-202. Consent to jurisdiction by acceptance of appointment.

Official Comments

The "long-arm" principle behind this section is well established. It seems desirable that the Court in which acceptance is filed be able to serve its process on the guardian wherever he has moved. The continuing interest of that court in the welfare of the minor is ample to justify this provision. The consent to service is real rather than fictional in the guardianship situation, where the guardian acts voluntarily in filing acceptance. It is probable that the form of acceptance will expressly embody the provisions of this section, although the statute does not expressly require this.

The words "all parental rights of custody" are to be read with [72-5-201 and 72-5-231] which give testamentary and court-appointed guardians of minors certain parental rights respecting the minor. Hence, no authority to appoint a guardian for a minor exists if a testamentary guardian has accepted an effective appointment by will. The purpose of this restriction is to support and encourage testamentary appointments which may occur without judicial act. Parental Rights Suspended by Circumstances — Appointment of Guardians Proper Despite Withdrawal of Parental Consent: Two girls were living with their biological father when he was arrested for deliberate homicide. The father executed a special power of attorney, placing the girls in the care of a doctor and his wife who had provided past financial support, foster care, and day care for the children. The biological mother also gave the couple temporary permission to care for the girls and did not withdraw her consent until some 18 months later. The couple later petitioned for temporary guardianship of the girls pending the parents' ability to care for the children. On the same day, an uncle and aunt petitioned for full guardianship of the girls, and their petition was supported by the mother. The District Court concluded that the mother's parental rights were suspended by circumstances of her admitted inability to care for the children and eventually granted full guardianship to the couple. The mother appealed the suspension of her parental rights and the grant of guardianship. The Supreme Court affirmed on both issues. The mother waived the right to a hearing on suspension and voluntarily relinquished her parental rights by admitting that she was unfit to parent. The District Court properly considered the best interests of the children in determining guardianship rather than in the context of suspending the mother's parental rights, and the court did not err in maintaining the status quo by extending the temporary guardianship after the mother agreed to it, despite the fact that the mother eventually withdrew her consent. Last, the District Court did not need permission from either parent to appoint a guardian because the parental rights of both parents had been suspended by the circumstances. In re Guardianship & Conservatorship of J.C. & A.N.C., 2007 MT 106, 337 M 156, 157 P3d 1130 (2007).

Improper Reliance on Parenting Plan Statutes in Granting Temporary Guardianship — Reversal Required: Pursuant to a stipulated parenting plan, the father was designated primary custodian of the couple's son and the mother was awarded visitation every other weekend. When the father received orders to report for active military duty, he moved to have the couple that he and the son lived with and the mother's sister appointed as temporary guardians. The mother moved to dismiss, but the District Court granted the father's motion, and the mother appealed. Reviewing the appealable order granting temporary guardianship, the Supreme Court reversed. The District Court's reliance on 40-4-219 for granting the guardianship was misplaced because that section applies only to modification of a parenting plan with respect to the parents and does not provide authority to decide custody matters between a parent and a third party, including appointment of a third party as a guardian. The District Court's reliance on 40-4-228 for granting the guardianship was also misplaced because that section provides standards by which a court may award a parental interest to a nonparent who has brought a parenting plan proceeding pursuant to 40-4-211, but no such proceeding was brought in this case. The District Court also mistakenly relied on 41-3-427 in granting the guardianship because that section deals with child abuse and neglect, but does not provide independent authority for appointment of a guardian in disregard of the guardianship statutes. Rather, the father's request was governed by the guardianship statutes in this chapter, which the District Court did not address. The Supreme Court noted that the guardianship provisions in this section apply only when a court order has addressed a party's right to parent, as opposed to arrangements defining a parent's custody and visitation under a parenting plan. The mother's right to parent was never previously limited by court order, so the District Court lacked jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for the child pursuant to this section, and granting the father's petition for temporary guardianship was reversible error. The Supreme Court remanded for the entry of an order vacating the guardianship. Fischer v. Fischer, 2007 MT 101, 337 M 122, 157 P3d 682 (2007).

Probate Code Permanent Guardianship Proceeding — Dependency or Neglect Not Grounds for Terminating Mother's Custody of Child: A mother's parental rights were not terminated by circumstance when a court order granted, with her consent, temporary guardianship in the paternal grandparents. A later court, on the grandparents' petition for permanent guardianship under the Uniform Probate Code, found that the child was neglected or dependent and that the child's best interests would be served by granting the petition. The mother appeared in and contested the later action, withdrew her consent, and filed a petition to terminate the temporary guardianship. The guardianship provisions of the Uniform Probate Code were never intended as a substitute for the child custody provisions of Title 40 governing dissolution of marriage or for the procedures of Title 41 governing termination of the parent-child relationship. The court relied on cases stating that a dependent neglected best interests of the child determination could not be made in a Uniform Probate Code permanent guardianship proceeding and had to be made under a child custody or parental termination proceeding. In re Guardianship of D.T.N., 275 M 480, 914 P2d 579, 53 St. Rep. 253 (1996).

Parental Rights of Custody — Termination: Permanent and legal custody of a minor child having been awarded to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), the Court did not err in dismissing a petition by the appellant foster parents to appoint appellants as guardians of the child, because guardians may be appointed only if all "parental rights of custody" have been terminated. "Parental rights of custody" include those rights of the Department, which have not been terminated. In re the Guardianship of P.J.D., a Minor, 183 M 491, 600 P2d 1170 (1979).

Custody Proceeding — Guardians: In an action seeking: (1) termination of the parental rights of the natural parents; (2) the award of full care and custody of the child to her aunt and uncle; (3) the institution of a restraining order against the mother's boyfriend to prevent him from molesting the child; and (4) for such other relief as the District Court deemed proper, the District Court had authority to name the child's aunt and uncle her general guardians under the fourth paragraph of the prayer for relief. Wenz v. Schwartze, 183 M 166, 598 P2d 1086 (1979).

Procedural Errors Requiring Reversal: The District Court's order, though couched in terms of temporary custody, was issued in response to a petition for appointment of guardian of minors and was, in effect, the appointment of a temporary guardian. Because there was no notice to the mother, no hearing prior to the appointment of the temporary guardian, no determination that the mother's parental rights of custody had been terminated or suspended, and no determination that the required notices had been given, the lower Court's order was reversed. In re Guardianship of Aschenbrenner, 182 M 540, 597 P2d 1156 (1979).

Suspension of Parental Rights "By Circumstances" — Error in Granting Guardianship: At the time of issuing its order granting temporary custody to the grandparents, the District Court had no evidence that the mother's parental rights of custody had been suspended or terminated by either prior court order or circumstance. The requirements of this section were not met, thus any order purporting to appoint a guardian is invalid. In re Guardianship of Aschenbrenner, 182 M 540, 597 P2d 1156 (1979).

Guardianship Appointment for Retarded Minor: A person afflicted only with incapacity caused by minority is specifically excluded from coverage under the guardianship of incapacitated persons statutes. All minors, regardless of mental condition, have been designated as persons under disability needing the protection of a guardian. The fact that a minor may be mentally retarded adds nothing to the legislative determination that he is in need of protection, and the procedure to be followed is that for appointing a guardian for a minor. In re the Guardianship of Evans, 179 M 438, 587 P2d 372 (1978).

Contested Guardianship Custody — Law to Be Considered: When a guardianship case is before the Court under 72-5-222 and the custody of a child is being contested, the Court must consider the provisions of 40-4-212 and guidelines set forth by this Court in recent custody cases. In re Gullette, 173 M 132, 566 P2d 396 (1977).

72-5-223. Guardian of minor by court appointment — qualifications — nominee of minor preferred.

Official Comments

Rather than provide for priorities among various classes of relatives, it was felt that the only priority should be for the person nominated by the minor. The important point is to locate someone whose appointment will be in the best interests of the minor. If there is contention among relatives over who should be named, it is not likely that a statutory priority keyed to degrees of kinship would help resolve the matter. For example, if the argument involved a squabble between relatives of the child's father and relatives of its mother, priority in terms of degrees of kinship would be useless.

Guardianships under this code are not likely to be attractive positions for persons who are more interested in handling a minor's estate than in his personal well-being. An order of a court having equity power is necessary if the guardian is to receive payment for services where there is no conservator for the minor's estate. Also, the powers of management of a ward's estate conferred on a guardian are restricted so that if a substantial estate is involved, a conservator will be needed to handle the financial matters.

Lay Person May Be Guardian Ad Litem in Child Custody Proceeding: Generally, in a child custody proceeding, the court may appoint as a guardian ad litem for the child any person who does not have interests adverse to those of the child. The Supreme Court rejected the father's claim that the lower court should not have appointed a lay person, who the father likened to an expert witness and claimed was unqualified and had no known or disclosed experience or qualifications. Appointment of Mother Married to Manager of Ranch That Might Be Sued for Her Children's Injuries — No Conflict of Interest: The mother's four children were injured in a one-vehicle accident while an employee of the ranch that her husband managed was, at the mother's request, driving the children home to the ranch after school. The parties agreed that the employee was acting in the course and scope of his employment, that the ranch owned the pickup, that the ranch had about $800,000 of available insurance coverage, that the damages could exceed the limits of the insurance, and that a suit against the ranch was a possibility. The mother's ex-husband petitioned for his appointment as the children's guardian ad litem and conservator. The mother cross-petitioned that she be appointed. The District Court did not err in appointing the mother and deciding that she did not suffer from a conflict of interest that precluded her from serving as guardian ad litem and conservator of the children. The District Court found that she "would fulfill her fiduciary duties to her children tenaciously", that she would consider their emotional needs and future financial security, and that the evidence showed that she was an extremely involved and protective mother who gave much time, love, and attention to the children. In re Watson, 283 M 57, 939 P2d 982, 54 St. Rep. 492 (1997).

Guardian Not Entitled to Same Due Process as Parent — Exclusion From First Show Cause Hearing — Termination of Guardianship Based on Best Interests of Child: The state filed for protective custody of a boy whose grandmother and stepgrandfather had been his legal guardians since he was 5 weeks old. The District Court did not allow the stepgrandfather to participate in the first show cause hearing or a permanency plan hearing. Later, however, the stepgrandfather participated in the remainder of the proceedings. Ultimately, the District Court concluded the child's best interests warranted termination of the guardianship. On appeal, the stepgrandfather argued that he had not received adequate due process because of his exclusion from the first show cause hearing. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that a guardian is not afforded the same level of due process as a parent in a termination case. Moreover, the District Court had afforded the stepgrandfather adequate due process by allowing him to meaningfully participate in the remainder of the proceedings. Appointment Not Terminated — Duties of Guardian Appropriately Performed: Gali contended that his son and daughter did not meet their duties to act in his best interests as his coguardians and conservators. The District Court found that although some personal conflicts had arisen between Gali and his children, such as the placement of financial limits on Gali's spending, the children had generally managed Gali's business and financial affairs well and appropriately performed their guardianship duties. Absent a showing of clear error, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's refusal to remove the children as guardians and to appoint new ones. Attorney Fees Incurred in Seeking Guardianship Payable From Estate: A law firm requested $30,000 in fees from the conservator of an incapacitated person's estate for services requested by the attorney-in-fact in appointing a guardian for the incapacitated person. The District Court ordered payment of the fees out of the conservator estate. An appointing court's discretionary power encompasses the approval of attorney fees incurred by a guardian within the scope of the guardianship. Further, under 72-5-428, the conservator of the estate of an incapacitated person is authorized to distribute funds necessary for the support, education, care, or benefit of the protected person. The cost of initiating a good faith petition for the appointment of a guardian, when the appointment is determined to be in the best interests of the ward, constitutes a necessary expenditure on behalf of the ward and is therefore compensable out of the guardianship estate. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering payment of the attorney fees, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the order on appeal. Guardianship and Commitment Proceedings Separate: In reviewing a guardianship proceeding, under this part, the Supreme Court will not review issues involving statutes which pertain to commitment proceedings. Although the two proceedings may overlap, they involve different procedures which must be followed to ensure that incapacitated persons receive the full protection of the law. Giarratana v. Thompson, 204 M 90, 663 P2d 316, 40 St. Rep. 684 (1983).

Personal Guardianship and Property Conservatorship No Bar to Trust Revocation — Construction Against Party Supplying Trust Form: A trustee appealed from a declaratory ruling of the District Court holding that a personal guardianship and a property conservatorship did not prevent the trustor from revoking the trust. The trustee, also a beneficiary, argued in effect that the trustor had been legally incapacitated from revoking the trust because she was under a personal guardianship and her property was under a conservatorship and because the trust provided that it was irrevocable upon the "incompetency" of the trustor. However, the conservatorship and guardianship did not begin before revocation of the trust. Further, a conservatorship would not affect the power to revoke under 72-5-421. The guardianship had been appointed because the trustor had become physically incapable of caring for herself, not because of mental incapacitation. Construing the term "incompetency" strictly against the trustee because it had supplied the trust form and was a beneficiary, the Supreme Court upheld the trial court's holding that the trust revocation was valid. Mont. Conference of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church v. Estate of Miller, 192 M 468, 628 P2d 1100, 38 St. Rep. 846 (1981), followed in In re Estate of West, 269 M 83, 887 P2d 222, 51 St. Rep. 1409 (1994).

72-5-301. Consent to jurisdiction by acceptance of appointment.

Official Comments

The proceedings under [Chapter 5] are flexible. The court should not appoint a guardian unless one is necessary or desirable for the care of the person. If it develops that the needs of the person who is alleged to be incapacitated are not those which would call for a guardian, the court may adjust the proceeding accordingly. By acceptance of the appointment, the guardian submits to the court's jurisdiction in much the same way as a personal representative. Cf. [72-3-511].

72-5-302. Testamentary appointment of guardian for incapacitated person — when effective — priorities.

Official Comments

This section, modelled after [72-5-221], is designed to give the surviving parent, or the spouse, of an incapacitated person, the ability to confer the authority of a guardian on a person designated by will. This opportunity may be most useful in cases where parents, during their lifetime, have arranged an informal or voluntary commitment of an incompetent child, and are anxious to designate another who can maintain contact with the patient and act on his behalf without the necessity of a sanity hearing. The person designated by will must act by filing acceptance of the appointment. This provides a check against will directions which might prove to be unwise or unnecessary after the parents' death. Moreover, the testamentary designee will have the risk of the possibility that the ward is not in fact incapacitated to prevent him from using the authority conferred to restrain the liberty of the ward. In cases of doubt, the testamentary appointee should petition for a Court appointment under [72-5-315].

1989 Amendment: In first sentence of (1), before "incapacitated person", inserted "unmarried" and inserted "or other writing signed by the parent and attested by at least two witnesses", at beginning of second sentence substituted "If both parents are dead or the surviving parent is adjudged incapacitated, a parental appointment" for "A testamentary appointment by a parent" and at end, after "informally or formally probated", deleted "if prior thereto both parents are dead or the surviving parent is adjudged incapacitated" and inserted clause relating to a nontestamentary nominating instrument, inserted third sentence relating to statement in notice concerning termination of appointment, and at end of fourth sentence, after "priority", deleted "unless it is terminated by the denial of probate in formal proceedings"; in first sentence of (2) inserted "or other writing signed by the spouse and attested by at least two witnesses", at end of second sentence inserted clause relating to a nontestamentary nominating instrument, inserted third sentence relating to statement in notice concerning termination of appointment, and at end of fourth sentence, after "parent", deleted "unless it is terminated by the denial of probate in formal proceedings"; and made minor changes in phraseology.

Order to Specify Full or Limited Guardianship: The District Court order appointing a guardian for an incapacitated person did not specify, as is required by subsection (2) of 72-5-316, whether a full or limited guardianship was created. The Supreme Court ruled that the guardianship created was a full one, noting that the condition of the incapacitated person was so severe that a limited guardianship would be inappropriate and the District Court order did not specify particular powers and duties of the guardian. The District Court was ordered to amend the order to comply with 72-5-316. Giarratana v. Thompson, 204 M 90, 663 P2d 316, 40 St. Rep. 684 (1983).

Court Discretion to Appoint Parent and State as Temporary Coguardians of Incapacitated Child: Because of severe abuse and neglect by his birth mother, a child came into state custody and care at age 6, and parental rights of both the mother and father were terminated. The father began to establish limited contact with the child at age 13. In anticipation of the child reaching majority, the state prepared a transition plan because of the child's mental and emotional health needs and inability to care for himself. The father petitioned for temporary full coguardianship. Over the state's objections, the District Court in an emergency hearing appointed both the father and the state as temporary coguardians, and the state appealed on grounds that there is no statutory authority to appoint a state agency as guardian of an incapacitated person without the agency's consent. The Supreme Court noted that this section requires that designation of guardianship of an incapacitated person may be used only as necessary to enhance the well-being of the person and must be designed to promote as much independence and self-reliance as possible in the best interest of the ward. Appointment of a guardian, subject to statutory restriction, is largely within the discretion of the District Court and will not be disturbed absent an abuse of that discretion. Under 72-5-312(5), a qualified state or federal agency may be appointed as guardian, without consent, if there is no qualified person to serve as guardian. In this case, the father, though willing, was not qualified to serve as the child's guardian, so the District Court did not abuse its discretion in appointing the father and the state as temporary coguardians pursuant to the procedure for appointment in 72-5-317. In re Coguardianship of D.A., 2004 MT 302, 323 M 442, 100 P3d 650 (2004).

Guardian Entitled to Award of Attorney Fees for Appointment as Guardian — Award in Nonadversarial Proceeding Held Not to Violate General Rule for Award of Attorney Fees — Award Approved Though Not Requested in Original Petition for Appointment: Appellant contested the payment of $30,000 in legal fees from the estate of a ward to the attorney representing the guardian appointed by the District Court, arguing that the general rule is that attorney fees are not payable to a prevailing party without special statutory provisions to the contrary and that the original petition for appointment of the guardian did not include a request for payment of attorney fees. The Supreme Court affirmed the order of the District Court awarding the fees. The Supreme Court pointed out, citing opinions from other states, that the general rule regarding payment of fees applies to adversarial proceedings and that the appointment of a guardian is not an adversarial proceeding but is a proceeding in rem to promote the bests interests of the ward and to protect the ward's estate. The Supreme Court also held that under former Rule 54(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), the District Court may grant relief to which a party is entitled regardless of whether the party has specifically requested the relief granted. The Supreme Court noted that the payment of the guardian's legal fees by the estate of the ward is relief to which the guardian would be entitled under 72-5-428(1) if the petition for appointment was brought in good faith and the appointment was in the bests interests of the ward. Limited Guardianship Appropriate to Encourage Self-Reliance and Independence: West sought a change of guardianship in order to allow him to grant gifts and to establish a program of estate tax planning. The District Court terminated the general guardianship and established a limited guardianship but denied a joint petition to substitute the conservatorship with a trust. West contended error because he no longer met the definition of incapacitated person under 72-5-101 and because 72-5-316 does not permit a limited guardianship when a protected person can meet the essential requirements for physical health and safety. A guardianship was appropriate in this case because West's physical capabilities were not likely to improve and some mental impairment remained. Under this section, a limited guardianship was permitted because it enumerated only certain decisions regarding financial affairs that could be made for West in the event that he was unable to do so, encouraging the development of maximum self-reliance and independence while promoting and protecting his well-being. In re Estate of West, 269 M 83, 887 P2d 222, 51 St. Rep. 1409 (1994).

No Showing of Incapacitation: Neither Ole nor Gladys Swandal, an elderly couple whose health was failing, was an "incapacitated person" within the meaning of 72-5-101 and 72-5-306. These statutes clearly require a showing of both physical and mental impairment, and no evidence was presented that showed that the Swandals were mentally infirm. The fact that other people might run the Swandals' ranch better than they do is not grounds to appoint a guardian for them. In re Swandal, 210 M 167, 681 P2d 701, 41 St. Rep. 986 (1984).

72-5-311. Venue for proceedings for court appointment of guardian.

Official Comments

Venue in guardianship proceedings lies in the county where the incapacitated person is present, as well as where he resides. Thus, if the person is temporarily away from his county of usual abode, the court of the county where he happens to be may handle requests for guardianship proceedings relating to him. In protective proceedings, venue is normally in the county of residence. See [72-5-407]. See [72-1-203] for disposition when venue is in two counties, and for transfer of venue.

Issue of Notice of Conservatorship and Guardianship Proceedings Not Raised at Trial — No Appeal: At the request of her doctor, Myrtle Mae Tennant (Mae) was declared an incompetent by the District Court so that a conservator and guardian could be appointed for her. Thereafter, the conservator filed an action to recover from appellants Evans and Williams funds that they had received from Mae. On appeal, appellants claimed that the District Court erred by not giving Mae any notice of the conservatorship and guardianship proceedings and that therefore the appointments made during the proceedings were void ab initio. The Supreme Court found that the issue of notice to Mae was not previously raised or presented to the trial court and that therefore the issue could not be properly raised on appeal. Consequently, the appellants' claim of error was disregarded. In re Tennant, 220 M 78, 714 P2d 122, 43 St. Rep. 189 (1986).

Guardianship Appointment for Retarded Minor: A person afflicted only with incapacity caused by minority is specifically excluded from coverage under the guardianship of incapacitated persons statutes. All minors, regardless of mental condition, have been designated as persons under disability needing the protection of a guardian. The fact that a minor may be mentally retarded adds nothing to the legislative determination that he is in need of protection, and the procedure to be followed is that for appointing a guardian for a minor. Case Notes

Attorney Fees Incurred in Seeking Guardianship Payable From Estate: A law firm requested $30,000 in fees from the conservator of an incapacitated person's estate for services requested by the attorney-in-fact in appointing a guardian for the incapacitated person. The District Court ordered payment of the fees out of the conservator estate. An appointing court's discretionary power encompasses the approval of attorney fees incurred by a guardian within the scope of the guardianship. Further, under 72-5-428, the conservator of the estate of an incapacitated person is authorized to distribute funds necessary for the support, education, care, or benefit of the protected person. The cost of initiating a good faith petition for the appointment of a guardian, when the appointment is determined to be in the best interests of the ward, constitutes a necessary expenditure on behalf of the ward and is therefore compensable out of the guardianship estate. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering payment of the attorney fees, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the order on appeal. 72-5-316. Findings — order of appointment.

Official Comments

The purpose of guardianship is to provide for the care of a person who is unable to care for himself. There is no reason to seek a guardian in those situations where the problems to be dealt with center around the property of a disabled person. In that event, a protective proceeding under Part 4 may be in order.

It is assumed that the standards suggested by the definition in [72-5-101] for the "incapacitated" person are different from those which will determine when a person may be committed as mentally ill. For example, involuntary commitment proceedings may well be inappropriate unless it is determined that the patient is or probably will become dangerous to himself or the person or property of others. As indicated in [72-5-101], the meaning of "incapacitated" turns on whether the subject lacks "understanding or capacity to make or communicate responsible decisions concerning his person." There is overlap between the two sets of standards, but they are different. Hence, a finding that a person is "incapacitated" does not amount to a finding that he is mentally ill, or can be committed. In the reverse situation, if a person has been committed to institutional care and custody because of mental illness, it may be unnecessary to appoint a guardian for him. Nonetheless, it may be desirable to have a personal guardian for one who is or may be committed or who will be cared for by an institution. For one thing, a guardian, having custody, might arrange for a voluntary care arrangement like that which a parent for a minor and incapacitated child could establish. Moreover, the limited authority of a guardian over property of his ward may be appropriate in cases where the ward is committed. Because of the relationship between existing guardianship legislation and the handling of committed persons appears to vary considerably from state to state, the code was deliberately left rather general on points relevant to the relationship. Section [72-5-321] qualifies the power of a guardian to determine the place of residence of a ward who has been committed.

Limited Guardianship Appropriate to Encourage Self-Reliance and Independence: West sought a change of guardianship in order to allow him to grant gifts and to establish a program of estate tax planning. The District Court terminated the general guardianship and established a limited guardianship but denied a joint petition to substitute the conservatorship with a trust. West contended error because he no longer met the definition of incapacitated person under 72-5-101 and because this section does not permit a limited guardianship when a protected person can meet the essential requirements for physical health and safety. Conservator's Exercise of Reasonable Judgment Regarding Lease of Estate Property — Remand for Audit of Leasing Arrangement: The District Court appointed Saylor's stepson, Tim, as temporary guardian. Saylor and her brother, Deane, both filed written objections to the appointment, and the District Court then approved an agreement that made Deane the limited guardian and conservator of Saylor's out-of-state property and Tim the conservator of Saylor's Montana property. Saylor and Deane subsequently moved to remove Tim as conservator based on his failure to disclose certain financial documents relating to his administration of the estate. Tim had entered a grazing lease on Saylor's property that Saylor contended provided no material benefit to the estate. The District Court found no good cause to remove Tim as conservator and dismissed the petition for removal. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that conservators are under the same duties as trustees and held that Tim exercised reasonable judgment regarding the lease arrangement and did not breach his duty as conservator so as to require his removal. Saylor's proposed substitute model lease was unrealistic. However, as a matter of equity, the Supreme Court remanded with instructions that the District Court order an audit of the lease arrangement to ensure that the figures attached to the lease conform to actualities and to allow the District Court to revise its prior determinations should the audit reveal facts that would require revision. Guardianship Proceeding — Failure of District Court to Make Record Held Violation of Statute — Ex Parte Hearing Held Violation of Due Process: A District Court twice appointed the same temporary guardians for Kathleen Klos pursuant to this section, once in writing and once by making an oral order with no documentation of the hearing or order except a minute entry made by the Clerk of Court. In the second proceeding, counsel representing the guardians had actual notice, in the form of two letters, that Klos was represented by an attorney for the Montana Advocacy Program but failed to serve that attorney with notice of the hearing. The Supreme Court held that: (1) in failing to make a record of the proceedings and to enter a written order with findings of fact, the District Court violated the plain language of this section; (2) although this section does authorize an ex parte hearing, that authorization applies only in emergency circumstances that were not present in this case and the failure to provide notice therefore also violates this section; and (3) the failure of the guardians' counsel to serve notice on Klos's attorney violated Klos's right to due process of law provided by Art. II, sec. 17, Mont. Const. In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997).

Order Granting Temporary Guardianship Held Final Order and Special Proceeding for Purposes of Appeal — Noncompliance With Former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (Now Superseded), Excused — Expiration of Temporary Guardianship Held Not to Render Issue Moot: After a District Court twice appointed the same temporary guardians for Kathleen Klos pursuant to this section, once in writing and once by making an oral order with no documentation except a minute entry entered by the Clerk of Court, Klos filed a motion to set aside the second order of guardianship. The guardians argued that an order appointing a temporary guardian is not subject to appeal and that Klos had not complied with former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because she did not file a transcript of a hearing appointing the guardians. The Supreme Court held that in as much as former Rule 1(b)(3), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), did not differentiate between a permanent order and a temporary order, a temporary order qualified as an appealable order. The Supreme Court also held that the temporary order is a "special proceeding", as defined by 27-1-102(2), for the purposes of former Rule 1(b)(1), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and therefore appealable for that reason as well. Concerning the argument on noncompliance with former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court noted that no transcript could be provided because none was ever made and held that Klos had substantially complied by notifying the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the lack of a transcript and by providing the District Court Clerk's minute entry. Citing Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. Olsen, 228 M 77, 743 P2d 564 (1987), the Supreme Court also noted that just because the order had expired by operation of law did not mean that the issue of appealability was moot because the guardians had twice been appointed by a temporary order that expired by operation of law and could be appointed in the same manner again. Thus, if the order was not appealable, it would be "capable of repetition, yet evade review". In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997), followed in Fischer v. Official Comments

The guardian is responsible for the care of the person of his ward. This section gives him the powers necessary to carry out this responsibility. Where there are no protective proceedings, the guardian also has limited authority over the property of the ward. Where the ward has substantial property, it may be desirable to have protective proceedings to handle his property problems. The same person, of course, may serve as guardian and conservator. Section [72-5-421] authorizes the court to make preliminary orders protecting the estate once a petition for appointment of a conservator is filed.

Amendment effective April 16, 2009.

Parent's Duty to Support Incapacitated Adult Child: A father appealed the District Court's determination that 40-6-214 required him to support his incapacitated adult twin sons, arguing that his obligation to provide child support terminated when the twins graduated from high school or when they turned 19 years old. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that 40-6-214 imposes a duty on the father to support the twins to the extent of his ability. The father's duty ran directly to the twins, not to the mother under the marital dissolution decree, and was properly enforced under the guardianship statutes. In re Guardianships of M.A.S. & C.M.S., 2011 MT 313, 363 Mont. 96, 266 P.3d 1267.

Conservator's Exercise of Reasonable Judgment Regarding Lease of Estate Property — Remand for Audit of Leasing Arrangement: The District Court appointed Saylor's stepson, Tim, as temporary guardian. Saylor and her brother, Deane, both filed written objections to the appointment, and the District Court then approved an agreement that made Deane the limited guardian and conservator of Saylor's out-of-state property and Tim the conservator of Saylor's Montana property. Saylor and Deane subsequently moved to remove Tim as conservator based on his failure to disclose certain financial documents relating to his administration of the estate. Tim had entered a grazing lease on Saylor's property that Saylor contended provided no material benefit to the estate. The District Court found no good cause to remove Tim as conservator and dismissed the petition for removal. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that conservators are under the same duties as trustees and held that Tim exercised reasonable judgment regarding the lease arrangement and did not breach his duty as conservator so as to require his removal. Saylor's proposed substitute model lease was unrealistic. However, as a matter of equity, the Supreme Court remanded with instructions that the District Court order an audit of the lease arrangement to ensure that the figures attached to the lease conform to actualities and to allow the District Court to revise its prior determinations should the audit reveal facts that would require revision. In re Guardianship & Conservatorship of Saylor, 2005 MT 236, 328 M 415, 121 P3d 532 (2005).

No Power of Guardian to Bring Dissolution Proceeding on Behalf of Incapacitated Person: When George's health began to fail, his daughter Judy was appointed temporary guardian. George subsequently filed for divorce from Agnes, but the District Court ultimately found that George lacked the capacity to bring a dissolution action. Judy requested and was granted permanent guardianship and conservatorship over George and filed an amended dissolution petition on George's behalf. The petition was granted, and Agnes appealed. The Supreme Court noted that under this section, a guardian of an incapacitated person has the same powers, rights, and duties respecting the ward that a parent has respecting an unemancipated child. The court also cited former Rule 17(c), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), as authority for a guardian to litigate on the behalf of a ward. However, the specific provisions of this section control over the general provisions of former Rule 17(c), so the only proceedings that the guardian of an incapacitated person may bring on behalf of the ward are those types of proceedings that a parent may bring on behalf of an unemancipated minor child, and this does not include the right to bring a dissolution proceeding. Therefore, because nothing in this section grants a guardian of an incapacitated person the authority to bring a dissolution action on behalf of a ward, the District Court committed reversible error in holding otherwise. In re Marriage of Denowh, 2003 MT 244, 317 M 314, 78 P3d 63 (2003).

Commitment of Ward — Due Process Rights — Notice, Hearing, and Counsel: District Court order committing ward to Montana State Hospital for a 72-hour evaluation upon a request made by the ward's guardian was reversed where ward was not given notice of the impending commitment, an attorney, or a hearing prior to the commitment. The ward's statutory and constitutional due process rights were violated. Two days after the first order the County Attorney, at guardian's request, filed a petition for a 90-day commitment. The guardian consented and waived ward's rights to notice, counsel, and hearing prior to commitment. The petition was granted, which also violated ward's statutory and constitutional rights to due process. He had the right to notice, hearing, and counsel, and only the person to be committed, or if he is unable, his attorney and guardian acting in concert, may waive those rights. The ward had no attorney at the time of the guardian's waiver. In re Simons, 215 M 463, 698 P2d 850, 42 St. Rep. 544 (1985).

Guardian's Actions in Best Interests of Ward — No Good Cause for Removal of Guardian: When the father died, the mother was placed in an extended care facility and an independent guardian was appointed to manage her affairs. The guardian determined that the mother's estate was running short of funds to defray the cost of extended care and sought return of the property in possession of the son. The son refused to return the property and sought to remove the guardian on grounds of mismanagement of the mother's estate. The District Court found that there was not reasonable cause for removal. Evidence showed that all the children and the mother's physicians agreed that the mother should be placed in extended care, that the guardian agreed that placement was in the mother's best interests, and that the guardian thoroughly investigated and accounted for the mother's real and personal property for the purpose of sustaining her ongoing care and treatment. Thus, removal of the guardian was not warranted, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. In re Guardianship & Conservatorship of Gilroy, 2004 MT 267, 323 M 149, 99 P3d 205 (2004).

Appointment Not Terminated — Duties of Guardian Appropriately Performed: Gali contended that his son and daughter did not meet their duties to act in his best interests as his coguardians and conservators. The District Court found that although some personal conflicts had arisen between Gali and his children, such as the placement of financial limits on Gali's spending, the children had generally managed Gali's business and financial affairs well and appropriately performed their guardianship duties. Absent a showing of clear error, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's refusal to remove the children as guardians and to appoint new ones. Part Case Notes

Appointment of GAL and Conservator — Inability of Parents to Choose Counsel for Child: The custodial parents of a minor child appealed the District Court's order denying their motion to disqualify counsel for their child in a personal injury matter, arguing that they had the right to choose counsel over the opposition of the guardian ad litem (GAL) and conservator, that 37-61-403 and 72-5-427 were unconstitutional, and that 37-61-403 conflicts with the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that once the parents consented to the appointment of a GAL and conservator, they divested themselves of the right to choose who would represent their child's personal injury claims. Assuming that the parents were clients under 37-61-403, their failure to comply with the statute by not securing consent of the attorney of record or applying to the District Court to change the attorney of record did not render the statute unconstitutional. Because the parents voluntarily consented to the appointment of the GAL and conservator and, thus, divested themselves of control over the child's legal action, their unhappiness with the decisions of the GAL and conservator did not render 72-5-427 unconstitutional. Rule 1.16, Montana Rules of Professional Conduct, and 37-61-403 work in conjunction: Rule 1.16 provides that an attorney shall withdraw from representation if discharged by a client and 37-61-403 provides the method for how discharge can be accomplished. Standing of Any Interested Third Party to Petition for Appointment of Conservator: An attorney for an adverse party in a related case discovered that 97-year-old widow Kloss's estate had been significantly depleted under the management of her 71-year-old nephew and petitioned for a conservatorship for Kloss. Kloss objected on grounds that the attorney could not be considered to be interested in Kloss's welfare under this section and thus lacked standing to petition for a conservatorship on her behalf. The District Court concluded that the attorney's representation of Kloss's adversary in a separate action did not preclude the attorney from acting in Kloss's best interests and dismissed Kloss's objection to the appointment. On appeal, Kloss contended that "any person who is interested" in this section be interpreted as "interested person" as used in the general definitions of the Uniform Probate Code, which would limit persons who may petition for a conservatorship to those who have a property right in or claim against the estate. The Supreme Court declined Kloss's interpretation, noting the Legislature's intent to broadly define those who have standing to petition on behalf of another under the statute. Kloss failed to demonstrate that the attorney had a conflict of interest or would benefit from the appointment. Rather, the attorney was requesting that Kloss and her estate be protected from further alleged exploitation. The District Court was affirmed. On appeal, appellants claimed that the District Court erred by not giving Mae any notice of the conservatorship and guardianship proceedings and that therefore the appointments made during the proceedings were void ab initio. In preparing the composite of the Ch. 208 and Ch. 362 amendments to this section, the Code Commissioner set out in a separate subsection (3) the amendatory language in Ch. 362 which requires the court to direct that a person be examined as set forth in subsection (2) in the case of an appointment under 72-5-410(1)(h). 72-5-409. Cause for appointment of conservator or issuance of protective order.

Official Comments

This is the basic section of this part providing for protective proceedings for minors and disabled persons. "Protective proceedings" is a generic term used to describe proceedings to establish conservatorships and obtain protective orders. "Disabled persons" is used in this section to include a broad category of persons who, for a variety of different reasons, may be unable to manage their own property. Since the problems of property management are generally the same for minors and disabled persons, it was thought undesirable to treat these problems in two separate parts. Where there are differences, these have been separately treated in specific sections.

The Comment to [72-5-316], supra, points up the different meanings of incapacity (warranting guardianship), and disability.

Second Cousin/Caretaker Not Interested Person Entitled to Notice of Removal as Transfer on Death Investment Account Beneficiary: The District Court has the power to remove or change a beneficiary designation under a conservatee's investment account because the conservator is not the alter ego of the conservatee and the decision to change a beneficiary right is a purely personal elective right of the conservatee. To do so, the court must follow statutory procedures that govern the exercise of that power, which includes notice to all interested persons and a hearing. Interested persons include heirs, devisees, children, spouses, creditors, beneficiaries, and any other person having a property right in or claim against a trust estate or the estate of a decedent, ward, or protected person. In this case, Anderson's second cousin/caretaker did not qualify as an interested person for purposes of a conservatorship hearing absent a present property right or interest in Anderson's investment account while Anderson was alive, nor did the second cousin/caretaker have a claim against Anderson's estate without a present interest to protect. Thus, the second cousin/caretaker was not entitled to notice and had no standing to be heard or to present objections to removal as a beneficiary if Anderson changed the investment account on her own, or standing to object to Anderson's conservator's request that the District Court order the beneficiary change while Anderson was alive. Required Showing of Future Waste of Property if Conservator Not Appointed: A showing that a person is physically incapacitated is not sufficient basis for the appointment of a conservator under this section since subsection (2) requires that there also be a showing that the person has property "that will be wasted or dissipated unless proper management is provided". Appointment of Mother Married to Manager of Ranch That Might Be Sued for Her Children's Injuries — No Conflict of Interest: The mother's four children were injured in a one-vehicle accident while an employee of the ranch that her husband managed was, at the mother's request, driving the children home to the ranch after school. The parties agreed that the employee was acting in the course and scope of his employment, that the ranch owned the pickup, that the ranch had about $800,000 of available insurance coverage, that the damages could exceed the limits of the insurance, and that a suit against the ranch was a possibility. The mother's ex-husband petitioned for his appointment as the children's guardian ad litem and conservator. The mother cross-petitioned that she be appointed. The District Court did not err in appointing the mother and deciding that she did not suffer from a conflict of interest that precluded her from serving as guardian ad litem and conservator of the children. The District Court found that she "would fulfill her fiduciary duties to her children tenaciously", that she would consider their emotional needs and future financial security, and that the evidence showed that she was an extremely involved and protective mother who gave much time, love, and attention to the children. Case Notes

Standing of Any Interested Third Party to Petition for Appointment of Conservator: An attorney for an adverse party in a related case discovered that 97-year-old widow Kloss's estate had been significantly depleted under the management of her 71-year-old nephew and petitioned for a conservatorship for Kloss. Kloss objected on grounds that the attorney could not be considered to be interested in Kloss's welfare under 72-5-401 and thus lacked standing to petition for a conservatorship on her behalf. The District Court concluded that the attorney's representation of Kloss's adversary in a separate action did not preclude the attorney from acting in Kloss's best interests and dismissed Kloss's objection to the appointment. On appeal, Kloss contended that "any person who is interested" in 72-5-401 be interpreted as "interested person" as used in the general definitions of the Uniform Probate Code, which would limit persons who may petition for a conservatorship to those who have a property right in or claim against the estate. The Supreme Court declined Kloss's interpretation, noting the Legislature's intent to broadly define those who have standing to petition on behalf of another under the statute. Kloss failed to demonstrate that the attorney had a conflict of interest or would benefit from the appointment. Rather, the attorney was requesting that Kloss and her estate be protected from further alleged exploitation. The District Court was affirmed. In re Conservatorship of Kloss, 2005 MT 39, 326 M 117, 109 P3d 205 (2005).

Grandparents Properly Included as Parties to Future Matters Involving Grandchildren's Conservatorships: The grandparents were court-appointed guardians for their three grandchildren. Following a train derailment and chlorine spill, the grandparents negotiated settlements with two railroads for personal injuries and damages to the children and then sought appointment of a guardian ad litem to manage and protect the settlements. The children's mother did not object to the settlement amounts but opposed a proposed plan for administering the trust and asked to be substituted for the grandparents as petitioner. Just prior to a hearing approving the settlements, the grandparents' guardianships were dissolved and the children began living with their mother. The settlements were approved, and the District Court appointed an attorney as conservator of the estates. The court also included the grandparents as parties to future matters involving the conservatorship of the children, including requiring the grandparents' consent to stipulations for disbursement of settlement money. The mother appealed on grounds that the grandparents' interest terminated with the dissolution of their guardianships. The Supreme Court disagreed. By definition, the grandparents remained interested persons in terms of the conservatorships, and they were properly included as parties to future matters involving the conservatorship of the children, including disbursement of settlement money. In re Estates of Esterbrook, Simmons, & Simmons, 2003 MT 317, 318 M 275, 80 P3d 419 (2003).

Inventory Requirement Mandatory — Verifiable Accountings Required — Audit: The 90-day inventory requirement in 72-5-424 is not discretionary for Montana courts and conservators as a matter of law, even when liabilities exceed assets. The requirement is mandatory because: (1) the overall purpose of a conservatorship is to preserve the property of the protected person, and a conservator will likely be appointed only when there are assets that should be managed; (2) the plain language of 72-5-424 requires that every conservator prepare and file with the appointing court a complete inventory of the estate; and (3) the purpose of the statutory inventory requirement is to furnish a means by which the conservator's management may be checked and accounts verified. In constructing the inventory, the conservator has discretion to decide what to include and how to value the items in the estate, but that discretion must be verifiable. Pursuant to the court's duty to ensure that a conservator is acting in the best interests of the protected person, verification must consist of a means by which a trial court can independently determine whether accountings are generally complete and accurate, and credibility is not sufficient as documentation of accountings. In the present case, the record did not contain a complete, accurate, and verifiable accounting to show that the conservator properly accounted for the estate, so the Supreme Court remanded for an audit pursuant to 72-5-438. Once the conservator meets the burden of showing proper management and accounting, such as the example in 72-34-128 (now repealed), the burden shifts to the protected person to show that the inventory is incorrect. Guardian's Actions in Best Interests of Ward — No Good Cause for Removal of Guardian: When the father died, the mother was placed in an extended care facility and an independent guardian was appointed to manage her affairs. The guardian determined that the mother's estate was running short of funds to defray the cost of extended care and sought return of the property in possession of the son. The son refused to return the property and sought to remove the guardian on grounds of mismanagement of the mother's estate. The District Court found that there was not reasonable cause for removal. Evidence showed that all the children and the mother's physicians agreed that the mother should be placed in extended care, that the guardian agreed that placement was in the mother's best interests, and that the guardian thoroughly investigated and accounted for the mother's real and personal property for the purpose of sustaining her ongoing care and treatment. Thus, removal of the guardian was not warranted, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. In re Guardianship & Conservatorship of Gilroy, 2004 MT 267, 323 M 149, 99 P3d 205 (2004).

Official Comments

The court, which is supervising a conservatorship, is given all the powers which the individual would have if he were of full capacity. Second Cousin/Caretaker Not Interested Person Entitled to Notice of Removal as Transfer on Death Investment Account Beneficiary: The District Court has the power to remove or change a beneficiary designation under a conservatee's investment account because the conservator is not the alter ego of the conservatee and the decision to change a beneficiary right is a purely personal elective right of the conservatee. To do so, the court must follow statutory procedures that govern the exercise of that power, which includes notice to all interested persons and a hearing. Interested persons include heirs, devisees, children, spouses, creditors, beneficiaries, and any other person having a property right in or claim against a trust estate or the estate of a decedent, ward, or protected person. In this case, Anderson's second cousin/caretaker did not qualify as an interested person for purposes of a conservatorship hearing absent a present property right or interest in Anderson's investment account while Anderson was alive, nor did the second cousin/caretaker have a claim against Anderson's estate without a present interest to protect. Thus, the second cousin/caretaker was not entitled to notice and had no standing to be heard or to present objections to removal as a beneficiary if Anderson changed the investment account on her own, or standing to object to Anderson's conservator's request that the District Court order the beneficiary change while Anderson was alive. No Evidence of Incompetence of Protected Person to Sign Documents: The conservator of an estate sought to cancel several transactions and recover funds transferred from a joint bank account on grounds that his mother was incompetent to effect the transactions. The District Court disagreed and held that at the time that the transactions were made, the mother was competent. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the son failed to prove his mother's incompetence. Although the mother was later diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease, the fact that she suffered from an early form of the disease did not render her incompetent per se, nor did the fact that a conservator had been appointed mean that she lacked the capacity to make certain decisions. The District Court heard credible evidence and expert testimony that, although conflicting, indicated that the mother was competent to execute the documents that effected the transactions, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the District Court's determination regarding the strength and weight of the testimony. Failure to Establish Special Needs Trust in Children's Catastrophic Personal Injury Case — Remand: Three children were injured in a train derailment and chlorine spill, and their grandparents negotiated settlements with the railroads for the children's personal injuries and damages. The District Court rejected a special needs trust and instead appointed an attorney as conservator of the estates, with the authority to choose the investment firm to hold the money, and provided that the money could be removed only by court order. The children's mother contended that the District Court erred by ordering the attorney to put the money in interest-bearing accounts without specifying the terms of special needs trusts. Although the mother provided no evidence supporting the need for special needs trusts and cited no authority under which it would be error not to establish special needs trusts in this case, nevertheless, the Supreme Court was concerned that the children's best interests may not have been properly protected by the District Court's rejection of special needs trusts and remanded for further consideration. In re Estates of Esterbrook, Simmons, & Simmons, 2003 MT 317, 318 M 275, 80 P3d 419 (2003).

No Presumption of Competency in Transactions Between Conservator and Protected Persons: The lower court ruled that the protected persons, the elderly parents of the conservator, were competent. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, stating that although the establishment of conservatorship is not an adjudication of incompetency and the protected person is presumed to have the capacity to contract with third persons, the presumption shifts with respect to transactions with the conservator. In such cases, the conservator has the burden of proving that the protected persons were at all times capable of understanding the nature of any transaction in which the conservator obtained a benefit. Personal Guardianship and Property Conservatorship No Bar to Trust Revocation — Construction Against Party Supplying Trust Form: A trustee appealed from a declaratory ruling of the District Court holding that a personal guardianship and a property conservatorship did not prevent the trustor from revoking the trust. The trustee, also a beneficiary, argued in effect that the trustor had been legally incapacitated from revoking the trust because she was under a personal guardianship and her property was under a conservatorship and because the trust provided that it was irrevocable upon the "incompetency" of the trustor. However, the conservatorship and guardianship did not begin before revocation of the trust. Further, a conservatorship would not affect the power to revoke under 72-5-421. The guardianship had been appointed because the trustor had become physically incapable of caring for herself, not because of mental incapacitation. Construing the term "incompetency" strictly against the trustee because it had supplied the trust form and was a beneficiary, the Supreme Court upheld the trial court's holding that the trust revocation was valid. Estate of Miller, 192 M 468, 628 P2d 1100, 38 St. Rep. 846 (1981), followed in In re Estate of West, 269 M 83, 887 P2d 222, 51 St. Rep. 1409 (1994).

72-5-422. Power of court to authorize particular protective arrangements or transactions without appointing conservator.

Official Comments

It is important that the provision be made for the approval of single transactions or the establishment of protective arrangements as alternatives to full conservatorship. Under present law, a guardianship often must be established simply to make possible a valid transfer of land or securities. This section eliminates the necessity of the establishment of long-term arrangements in this situation.

Conservator With Special Skills Held to Higher Standard of Care: If a conservator is appointed in reliance on special skills, an alleged breach of fiduciary duty involving those special skill requires expert testimony to establish the standard of care for exercise of those skills, whether that standard was breached, and whether any breach caused injury and damages. Conservator's Exercise of Reasonable Judgment Regarding Lease of Estate Property — Remand for Audit of Leasing Arrangement: The District Court appointed Saylor's stepson, Tim, as temporary guardian. Saylor and her brother, Deane, both filed written objections to the appointment, and the District Court then approved an agreement that made Deane the limited guardian and conservator of Saylor's out-of-state property and Tim the conservator of Saylor's Montana property. Saylor and Deane subsequently moved to remove Tim as conservator based on his failure to disclose certain financial documents relating to his administration of the estate. Tim had entered a grazing lease on Saylor's property that Saylor contended provided no material benefit to the estate. The District Court found no good cause to remove Tim as conservator and dismissed the petition for removal. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that conservators are under the same duties as trustees and held that Tim exercised reasonable judgment regarding the lease arrangement and did not breach his duty as conservator so as to require his removal. Saylor's proposed substitute model lease was unrealistic. However, as a matter of equity, the Supreme Court remanded with instructions that the District Court order an audit of the lease arrangement to ensure that the figures attached to the lease conform to actualities and to allow the District Court to revise its prior determinations should the audit reveal facts that would require revision. Misrepresentation of Value of Estate Constituting Breach of Fiduciary Duty — Incomplete Inventory: A conservator knew, but failed to mention, that an estate included annuities and jointly held property that was not included in the final estate inventory. The District Court concluded that the conservator breached the fiduciary duty by acting in the conservator's best interest by failing to disclose all financial information regarding the estate. The Supreme Court affirmed. The conservator was required to make a full disclosure in order to meet the statutory duties of conservatorship, and failure to do so constituted a breach of fiduciary duty to preserve the protected person's property and provide a means by which the conservator's work could be independently verified by a court. Further, the District Court's finding that the conservatorship accountings and inventories were incomplete was also affirmed in that the final inventory made no reference to annuities and jointly held property. The District Court's conclusion that the conservator misrepresented the value of the estate was supported by substantial evidence and was affirmed. Inventory Requirement Mandatory — Verifiable Accountings Required — Audit: The 90-day inventory requirement in this section is not discretionary for Montana courts and conservators as a matter of law, even when liabilities exceed assets. The requirement is mandatory because: (1) the overall purpose of a conservatorship is to preserve the property of the protected person, and a conservator will likely be appointed only when there are assets that should be managed; (2) the plain language of this section requires that every conservator prepare and file with the appointing court a complete inventory of the estate; and (3) the purpose of the statutory inventory requirement is to furnish a means by which the conservator's management may be checked and accounts verified. In constructing the inventory, the conservator has discretion to decide what to include and how to value the items in the estate, but that discretion must be verifiable. Pursuant to the court's duty to ensure that a conservator is acting in the best interests of the protected person, verification must consist of a means by which a trial court can independently determine whether accountings are generally complete and accurate, and credibility is not sufficient as documentation of accountings. In the present case, the record did not contain a complete, accurate, and verifiable accounting to show that the conservator properly accounted for the estate, so the Supreme Court remanded for an audit pursuant to 72-5-438. Once the conservator meets the burden of showing proper management and accounting, such as the example in 72-34-128 (now repealed), the burden shifts to the protected person to show that the inventory is incorrect. 72-5-425. Title by appointment as conservator — appointment not transfer for certain purposes.

Official Comments

This section permits independent administration of the property of protected persons once the appointment of a conservator had [has] been obtained. Any interested person may require the conservator to account in accordance with [72-5-438]. As a trustee, a conservator holds title to the property of the protected person. The appointment of a conservator is a serious matter and the court must select him with great care. Once appointed, he is free to carry on his fiduciary responsibilities. If he should default in these in any way, he may be made to account to the court.

Unlike a situation involving appointment of a guardian, the appointment of a conservator has no bearing on the capacity of the disabled person to contract or engage in other transactions.

Appointment of GAL and Conservator — Inability of Parents to Choose Counsel for Child: The custodial parents of a minor child appealed the District Court's order denying their motion to disqualify counsel for their child in a personal injury matter, arguing that they had the right to choose counsel over the opposition of the guardian ad litem (GAL) and conservator, that 37-61-403 and 72-5-427 were unconstitutional, and that 37-61-403 conflicts with the Montana Rules of Professional Conduct. The Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that once the parents consented to the appointment of a GAL and conservator, they divested themselves of the right to choose who would represent their child's personal injury claims. Assuming that the parents were clients under 37-61-403, their failure to comply with the statute by not securing consent of the attorney of record or applying to the District Court to change the attorney of record did not render the statute unconstitutional. Because the parents voluntarily consented to the appointment of the GAL and conservator and, thus, divested themselves of control over the child's legal action, their unhappiness with the decisions of the GAL and conservator did not render 72-5-427 unconstitutional. Rule 1.16, Montana Rules of Professional Conduct, and 37-61-403 work in conjunction: Rule 1.16 provides that an attorney shall withdraw from representation if discharged by a client and 37-61-403 provides the method for how discharge can be accomplished. Unreasonable and Vexatious Multiplication of Court Proceedings — Sanctions Proper: First Interstate Bank was Bayers' court-appointed conservator. McGimpsey claimed to be Bayers' private attorney and began expressing an interest in matters involving Bayers' estate, at which point the conservator became concerned about the extent of McGimpsey's involvement in Bayers'

affairs and requested in writing copies of any legal documents that McGimpsey had that may have been executed by Bayers. McGimpsey ignored the request. The conservator moved in District Court to compel production of the requested information and included a request for attorney fees necessitated by the motion. McGimpsey responded with a letter threatening the conservator's counsel with sanctions and listing complaints and criticisms of the conservator's handling of Bayers' estate. McGimpsey then moved to strike scandalous, immaterial, and irrelevant content in the conservator's motion and brief, but the motion was denied. The court instead granted the conservator's motion to compel and for attorney fees. McGimpsey filed another motion to alter or amend the order granting attorney fees. That motion was also denied, and the court ordered a hearing on the amount of sanctions to be awarded unless the parties agreed to the amount of attorney fees being assessed. The conservator agreed to the court's suggestion, but McGimpsey did not, so a hearing on the amount of fees was scheduled. McGimpsey filed another motion to vacate the hearing and to establish a discovery schedule regarding attorney fees. That motion was denied at the beginning of the hearing, and the conservator's counsel testified as to reasonable attorney fees incurred because of McGimpsey's conduct. The court issued an order requiring McGimpsey to pay Bayers' estate $1,500 in attorney fees pursuant to 37-61-421, but McGimpsey filed another motion to alter or amend the order. That motion was also denied, and McGimpsey appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that in a civil action such as this, all discovery and discovery disputes, including sanctions, should be governed by the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure and not by 37-61-421. Former Rules 34 and 37, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), anticipate the existence of a dispute between opposing parties, but the underlying conservatorship proceeding in this case was not an adversarial proceeding. Formal discovery proceedings were not required for the conservator to obtain documents considered relevant to Bayers' estate. McGimpsey could have provided a straightforward answer as to whether he had any of the requested documents, but instead he chose to force a needless multiplication of proceedings and the pointless involvement of the District Court in the dispute. The court's conclusion that McGimpsey unreasonably and vexatiously prolonged the litigation was not in error. Because McGimpsey continued to force the matter to the Supreme Court, he was also held responsible under 37-61-421 for the conservator's expenses and attorney fees incurred in the appeal. Case Notes

Attorney Fees Incurred in Seeking Guardianship Payable From Estate: A law firm requested $30,000 in fees from the conservator of an incapacitated person's estate for services requested by the attorney-in-fact in appointing a guardian for the incapacitated person. The District Court ordered payment of the fees out of the conservator estate. An appointing court's discretionary power encompasses the approval of attorney fees incurred by a guardian within the scope of the guardianship. Further, under this section, the conservator of the estate of an incapacitated person is authorized to distribute funds necessary for the support, education, care, or benefit of the protected person. The cost of initiating a good faith petition for the appointment of a guardian, when the appointment is determined to be in the best interests of the ward, constitutes a necessary expenditure on behalf of the ward and is therefore compensable out of the guardianship estate. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in ordering payment of the attorney fees, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the order on appeal. Case Notes

No Personal Representative Appointed — Protection by Conservator of Estate Upon Death of Protected Person: Appellants argued that upon the death of Mae, the protected person in this case, her conservatorship should have been terminated by the District Court and that the conservator had no standing to pursue a cause of action on behalf of Mae's estate. The Supreme Court held that under 72-5-429, a conservator must continue to protect the ward's estate until a personal representative is duly appointed by the District Court. Here, no personal representative was appointed; therefore, the conservator had to act to protect Mae's estate, which included filing a lawsuit against the appellants. In re Tennant, 220 M 78, 714 P2d 122, 43 St. Rep. 189 (1986).

72-5-430. Enlargement or limitation of powers of conservator by court.

Official Comments

This section makes it possible to appoint a fiduciary whose powers are limited to part of the estate or who may conduct important transactions, such as sales and mortgages of land, only with special court authorization. In the latter case, a conservator would be in much the position of a guardian of property under the law currently in force in most states, except that he would have title to the property. The purpose of giving conservators title as trustees is to ensure that the provisions for protection of third parties have full effect. The Veterans Administration [now Department of Veterans Affairs] may insist that, when it is paying benefits to a minor or disabled, the letters of conservatorship limit powers to those of a guardian under the Uniform Veteran's Guardianship Act [section 91-4801, et seq., R.C.M. 1947, repealed effective July 1, 1975] and require the conservator to file annual accounts.

The court may not only limit the powers of the conservator but may expand his powers so as to make it possible for him to act as the court itself might act.

Failure to Establish Special Needs Trust in Children's Catastrophic Personal Injury Case — Remand: Three children were injured in a train derailment and chlorine spill, and their grandparents negotiated settlements with the railroads for the children's personal injuries and damages. The District Court rejected a special needs trust and instead appointed an attorney as conservator of the estates, with the authority to choose the investment firm to hold the money, and provided that the money could be removed only by court order. The children's mother contended that the District Court erred by ordering the attorney to put the money in interest-bearing accounts without specifying the terms of special needs trusts. Although the mother provided no evidence supporting the need for special needs trusts and cited no authority under which it would be error not to establish special needs trusts in this case, nevertheless, the Supreme Court was concerned that the children's best interests may not have been properly protected by the District Court's rejection of special needs trusts and remanded for further consideration. Case Notes

Inventory Requirement Mandatory — Verifiable Accountings Required — Audit: The 90-day inventory requirement in 72-5-424 is not discretionary for Montana courts and conservators as a matter of law, even when liabilities exceed assets. The requirement is mandatory because: (1) the overall purpose of a conservatorship is to preserve the property of the protected person, and a conservator will likely be appointed only when there are assets that should be managed; (2) the plain language of 72-5-424 requires that every conservator prepare and file with the appointing court a complete inventory of the estate; and (3) the purpose of the statutory inventory requirement is to furnish a means by which the conservator's management may be checked and accounts verified. In constructing the inventory, the conservator has discretion to decide what to include and how to value the items in the estate, but that discretion must be verifiable. Pursuant to the court's duty to ensure that a conservator is acting in the best interests of the protected person, verification must consist of a means by which a trial court can independently determine whether accountings are generally complete and accurate, and credibility is not sufficient as documentation of accountings. In the present case, the record did not contain a complete, accurate, and verifiable accounting to show that the conservator properly accounted for the estate, so the Supreme Court remanded for an audit pursuant to this section. Once the conservator meets the burden of showing proper management and accounting, such as the example in 72-34-128 (now repealed), the burden shifts to the protected person to show that the inventory is incorrect. Redies v. Cosner & Uerling, 2002 MT 86, 309 M 315, 48 P3d 697 (2002). See also In re Allard Guardianship, 49 M 219, 141 P 661 (1914), and In re Estate of Clark, 237 M 179, 772 P2d 299 (1989).

Approval of Final Accounting Bar to Subsequent Litigation by Res Judicata: In 1976, Caleb and Viola Heath executed wills creating a trust and appointed Norwest as trustee. In 1978, they both executed second wills, appointed First Trust as trustee, and revoked the first wills, trusts, and appointments. Norwest and First Trust litigated the efficacy of the respective wills and appointments until several years after Caleb's death, at which time they entered into a settlement agreement to resolve all pending litigation between Norwest, First Trust, and Caleb's and Viola's heirs. The District Court dismissed all pending litigation with prejudice, approved Norwest's final accounting, and distributed Caleb's assets pursuant to the 1976 will and trust. Six months later, Tisher and Schleve, relatives of Caleb and Viola, sought to probate Viola's 1978 will and filed an action against Norwest. The District Court concluded that the action was barred by res judicata and found for Norwest on a motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the four prerequisites for application of res judicata were satisfied because Tisher and Schleve are privies of Caleb and Viola and because the subject matter and issues of the two legal actions were the same in that both dealt with the efficacy of the 1978 wills and trusts. The Supreme Court also concluded that even though the District Court had characterized Tisher and Schleve's claim as a breach of a trustee's fiduciary duty rather than a breach of a conservator's fiduciary duty, the conclusion did not constitute reversible error because the result reached by the District Court, that the claim was barred by res judicata in light of a failure to object to the previous final accounting, was correct. Tisher v. Norwest Capital Management & Trust Co., Inc., 260 M 143, 859 P2d 984, 50 St. Rep. 960 (1993).

(e) an act done before [the effective date of this act] is not affected by [this act].

(2) If a right is acquired, extinguished, or barred upon the expiration of a prescribed period that has commenced to run under any other statute before [the effective date of this act], that statute continues to apply to the right even if it has been repealed or superseded." Effective October 1, 2013.

Part 5
Powers of Attorney

72-5-501. When health care power of attorney not affected by disability.

Official Comments

[The first sentence of subsection (1)], derived from the first sentence of UPC 5-501 (1969) (1975), is a definitional section that supports use of the term "durable power of attorney" in the sections that follow. The second quoted expression was designed to emphasize that a durable power with postponed effectiveness is permitted. Some UPC critics have been bothered by the reference here to a later condition of "disability or incapacity," a circumstance that may be difficult to ascertain if it can be established without a court order. The answer, of course, is that draftsmen of durable powers are not limited in their choice of words to describe the later time when the principal wishes the authority of the agent in fact to become operative. For example, a durable power might be framed to confer authority commencing when two or more named persons, possibly including the principal's lawyer, physician or spouse, concur that the principal has become incapable of managing his affairs in a sensible and efficient manner and deliver a signed statement to that effect to the attorney in fact.

In this and following sections, it is assumed that the principal is competent when the power of attorney is signed. If this is not the case, nothing in this Act is intended to alter the result that would be reached under general principles of law. [The second sentence of subsection (1)] is derived from the second sentence of UPC 5-501 (1969) (1975) modified by deleting reference to the effect on a durable power of the principal's death, a matter that is now covered in Section [4] [5-504] which provides a single standard for durable and non-durable powers. [Note: the Montana version does not have this deletion, and retains both standards.]

The words "any period of disability or incapacity of the principal" are intended to include periods during which the principal is legally incompetent, but are not intended to be limited to such periods. In the Uniform Probate Code, the word "disability" is defined, and the term "incapacitated person" is defined. In the context of this section, however, the important point is that the terms embrace "legal incompetence," as well as less grievous disadvantages.

[The first two sentences of subsection (2)] closely [resemble]the last two sentences of UPC §5-501 (1969) (1975); most of the changes are stylistic. One change going beyond style states that an agent in fact is accountable both to the principal and a conservator or guardian if a court has appointed a fiduciary; the earlier version described accountability only to the fiduciary.

The purpose of [the last two sentences of subsection (2)] is to emphasize that agencies under durable powers and guardians or conservators may co-exist. It is not the purpose of the act to encourage resort to court for a fiduciary appointment that should be largely unnecessary when an alternative regime has been provided via a durable power. Indeed, the best reason for permitting a principal to use a durable power to express his preference regarding any future court appointee charged with the care and protection of his person or estate may be to secure the authority of the attorney in fact against upset by arranging matters so that the likely appointee in any future protective proceedings will be the attorney in fact or another equally congenial to the principal and his plans. However, the evolution of a free-standing durable power act increases the prospects that UPC-type statutes covering protective proceedings will not apply when a protective proceeding is commenced for one who has created a durable power. This means that a court receiving a petition for a guardian or conservator may not be governed by standards like those in UPC §5-304 (personal guardians) and §5-401(2) and related sections which are designed to deter unnecessary protective proceedings. Finally, attorneys and others may find various good uses for a regime in which a conservator directs exercise of an agent's authority under a durable power. For example, the combination would confer jurisdiction on the court handling the protective proceeding to approve or ratify a desirable transaction that might not be possible without the protection of a court order. The alternative of a declaratory judgment proceeding might be difficult or impossible in some states. . . .

Discussion of [subsection (2)] in NCCUSL's Committee of the Whole involved the question of whether an agent's accountability, as described here, might be effectively countermanded by appropriate language in a power of attorney. The response was negative. The reference is to basic accountability like that owed by every fiduciary to his beneficiary and that distinguishes a fiduciary relationship from those involving gifts or general powers of appointment. The section is not intended to describe a particular form of accounting. Hence, the context differs from those involving statutory duties to account in court, or with specified frequency, where draftsmen of controlling instruments may be able to excuse statutory details relating to accountings without affecting the general principle of accountability.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Chapter 109 in (1) in three places and in (2) in three places before "power of attorney" inserted "health care"; in (1) deleted last two sentences that read: "All acts done by the attorney-in-fact pursuant to a durable power of attorney during any period of disability or incapacity of the principal have the same effect and inure to the benefit of and bind the principal and the principal's successors in interest as if the principal were alive, competent, and not disabled. Unless the instrument states a time of termination, the power is exercisable notwithstanding the lapse of time since the execution of the instrument"; in (2) in three places substituted "guardian" for "conservator" and near middle of third sentence after "by a durable health care power of attorney, the" deleted "conservator of the principal's estate or"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2011.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1989 Amendment: In (1), in second sentence after "attorney-in-fact", deleted "or agent", substituted "pursuant to a durable power of attorney" for "pursuant to the power", after "disability or incapacity" substituted "of the principal" for "or uncertainty as to whether the principal is dead or alive", and inserted last sentence relating to exercise of power notwithstanding lapse of time from execution of the instrument; and made minor changes in phraseology.

1989 Editorial Comment: The changes result from an amendment proposed by the Joint Editorial Board of the national Uniform Probate Code in 1987. See corresponding national Uniform Probate Code section 5-502.

1985 Amendment: Substituted entire section (see 1985 Session Law for text) for former text that read: "(1) Whenever a principal designates another his attorney-in-fact or agent by a power of attorney in writing and the writing contains the words, "This power of attorney shall not be affected by disability of the principal" or "This power of attorney shall become effective upon the disability of the principal" or similar words showing the intent of the principal that the authority conferred shall be exercisable notwithstanding his disability, the authority of the attorney-in-fact or agent is exercisable by him as provided in the power on behalf of the principal notwithstanding later disability or incapacity of the principal at law or later uncertainty as to whether the principal is dead or alive. All acts done by the attorney-in-fact or agent pursuant to the power during any period of disability or incompetence or uncertainty as to whether the principal is dead or alive have the same effect and inure to the benefit of and bind the principal or his heirs, devisees, and personal representative as if the principal were alive, competent, and not disabled.

(2) If a conservator thereafter is appointed for the principal, the attorney-in-fact or agent, during the continuance of the appointment, shall account to the conservator rather than the principal. The conservator has the same power the principal would have had if he were not disabled or incompetent to revoke, suspend, or terminate all or any part of the power of attorney or agency."

72-5-502. Health care power of attorney not revoked until notice.

Official Comments

UPC §§5-501 and 5-502 (1969) (1975) are flawed by different standards for durable and non-durable powers vis a vis the protection of an attorney in fact who purports to exercise a power after the principal has died. Section 5-501 (1969) (1975), applicable only to durable powers, expresses a most unsatisfactory standard; i.e., the attorney in fact is protected if the exercise occurs "during any period of uncertainty as to whether the principal is dead or alive. . . ." Section 5-502 (1969) (1975), applicable only to non-durable powers, protects the agent who "without actual knowledge of the death . . . of the principal, acts in good faith under the power of attorney . . . ." Section [4] [5-504] (a) expresses as a single test the standard now contained in §5-502 (1969) (1975). [Note: the Montana version retains both standards.]

Subsection [2], applicable only to non-durable powers that are controlled by the traditional view that a principal's loss of capacity ends the authority of his agents, embodies the substance of UPC §5-502 (1969) (1975).

The discussion in the Committee of the Whole established that the language "or other person" in subsections [(1) and (2)] is intended to refer to persons who transact business with the attorney in fact under the authority conferred by the power. Consequently, persons in this category who act in good faith and without the actual knowledge described in the subsections are protected by the statute.

Also, there was discussion of possible conflict between the actual knowledge test here prescribed for protection of persons relying on the continuance of a power and constructive notice concepts under statutes governing the recording of instruments affecting real estate. The view was expressed in the Committee of the Whole that the recording statutes would continue to control since those statutes are specifically designed to encourage public recording of documents affecting land titles. It was also suggested that "good faith," as required by this section, might be lacking in the unlikely case of one who, without actual knowledge of the principal's death or incompetency, accepted a conveyance executed by an attorney in fact without checking the public record where he would have found an instrument disclosing the principal's death or incompetency. If so, there would be no conflict between this act and recording statutes.

It is to be noted, also, that [subsections (1) and (2) deal] only with the effect of a principal's death or incompetency as a revocation of a power of attorney; [they do] not relate to an express revocation of a power or to the expiration of a power according to its terms. Further, since a durable power is not revoked by incapacity, the section's coverage of revocation of powers of attorney by the principal's incapacity is restricted to powers that are not durable. The only effect of the Act on rules governing express revocations of powers of attorney is as described in Section [5] [5-505].

[Subsections (3) and (4)], embodying the substance and form of UPC 5-502(b) (1969) (1975), [have] been extended to apply to durable powers. It is unclear whether UPC 5-502(b) (1969) (1975) applies to durable powers. Affidavits protecting persons dealing with attorneys in fact extend the utility of powers of attorney and plainly should be available for use by all attorneys in fact.

The matters stated in an affidavit that are strengthened by [subsections (3) and (4)] are limited to the revocation of a power by the principal's voluntary act, his death, or, in the case of non-durable power, by his incompetence. With one possible exception, other matters, including circumstances made relevant by the terms of the instrument to the commencement of the agency or to its termination by other circumstances, are not covered. The exception concerns the case of a power created to begin on "incapacity." The affidavit of the agent in fact that all conditions necessary to the valid exercise of the power might be aided by the statute in relation to the fact of incapacity. An affidavit as to the existence or non-existence of facts and circumstances not covered by [subsections (3) and (4)] nonetheless may be useful in establishing good faith reliance.

Compiler's Comments

2011 Amendment: Chapter 109 deleted former (1) that read: "(1) The death of a principal who has executed a written power of attorney, durable or otherwise, does not revoke or terminate the agency as to the attorney-in-fact, agent, or other person who, without actual knowledge of the death of the principal, acts in good faith under the power of attorney or agency. Any action taken, unless otherwise invalid or unenforceable, binds the successors in interest of the principal"; in (1) in two places, (2), and (3) before "power" inserted "health care"; in (1) deleted last sentence that read: "Any action taken, unless otherwise invalid or unenforceable, binds the principal and the principal's successors in interest"; in (2) near end of first sentence after "by revocation or of the principal's" deleted "death" and after "incapacity is" deleted "conclusive"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2011.

2009 Amendment: Chapter 56 made section gender neutral; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2009.

1985 Amendment: Substituted entire section (see 1985 Session Law for text) for former text that read: "(1) The death, disability, or incompetence of any principal who has executed a power of attorney in writing other than a power as described by 72-5-501 does not revoke or terminate the agency as to the attorney-in-fact, agent, or other person who, without actual knowledge of the death, disability, or incompetence of the principal, acts in good faith under the power of attorney or agency. Any action so taken, unless otherwise invalid or unenforceable, binds the principal and his heirs, devisees, and personal representatives.

(2) An affidavit executed by the attorney-in-fact or agent stating that he did not have, at the time of doing an act pursuant to the power of attorney, actual knowledge of the revocation or termination of the power of attorney by death, disability, or incompetence is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive proof of the nonrevocation or nontermination of the power at that time. If the exercise of the power requires execution and delivery of any instrument which is recordable, the affidavit when authenticated for record is likewise recordable.

(3) This section shall not be construed to alter or affect any provision for revocation or termination contained in the power of attorney."

Part 6
Uniform Adult Guardianship and Protective Proceedings Jurisdiction Act

Part Official Comments

PREFATORY NOTE

The Uniform Guardianship and Protective Proceedings Act (UGPPA), which was last revised in 1997, is a comprehensive act addressing all aspects of guardianships and protective proceedings for both minors and adults. The Uniform Adult Guardianship and Protective Proceedings Jurisdiction Act (UAGPPJA) has a much narrower scope, dealing only with jurisdiction and related issues in adult proceedings. Drafting of the UAGPPJA began in 2005. The Act had its first reading at the Uniform Law Commission 2006 Annual Meeting, and was approved at the 2007 Annual Meeting.

States may enact the UAGPPJA either separately or as part of the broader UGPPA or the even broader Uniform Probate Code (UPC), of which the UGPPA forms a part. Conforming amendments to the UGPPA and UPC are expected to be approved in 2009 that will facilitate enactment of the UAGPPJA by states that have enacted the UGPPA or UPC.

The Problem of Multiple Jurisdiction

Because the United States has 50 plus guardianship systems, problems of determining jurisdiction are frequent. Questions of which state has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian or conservator can arise between an American state and another country. But more frequently, problems arise because the individual has contacts with more than one American state.

In nearly all American states, a guardian may be appointed by a court in a state in which the individual is domiciled or is physically present. In nearly all American states, a conservator may be appointed by a court in a state in which the individual is domiciled or has property. Contested cases in which courts in more than one state have jurisdiction are becoming more frequent. Sometimes these cases arise because the adult is physically located in a state other than the adult's domicile. Sometimes the case arises because of uncertainty as to the adult's domicile, particularly if the adult owns a second home in another state. There is a need for an effective mechanism for resolving multi-jurisdictional disputes. Article 2 of the UAGPPJA [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] is intended to provide such a mechanism.

The Problem of Transfer

Oftentimes, problems arise even absent a dispute. Even if everyone is agreed that an already existing guardianship or conservatorship should be moved to another state, few states have streamlined procedures for transferring a proceeding to another state or for accepting such a transfer. In most states, all of the procedures for an original appointment must be repeated, a time consuming and expensive prospect. Article 3 of the UAGPPJA [72-5-624 and 72-5-625] is designed to provide an expedited process for making such transfers, thereby avoiding the need to relitigate incapacity and whether the guardian or conservator appointed in the first state was an appropriate selection.

The Problem of Out-of-State Recognition

The Full Faith and Credit Clause of the United States Constitution requires that court orders in one state be honored in another state. But there are exceptions to the full faith and credit doctrine, of which guardianship and protective proceedings is one. Sometimes, guardianship or protective proceedings must be initiated in a second state because of the refusal of financial institutions, care facilities, and the courts to recognize a guardianship or protective order issued in another state. Article 4 of the UAGPPJA [72-5-629 through 72-5-631] creates a registration procedure. Following registration of the guardianship or protective order in the second state, the guardian may exercise in the second state all powers authorized in the original state's order of appointment except for powers that cannot be legally exercised in the second state.

The Proposed Uniform Law and the Child Custody Analogy

Similar problems of jurisdiction existed for many years in the United States in connection with child custody determinations. If one parent lived in one state and the other parent lived in another state, frequently courts in more that [than] one state had jurisdiction to issue custody orders. But the Uniform Law Conference has approved two uniform acts that have effectively minimized the problem of multiple court jurisdiction in child custody matters; the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act (UCCJA), approved in 1968, succeeded by the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (UCCJEA) [see Title 40, ch. 7], approved in 1997. The drafters of the UAGPPJA have elected to model Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] and portions of Article 1 [72-5-601 through 72-5-606] of their Act after these child custody analogues. However, the UAGPPJA applies only to adult proceedings. The UAGPPJA is limited to adults in part because most jurisdictional issues involving guardianships for minors are subsumed by the UCCJEA.

The Objectives and Key Concepts of the Proposed UAGPPJA

The UAGPPJA is organized into five articles. Article 1 [72-5-601 through 72-5-606] contains definitions and provisions designed to facilitate cooperation between courts in different states. Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] is the heart of the Act, specifying which court has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian or conservator or issue another type of protective order and contains definitions applicable only to that article. Its principal objective is to assure that an appointment or order is made or issued in only one state except in cases of emergency or in situations where the individual owns property located in multiple states. Article 3 [72-5-624 and 72-5-625] specifies a procedure for transferring a guardianship or conservatorship proceedings from one state to another state. Article 4 [72-5-629 through 72-5-631] deals with enforcement of guardianship and protective orders in other states. Article 5 [72-5-636 through 72-5-638] contains an effective date provision, a place to list provisions of existing law to be repealed or amended, and boilerplate provisions common to all uniform acts.

Key Definitions (Section 201) [72-5-611]

To determine which court has primary jurisdiction under the UAGPPJA, the key factors are to determine the individual's "home state" and "significant-connection state." A "home state" (Section 201(a)(2) [72-5-611(1)(b)]) is the state in which the individual was physically present, including any period of temporary absence, for at least six consecutive months immediately before the filing of a petition for a protective order or appointment of a guardian. If the respondent was not physically present in a single state for the six months immediately preceding the filing of the petition, the home state is the place where the respondent was last physically present for at least six months as long a[s] such presence ended within the six months prior to the filing of the petition. Section 201(a)(2) [72-5-611(1)(b)]. Stated another way, the ability of the home state to appoint a guardian or enter a protective order for an individual continues for up to six months following the individual's physical relocation to another state.

A "significant-connection state," which is a potentially broader concept, means the state in which the individual has a significant connection other than mere physical presence, and where substantial evidence concerning the individual is available. Section 201(a)(3) [72-5-611(1)(c)]. Factors that may be considered in deciding whether a particular respondent has a significant connection include:

the location of the respondent's family and others required to be notified of the guardianship or protective proceeding;

the length of time the respondent was at any time physically present in the state and the duration of any absences;

the location of the respondent's property; and the extent to which the respondent has other ties to the state such as voting registration, filing of state or local tax returns, vehicle registration, driver's license, social relationships, and receipt of services. Section 201(b) [72-5-611(2)].

A respondent in a guardianship or protective proceeding may have multiple significant-connection states but will have only one home state.

Jurisdiction (Article 2) [72-5-611 through 72-5-619]

Section 203 [72-5-613] is the principal provision governing jurisdiction, creating a three-level priority; the home state, followed by a significant-connection state, followed by other jurisdictions:

Home State: The home state has primary jurisdiction to appoint a guardian or conservator or issue another type of protective order.

Significant-connection State: A significant-connection state has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian or conservator or issue another type of protective order if on the date the petition was filed:

the respondent does not have a home state or the home state has declined jurisdiction on the basis that the significant-connection state is a more appropriate forum; or the respondent has a home state, a petition for an appointment or order is not pending in a court of that state or another significant-connection state, and, before the court makes the appointment or issues the order (i) a petition for an appointment or order is not filed in the respondent's home state; (ii) an objection to the court's jurisdiction is not filed by a person required to be notified of the proceeding; and (iii) the court in this state concludes that it is an appropriate forum under the factors set forth in Section 206 [72-5-616].

Another State: A court in another state has jurisdiction if the home state and all significant-connection states have declined jurisdiction because the court in the other state is a more appropriate forum, or the respondent does not have a home state or significant-connection state.

Section 204 [72-5-614] addresses special cases. Regardless of whether it has jurisdiction under the general principles stated in Section 203 [72-5-613], a court in the state where the respondent is currently physically present has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian in an emergency, and a court in a state where a respondent's real or tangible personal property is located has jurisdiction to appoint a conservator or issue another type of protective order with respect to that property. In addition, a court not otherwise having jurisdiction under Section 203 [72-5-613] has jurisdiction to consider a petition to accept the transfer of an already existing guardianship or conservatorship from another state as provided in Article 3 [72-5-624 and 72-5-625].

The remainder of Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] elaborates on these core concepts. Section 205 [72-5-615] provides that once a guardian or conservator is appointed or other protective order is issued, the court's jurisdiction continues until the proceeding is terminated or transferred or the appointment or order expires by its own terms. Section 206 [72-5-616] authorizes a court to decline jurisdiction if it determines that the court of another state is a more appropriate forum, and specifies the factors to be taken into account in making this determination. Section 207 [72-5-617] authorizes a court to decline jurisdiction or fashion another appropriate remedy if jurisdiction was acquired because of unjustifiable conduct. Section 208 [72-5-618] prescribes additional notice requirements if a proceeding is brought in a state other than the respondent's home state. Section 209 [72-5-619] specifies a procedure for resolving jurisdictional issues if petitions are pending in more than one state. The UAGPPJA also includes provisions regarding communication between courts in different states, requests for assistance made by a court to a court of another state, and the taking of testimony in another state. Sections 104-106 [72-5-604 through 72-5-606].

Transfer to Another State (Article 3) [72-5-624 and 72-5-625]

Article 3 [72-5-624 and 72-5-625] specifies a procedure for transferring an already existing guardianship or conservatorship to another state. To make the transfer, court orders are necessary from both the court transferring the case and from the court accepting the case. The transferring court must find that the incapacitated or protected person is physically present in or is reasonably expected to move permanently to the other state, that adequate arrangements have been made for the person or the person's property in the other state, and that the court is satisfied the case will be accepted by the court in the other state. To assure continuity, the court in the transferring state cannot dismiss the local proceeding until the order from the state accepting the case is filed with the transferring court. To expedite the transfer process, the court in the accepting state must give deference to the transferring court's finding of incapacity and selection of the guardian or conservator. Much of Article 3 [72-5-624 and 72-5-625] is based on the pioneering work of the National Probate Court Standards, a 1993 joint project of the National College of Probate Judges and the National Center for State Courts.

Out of State Enforcement (Article 4) [72-5-629 through 72-5-631]

To facilitate enforcement of guardianship and protective orders in other states, Article 4 [72-5-629 through 72-5-631] authorizes a guardian or conservator to register these orders in other states. Upon registration, the guardian or conservator may exercise in the registration state all powers authorized in the order except as prohibited by the laws of the registration state.

International Application (Section 103) [72-5-603]

Section 103 [72-5-603] addresses application of the Act to guardianship and protective orders issued in other countries. A foreign order is not enforceable pursuant to the registration procedures under Article 4 [72-5-629 through 72-5-631], but a court in the United State may otherwise apply the Act as if the foreign country were an American state.

The Problem of Differing Terminology

States differ on terminology for the person appointed by the court to handle the personal and financial affairs of a minor or incapacitated adult. Under the UGPPA and in a majority of American states, a "guardian" is appointed to make decisions regarding the person of an "incapacitated person;" a "conservator" is appointed in a "protective proceeding" to manage the property of a "protected person." But in many states, only a "guardian" is appointed, either a guardian of the person or guardian of the estate, and in a few states, the terms guardian and conservator are used but with different meanings. The UAGPPJA adopts the terminology used in the UGPPA and in a majority of the states. An enacting state that uses a different term than "guardian" or "conservator" for the person appointed by the court or that defines either of these terms differently than does the UGPPA may, but is not encouraged to, substitute its own term or definition. Use of common terms and definitions by states enacting the Act will facilitate resolution of cases involving multiple jurisdictions.

The Drafting Committee was assisted by numerous officially designated advisors and observers, representing an array of organizations. In addition to the American Bar Association advisors listed above, important contributions were made by Sally Hurme of AARP, Terry W. Hammond of the National Guardianship Association, Kathleen T. Whitehead and Shirley B. Whitenack of the National Academy of Elder Law Attorneys, Catherine Anne Seal of the Colorado Bar Association, Kay Farley of the National Center for State Courts, and Robert G. Spector, the Reporter for the Joint Editorial Board for Uniform Family Laws and the Reporter for the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction and Enforcement Act (1997).

ARTICLE 1 [72-5-601 through 72-5-606]

General Comment

Article 1 [72-5-601 through 72-5-606] contains definitions and general provisions used throughout the Act. Definitions applicable only to Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] are found in Section 201 [72-5-611]. Section 101 [72-5-601] is the title, Section 102 [72-5-602] contains the definitions, and Sections 103-106 [72-5-603 through 72-5-606] the general provisions. Section 103 [72-5-603] provides that a court of an enacting state may treat a foreign country as a state for the purpose of applying all portions of the Act other than Article 4 [72-5-629 through 72-5-631], Section 104 [72-5-604] addresses communication between courts, Section 105 [72-5-605] requests by a court to a court in another state for assistance, and Section 106 [72-5-606] the taking of testimony in other states. These Article 1 [72-5-601 through 72-5-606] provisions relating to court communication and assistance are essential tools to assure the effectiveness of the provisions of Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] determining jurisdiction and in facilitating transfer of a proceeding to another state as authorized in Article 3 [72-5-624 and 72-5-625].

ARTICLE 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619]
JURISDICTION
General Comment

The jurisdictional rules in Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] will determine which state's courts may appoint a guardian or conservator or issue another type of protective order. Section 201 [72-5-611] contains definitions of "emergency," "home state," and "significant-connection state," terms used only in Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] that are key to understanding the jurisdictional rules under the Act. Section 202 [72-5-612] provides that Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] is the exclusive jurisdictional basis for a court of the enacting state to appoint a guardian or issue a protective order for an adult. Consequently, Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] is applicable even if all of the respondent's significant contacts are in-state. Section 203 [72-5-613] is the principal provision governing jurisdiction, creating a three-level priority; the home state, followed by a significant-connection state, followed by other jurisdictions. But there are circumstances under Section 203 [72-5-613] where a significant-connection state may have jurisdiction even if the respondent also has a home state, or a state that is neither a home or significant-connection state may be able to assume jurisdiction even though the particular respondent has both a home state and one or more significant-connection states. One of these situations is if a state declines to exercise jurisdiction under Section 206 [72-5-616] because a court of that state concludes that a court of another state is a more appropriate forum. Another is Section 207 [72-5-617], which authorizes a court to decline jurisdiction or fashion another appropriate remedy if jurisdiction was acquired because of unjustifiable conduct. Section 205 [72-5-615] provides that once an appointment is made or order issued, the court's jurisdiction continues until the proceeding is terminated or the appointment or order expires by its own terms.

Section 204 [72-5-614] addresses special cases. Regardless of whether it has jurisdiction under the general principles stated in Section 203 [72-5-613], a court in the state where the individual is currently physically present has jurisdiction to appoint a guardian in an emergency, and a court in a state where an individual's real or tangible personal property is located has jurisdiction to appoint a conservator or issue another type of protective order with respect to that property. In addition, a court not otherwise having jurisdiction under Section 203 [72-5-613] has jurisdiction to consider a petition to accept the transfer of an already existing guardianship or conservatorship from another state as provided in Article 3 [72-5-624 and 72-5-625].

The remainder of Article 2 [72-5-611 through 72-5-619] address procedural issues. Section 208 [72-5-618] prescribes additional notice requirements if a proceeding is brought in a state other than the respondent's home state. Section 209 [72-5-619] specifies a procedure for resolving jurisdictional issues if petitions are pending in more than one state.

ARTICLE 3 [72-5-624 AND 72-5-625]
TRANSFER OF GUARDIANSHIP OR CONSERVATORSHIP
General Comment

While this article consists of two separate sections, they are part of one integrated procedure. Article 3 [72-5-624 and 72-5-625] authorizes a guardian or conservator to petition the court to transfer the guardianship or conservatorship proceeding to a court of another state. Such a transfer is often appropriate when the incapacitated or protected person has moved or has been placed in a facility in another state, making it impossible for the original court to adequately monitor the proceeding. Article 3 [72-5-624 and 72-5-625] authorizes a transfer of a guardianship, a conservatorship, or both. There is no requirement that both categories of proceeding be administered in the same state.

Section 301 [72-5-624] addresses procedures in the transferring state. Section 302 [72-5-625] addresses procedures in the accepting state.

A transfer begins with the filing of a petition by the guardian or conservator as provided in Section 301(a) [72-5-624(1)]. Notice of this petition must be given to the persons who would be entitled to notice were the petition a petition for an original appointment. Section 301(b) [72-5-624(2)]. A hearing on the petition is required only if requested or on the court's own motion. Section 301(c) [72-5-624(3)]. Assuming the court in the transferring state is satisfied that the grounds for transfer stated in Section 301(d) [72-5-624(4)] (guardianship) or 301(e) [72-5-624(5)] (conservatorship) have been met, one of which is that the court is satisfied that the court in the other state will accept the case, the court must issue a provisional order approving the transfer. The transferring court will not issue a final order dismissing the case until, as provided in Section 301(f) [72-5-624(6)], it receives a copy of the provisional order from the accepting court accepting the transferred proceeding.
